prove a special contract to pay him a particular amount recovers what may be considered to be the value of his work, in which case he is said to recover on a quantum meruit (see Craven Ellis v. Canons Ltd., 1936, 2 K. B. 403). As to when a plaintiff should base his claim on a special contract and when on a quantum meruit, see also Cutter v. Powell, 6 T. R. 320; 3 R. R. 185; and notes in Smith's Leading Cases thereunder.

A claim on a quantum meruit may be specially indorsed under R. S. C. Ord. III., r. 6 (Lagos v. Gunvaldt, 1910, 1 K. B. 41).

Quantum tenens domino ex homagio, tantum dominus tenenti ex domino debet præter solam reverentiam; mutua debet esse domini et homagii fidelitatis connexio. Co. Litt. 64.—(As much as the tenant by his homage owes to his lord, so much is the lord, by his lordship, indebted to the tenant, except reverence alone; the tie of dominion and of homage ought to be mutual.)

Quantum valebat (so much as it was worth). Where goods, etc., were delivered at no certain price, or for as much as they were worth in general, then quantum valebat lay, and the plaintiff was to aver them to be worth so much, as where the law obliged one to furnish another with goods or provisions, as an innkeeper to his guests, etc. Compare quantum meruit (supra).

Quarantine, or Quarantaine. 1. By Magna Charta, the widow shall not be distrained to marry afresh, if she choose to live without a husband, but she shall not, however, marry against the consent of the lord; and nothing shall be taken for assignment of her dower, but she shall remain in her husband's capital mansion-house for forty days after his death, during which time her dower shall be assigned. These forty days are called the widow's quarantine. Marriage during these forty days forfeits the dower. This right was enforced by writ of Quarantinâ habendâ. See 1 Steph. Com.

2. A quantity of land containing forty perches.—Leg. Hen. I., c. 16.

3. A regulation by which communication with persons, ships, or goods arriving from places infected with the plague, or other contagious disease, or liable thereto, is interdicted for a certain period. The term is derived from the Italian quaranta, forty; it being supposed, that if no infectious disease break out within forty days or six weeks, no further danger need be apprehended.

Quarantine regulations were embodied in the Quarantine Act, 1825, and kept up by the Public Health Act, 1875, but the Public Health Act, 1896, repealed the Act of 1825, and was amended by the Public Health Act, 1904, 'to enable regulations to be made' by the Local Government Board (now the Ministry of Health) after consultation with the Board of Trade 'for carrying into effect conventions with respect to the prevention of danger arising to public health from vessels, and the prevention of the conveyance of infection by means of vessels.' Both these Acts are now repealed and replaced by the Public Health Act, 1936, which sets up and incorporates port health authorities which are to be established by order of the Minister of Health with jurisdiction over all waters within the area to which the order relates and the whole or part of the district of any riparian authority specified in the Order with any functions, rights, liabilities of a local authority under that or any unrepealed enactment contained in the Public Health Acts, 1875 to 1932 (s. 3); by s. 4, port sanitary districts and authorities constituted under any Act passed before the Act of 1936 are to be known and styled port health districts and port health authorities. The first Sched. provides for medical officers of health and sanitary inspectors of port health districts: see also s. 143, ibid.

Quare clausum fregit (wherefore he broke the close). Trespass is of three kinds: (1) to the person; (2) to the goods; and (3) to the lands of the plaintiff. The action for the third kind of trespass is often termed trespass quare clausum fregit, from the language of the old writ, which commanded the defendant to show quare clausum querentis fregit why he broke the close of the plaintiff. — Steph. Com., bk. 5, chap. 7, s. 2. This was followed by the 'ac etiam' (q.v.).

Quare eject infra terminum (wherefore he ejected within the term), a writ which lay by the ancient law where the wrongdoer or ejector was not himself in possession of the lands, but another who claimed under him.

Quare impedit (wherefore he hindered), a real possessory action, which could formerly be brought only in the Court of Common Pleas, and lies to recover a presentation, when the patron's right is disturbed, or to try a disputed title to an advowson.

Previous to the passing of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1860, the action was commenced by an original writ issuing out of Chancery, but s. 26 of that Act did away with this singularity of procedure, which is now the same as in other actions in the High Court.

The judgment is that the successful party recover his presentation, and a writ issues to the bishop, commanding him to admit his presentee.

In cases where there is an appeal to the archbishop and a judge against a bishop's refusal to institute (see BENEFICE), quare impedit is abolished by s. 3 (5) of the Benefices Act, 1898.

Quare incumbravit, a writ which lay against a bishop, who, within six months after the vacation of a benefice, conferred it on his clerk, whilst two others were contending at law for the right of presentation, calling upon him to show cause why he had incumbered the church.—Reg. Brev. 32. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27.

Quare intrusit, a writ that formerly lay where the lord proffered a suitable marriage to his ward, who rejected it, and entered into the land, and married another, for the value of his marriage not being satisfied to the lord. Abolished by 12 Car. 2, c. 24.

Quare non permittit, an ancient writ, which lay for one who had a right to present to a church for a turn against the proprietary.—Fleta, l. 5, c. 6.

Quare obstruxit, a writ which lay for him who, having a liberty to pass through his neighbour's ground, could not enjoy his right because the owner had obstructed it.—Fleta, l. 4, c. 26.

Quarentena terræ, a furlong.—Co. Litt. 5 b.

Quarrel, a dispute, contest; also, an action real or personal.

Quarry. As any place, not being a mine in which persons work in getting slate, stone, coprolites or other minerals, quarries are comprised in the list of non-textile factories and workshops given in Part II. of Sched. VI. of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901. See FACTORY. They are also subjected to inspection under the Metalliferous Mines Acts by the Quarries Act, 1894. As to the fencing of Quarries, see Quarry (Fencing) Act, 1887; A.-G. v. Roe, 1915, 1 Ch. 235. The powers of the Secretary of State were transferred to the Board of Trade by 10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 50. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Mines and Quarries.'

Quart, the fourth part of a gallon. See Weights and Measures Act, 1878.

Quarter, a measure of eight bushels; twenty-eight pounds—the fourth part of a hundredweight; a length of four inches.

Quarter of a Year, ninety-one days.—Co. Litt. 135 b.

Quarter-days, the days which begin the four quarters of the year, viz., the 25th of March, or Lady-day; the 24th of June, or Midsummer-day; the 29th of September, or Michaelmas-day; and the 25th of December, or Christmas-day. The half-quarter days are February 8, May 9, August 11, and November 11. The Scottish quarter-days are February 2, May 15, August 1, and November 11. In Northern Ireland the quarter-days are the same as for England.

Quartering Traitors. The judgment for high treason, as prescribed by 54 Geo. 3, c. 146, s. 1, was that the head of the person after death by hanging should be severed from his body, and the body, divided into four quarters, should be disposed of as the sovereign should think fit; but this portion of the Act is repealed by the Forfeiture Act, 1870, s. 31.

Quarter-rating. The rating on only one-fourth part of the net annual value—a privilege enjoyed by owners of railways and other kinds of property under s. 211 of the Public Health Act, 1875. But now as to exemptions, total or otherwise, from rates in the case of agricultural, industrial and freight transport hereditaments, see the Rating and Valuation Acts, 1925 to 1932; Bailey v. Stoke on Trent Assessment Committee, etc., 1931, 1 K. B. 385; the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment Act, 1928, and Local Government Act, 1929, ss. 67-73).

Quarter Seal, the seal kept by the director of the Chancery in Scotland. It is in the shape and impression of the fourth part of the Great Seal; and is in the Scots statutes called the Testimonial of the Great Seal. Gifts of land from the Crown pass this seal in certain cases.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Quarter Sessions, the sittings of the whole body of the justices of the peace in a county, and of a recorder in a borough, having a separate court of quarter sessions, four times in each year, or oftener, to try certain indictable offences, and hear appeals from petty sessions. The holding of quarter sessions can be dispensed with or the time for holding them varied within certain limits by virtue of the Assizes and Quarter Sessions Act, 1908, as amended by the Crim. Justice Act, 1925; see ss. 18-23 and 1st Sched. Where by statute the decision of the Quarter Sessions is final, there is no power to state a case for the opinion of the High Court (Kydd v. Liverpool Watch Committee, 1908, A. C. 337). See SESSIONS OF THE PEACE.

Quarto die post, the fourth day inclusive after a return of a writ, and if a defendant appeared, then it was sufficient; but this practice was afterwards altered.—1 Tidd's Pr. 107.

Quash [cursum facere, Lat.; casser, Fr.], to overthrow or annul—Bracton; as to quash an indictment, or order of justices, or a poor-rate. See CERTIORARI.

Quasi. This word prefixed to a noun means that although the thing signified by the combination of 'quasi' with the noun does not comply in strictness with the definition of the noun, it shares its qualities, falls philosophically under the same head, and is best marked by its approximation thereto. The titles next following furnish examples.

Quasi-contract, an act which has not the strict form of a contract, but yet has the effect of it; an implied contract.

Quasi-entail. An estate pur autre vie may be granted, not only to a man and his heirs, but to a man and the heirs of his body, which is termed a quasi-entail; the interest so granted not being properly an estate-tail (for the statute De Donis applies only where the subject of the entail is an estate of inheritance), but yet so far in the nature of an estate-tail, that it will go to the heir of the body as special occupant during the life of the cestui que vie, in the same manner as an estate of inheritance would descend, if limited to the grantee and the heirs of his body. And such estate may also be granted with a remainder thereon during the life of the cestui que vie; and the alienation of the quasi tenant-in-tail will bar not only his issue, but those in remainder. The alienation, however, for that purpose (unlike that of an estate-tail, properly so called), might, before 1926, have been effected by any method of conveyance, except a will; after 1926, these estates became equitable interests only and may be devised or barred by will. See AUTRE VIE.

Quasi-fee, an estate gained by wrong; for wrong is unlimited and uncontained within rules.

Quasi-personalty, things which are movable in point of law, though fixed to things real, either actually, as emblements (fructus industriales), fixtures, etc.; or fictitiously, as chattels-real, leases for years, etc.

Quasi-realty, things which are fixed in contemplation of law to realty, but movable in themselves, as heirlooms (or limbs of the inheritance), title-deeds, court rolls, etc.

Quasi-trustee, a person who reaps a benefit from a breach of trust, and so becomes answerable as a trustee.—Levin on Trusts.

Quatuor maria, the four seas, which see.

Quatuorviri, magistrates who had the care and inspection of roads among the Romans.—Civ. Law.

Quays. As to erection of quays in or near to a public harbour, or river communicating therewith, see the Public Harbours Act, 1806 (46 Geo. 3, c. 153), amended by the Harbours Transfer Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 69), s. 15. See also the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 27).

By 9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 20, the general powers over quays were transferred to the Ministry of Transport; and see HARBOURS.

Queen [fr. cwēn, Sax., a wife], a woman who is sovereign of a kingdom. The queen regent, regnant, or sovereign is she who holds the Crown in her own right, and such queen of England has the same powers, prerogatives, rights, dignities, and duties as if she had been a king, the law being so expressly declared in 1554 by 1 Mary, sess. 3, c. 1. Consult Jac. Law Dict.

Queen Anne's Bounty. See BOUNTY OF QUEEN ANNE.

Queen Consort, the wife of the reigning King. She is a public person, exempt and distinct from the King, for she is of ability to purchase lands and to convey them, to make leases, to grant copyholds, and to do other acts of ownership, without the concurrence of her husband. She has separate courts and offices distinct from the King's, not only in matters of ceremony, but even of law; and her attorney and solicitor-general are entitled to a place within the bar of his Majesty's courts, together with the King's Counsel. She may likewise be sued and sue alone, without joining her husband; she is indeed considered as a feme sole, and not as a feme covert. See Co. Litt. 133 a; Jac. Law Dict.

Queen Dowager, the widow of a deceased king. She enjoys most of the privileges belonging to her as Queen Consort. (Ibid.)

Queen Gold. See AURUM REGINÆ.

Queen's Bench. See KING'S BENCH.

Queen's Bench Division. The jurisdiction of the Court of Queen's Bench was assigned, by s. 34 of the Jud. Act, 1873, to the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice; and by Order in Council under s. 32 of the same Act, the Common Pleas and Exchequer Divisions were, in February 1881, merged in the same 'Queen's Bench Division,' which began to be styled, after the death of the late Queen Victoria in January, 1901, the 'King's Bench Division.' As to assignment of business to, see Jud. Act, 1925, s. 56 (2).

Queen's Coroner and Attorney, an officer on the Crown side of the Queen's Bench (6 & 7 Vict. c. 20), who by the Judicature (Officers) Act, 1879, became a 'Master of the Supreme Court.'

Queen's Counsel (abbreviated Q.C.). See KING'S COUNSEL (abbreviated K.C.). All Queen's Counsel at the death of the late Queen Victoria became King's Counsel without any new appointment.

Queen's Remembrancer, an officer on the revenue side of the Court of Exchequer. See the Queen's Remembrancer Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 21), and the Crown Suits Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 104). He became an officer of the Supreme Court by the Jud. Act, 1873, s. 77.

Que estate [quorum statum, Lat.], as much as to say, whose estate he has. Where prescriptive rights are claimed by reason of the continuous and immemorial enjoyment thereof by the claimant, a person seised in fee, and by all those whose estate he has, this is called a prescription in a que estate. The phrase is taken from the Norman-French: that he, and all those whose estate he has, have from time immemorial enjoyed the right—tous ceux que estate il ad.—Williams on Rights of Common, p. 16. A person cannot prescribe in anything by a que estate that lies in grant, and cannot pass without deed or fine; but in him and his ancestors he may, because he comes in by descent without any conveyance.—Co. Litt. 121 a; 2 Bl. Com. 264; 2 Br. & Had. Com. 419. A prescription in a que estate for a profit à prendre in alieno solo without stint and for commercial purposes is unknown to the law (Harris v. Chesterfield (Earl), 1911, A. C. 623). See PRESCRIPTION.

Que est le mesme [quæ est eadem, Lat.], a term used in actions of trespass, etc., for a direct justification of the very act complained of by the plaintiff as a wrong. See QUÆ EST EADEM.

Quem redditum reddit, a judicial writ which lay for him to whom a rent-seck or rent-charge was granted, by fine levied in the King's Court, against the tenant of the land who refused to attorn to him, thereby to cause him to attorn.—Old N. B. 126.

Querela, an action or declaration preferred in any court of justice. See DUPLEX QUERELA and AUDITA QUERELA.

Querela coram rege a concilio discutienda et terminanda, a writ by which one is called to justify a complaint of a trespass made to the King himself, before the King and his council.—Reg. Brev. 124.

Querela, a complaint to a court.

Querent [fr. querens, Lat.], a plaintiff, complainant, inquirer.

Quest, inquest, inquisition, or inquiry.

Question, interrogatory; anything inquired. 'Putting to the question,' i.e., torture.

Questions of Fact might be stated in an issue without pleadings by consent (C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 42), and may now be so stated under R. S. C. Ord. XXXIV., r. 9.

In general when a jury is sworn it decides all the issues of fact; but if there arise in the course of the trial a question of fact preliminary to the decision of a point of law, etc., e.g., the genuineness of a document as necessary to its being admitted in evidence, that question of fact must be decided by the judge.

So in questions as to the competence of a witness to be sworn. See VOIR DIRE; WITNESS; OATH.

The law of a foreign country is a question of fact. See FOREIGN LAW.

Questions of Law. See last title. See also JUDGMENT; SPECIAL CASE; and TRIAL.

Questman, or Questmonger, starter of lawsuits or prosecutions; also a person chosen to inquire into abuses, especially such as relate to weights and measures; also a churchwarden.—See Prid. Churchwarden's Guide.

Questus, land which does not descend by hereditary right, but is acquired by one's own labour and industry. See PURCHASE.

Questus est nobis, a writ of nuisance which, by 15 Edw. 1, lay against him to whom a house or other thing that caused a nuisance descended or was alienated; whereas before that statute the action lay only against him who first levied or caused the nuisance to the damage of his neighbour.

Quia Emptores, Statute of (18 Edw. 1, st. 1, c. 1), A.D. 1290, West. the Third. It is entitled in the Parliament-roll, from the subject of it, statutum regis de terris vendendis et emendis. Prior to this statute any person might, by a grant of land, have created a tenure as of his person; but if no such tenure were reserved, the feoffee held of the feoffor by the same services by which the feoffor held of his superior lord. The consequence was, that all the fruits of tenure fell into the hands of the feoffors or mesne lords, to the prejudice of the superior lords of the fee; for remedy whereof it was by this statute enacted: 'That thenceforth it shall be lawful to every freeman to sell at his own pleasure his lands and tenements, or part of them, so that the feoffee shall hold the same lands or tenements of the chief lord of the same fee, by such service and customs as his feoffor held before.—2 Inst. 500 ; 2 Reeves, c. 11, p. 223.

Quia improvide emanavit (because it issued mistakenly). A supersedeas to quash and nullify a writ erroneously issued.

Qui aliquid statuerit parte inaudita alterâ, æquum licet dixerit, haud æquum fecerit. 6 Co. 52.—(He who decides anything, one party being unheard, though he should decide right, does wrong.) See AUDI ALTERAM PARTEM.

Qui alterius jure utitur eodem jure uti debet. Pothier, Tr. de Change, pt. 1, ch. 4, art. 5, s. 114 ; Broom's Leg. Max.—(He who is clothed with the right of another ought to be clothed with the very same right.)

Quia Timet Bill, a bill filed for the purpose of quieting a present apprehension of a probable future injury to property. In order to succeed in a quia timet action the plaintiff must prove imminent danger of a substantial kind, or that the apprehended injury, if it does come, will be irreparable (Fletcher v. Bealey, (1885) 28 Ch. D. 688 ; and Colls v. Home and Colonial Stores, 1904, A. C. 179).

Qui concedit aliquid, concedere videtur et id sine quo concessio est irrita, sine quo res ipsa esse non potuit. 11 Co. 52.—(He who conceded anything is considered as conceding that without which his concession would be void, without which the thing itself could not exist)

Quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit. Off. of Exec. 47.—(Whatever is affixed to the soil, belongs to the soil.) Therefore, if A. builds on B.'s land, the building becomes the property of B. See FIXTURES.

Quicquid solvitur, solvitur secundum modum solventis. 2 Vern. 606.—(Whatever is paid is paid according to the direction of the payer.) See APPROPRIATION OF PAYMENTS.

Quid Juris clamat, a judicial writ issued out of the record of a fine, which remained with the custos brevium of the Common Pleas before it was engrossed : it lay for the grantee of a reversion or a remainder, when the particular tenant would not attain.—Reg. Jud. 571.

Quid pro quo (what for what), the mutual consideration and performance of both parties to a contract.

Quietare, to quit, acquit, discharge, or save harmless.

Quiete clamare, to quit claim, or renounce all pretensions of right and title.—Bract. l. 5.

Quiet Enjoyment. A qualified covenant for quiet enjoyment is usually inserted in leases and excludes the implied covenant, which is far more extensive. For the implied covenant may guarantee the lessee against any lawful entry whatever, whereas the express covenant, as usually worded, guarantees the lessee only against entry by the lessor or persons 'claiming by, from, or under him,' so that a lessor having no title to the demised premises may safely enter into the qualified covenant for quiet enjoyment, for an ejectionment of the lessee by the real owner would not be an ejectionment by a person claiming by the lessor, but against him. See Woodfall, L. & T., and Baynes v. Lloyd, 1895, 2 Q. B. 610 ; Jones v. Lavington, 1903, 1 K. B. 253.

A covenant for quiet enjoyment is implied by virtue of s. 7 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, reproduced under ss. 76 and 77 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, Sched. 2, Parts 1, 2, in any conveyance for value made after the commencement of that Act by a person conveying and expressed to convey 'as beneficial owner.' The section is to the effect that notwithstanding anything by the person who so conveys or any one through whom he derives title otherwise than by purchase for value made, done, executed or omitted or knowingly suffered the subject-matter of the conveyance shall remain to and be quietly entered upon, received and held, occupied, enjoyed, and taken by the person to whom the conveyance is expressed to be made, and any person deriving title under him and the benefit thereof shall be received and taken accordingly, without any lawful interruption or disturbance by the person who so conveys or any person conveying by his direction, or by, through, or under any one not being a person claiming in respect of an estate or interest subject whereto the conveyance is expressly made, through whom the person who so conveys derives title, otherwise than by purchase for value.

See David v. Sabin, 1893, 1 Ch. 523.

Quietus, freed or acquitted ; discharged of all further liability ; see, e.g., Ex parte Pullman, (1890) 45 Ch. D. p. 466. A word made use of in the Exchequer in the discharge given to accountants to the Crown, e.g., a sheriff. As to the registration of a quietus, see 2 Vict. c. 11, s. 9 ; Obs. in England. As to entry of an acknowledgment by satisfaction or discharge of a writ or order registered at the Land Registry, see Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 6 (6).

Quietus redditus, a quit-rent.

Qui ex damnato coitu nascuntur Inter liberos non computantur.—(Those who are born of a criminal connection are not to be counted among children.) Co. Litt. 8 a ;

Bract. l. 1, c. 6, s. 7; Steph. Com. vol. i. bk. ii. pt. i., at p. 249. See BASTARD.

Qui facit per alium facit per se. Co. Litt. 258.—(He who acts through another, acts through himself.) See AGENT.

Qui hæret in literâ hæret in cortice. Co. Litt. 283 b.—(He who considers merely the letter of an instrument goes but skin-deep into its meaning.) Broom's Leg. Max.

Qui jussu judicis aliquid fecerit non videtur dolo malo fecisse, quia parere necesse est. 10 Rep. 76.—(He who does an act by command of a judge is not considered to act from a wrongful motive, because it is his duty to obey.) See Broom's Leg. Max.

Quilibet potest [or Cuilibet licet] renunciare juri pro se introducto. 2 Inst. 183; Co. Litt. 99 a.—(Every man can renounce a right introduced for his own benefit.) See WAIVER.
Quillet, a quibble.

Quinquepartite, consisting of five parts.

Quinque Portus. See CINQUE PORTS.

Quinsteme, or Quinzime, fifteenths, temporary aids issuing out of personal property, and granted to the King by Parliament.—1 Bl. Com. 309. Also the fifteenth day after a festival.—13 Edw. 1.

Quintal, or Kintal, a weight of 100 lbs.

Quinto exactus, the fifth or last call or requisition of a defendant sued to outlawry. See Cowel, voce 'Quint-exact.'

Qui peccat ebrius, luat sobrius. Cary's Rep. 133.—(Let him who sins when drunk be punished when sober.)

Qui prior est tempore potior est jure. Co. Litt. 14 a.—(He who is first in time is better in law.) Broom's Leg. Max. Equitable incumbrances rank as a rule according to their dates; the first grantee is potior, that is, potentior; he has a better and superior, because a prior, equity (Phillips v. Phillips, (1862) 4 De G. F. & J. 215). But the acquisition of the legal estate may make a most material alteration in the rights of the parties (Bailey v. Barnes, 1894, 1 Ch. 25), and the application of the rule in Dearle v. Hall, to land by s. 137 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, has lessened the importance of the maxim. See PRIORITIES.

Qui sentit commodum, sentire debet et onus; et è contra. 2 Inst. 489.—(He who receives the advantage, ought also to suffer the burthen; and the converse also holds.) Similarly, Secundum naturam est, commodum cujusque rei eum sequi, quem sequuntur incommoda. D. 50, 7, 10.—(It is natural that the advantages of anything should follow him whom the disadvantages follow.) Broom's Leg. Max.

Qui tam (who as well), a popular action (i.e. one which any one may bring) on a penal statute (q.v.) which is partly at the suit of the King and partly at that of an informer; so called from the words 'Qui tam pro domino rege, quam pro se ipso, sequitur.'

As to the power of the Crown to remit these penalties, see Remission of Penalties Act, 1859, and in respect of Sunday entertainments, the Remission of Penalties Act, 1875. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Penal Actions'; and as to compounding (by leave of the Court) see R. S. C, Ord. L., rr. 13-15.

Quit Claim, a quitting of one's action, claim, or title.

Quit Rent (quietus redditus), a rent payable to the lord by a freeholder or ancient copyholder of a manor, so called because thereby the tenant goes quit and free of all other services.—2 Bl. Com. 42. As no manor has been created since the statute Quia Emptores (see MANOR; QUIA EMPTORES), every quit rent must have become first payable at a date prior to that statute.

A quit rent may be 'redeemed' by the owner of the land subject thereto, under s. 45 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, reproduced by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 191. As to the remedies for non-payment, see s. 121 and ibid.

Quittance, an abbreviation of acquittance, a release (q.v.); see Re Northumberland (Duke) and Tynemouth Corporation, 1909, 2 K. B. 374.

Quod hoc (as to this).

Quo animo (with what mind).

Quod approbo non reprobo.—(That which I approve I do not reject.) In other words, if one take a benefit under a deed or will, he must perform any condition attached to it.

Quod clerici beneficiati de cancellaria, etc., a writ to exempt a clerk of the Chancery from the contribution towards the proctors of the clergy in Parliament, etc.—Reg. Brev. 261.

Quod clerici non eligantur in officio ballivi, etc., a writ which lay for a clerk, who, by reason of some land he had, was made, or was about to be made, bailiff, beadle, reeve, or some such officer, to obtain exemption from serving the office.—Reg. Brev. 187.

Quod computet, an interlocutory judgment or decree in a matter of account. See now ACCOUNT.

Quod constat curiæ opere testium non indiget. 2 Inst. 662.—(What is manifest to the Court needs not the help of witnesses.) See JUDICIAL NOTICE.

Quod cum (that whereas).

Quod ei deforceat, a writ for a tenant-in-tail, tenant-in-dower, by the courtesy, or for term of life, having lost any land by default, against him who recovers, or his heir.—Reg. Brev. 171.

Quod fieri non debet factum valet. 5 Co. 38.—(What ought not to be done is valid when done.) As to the cases in which this principle is applicable, see Broom's Leg. Max.

Quod non habet principium non habet finem. Wing. Mar. 79; Co. Litt. 345 a.—(That which has not beginning has not end.) For illustrations of this maxim see Broom's Leg. Max.

Quod nullus est, est domini regis. Fleta, l. iii.—(That which is the property of nobody belongs to our lord the King.) See ESCHEAT.

Quod nullus est, id ratione naturalium occupanti conceditur. Pand. l. xli.—(What belongs to nobody is given to the occupant by natural right.) See FINDER.

Quod permittat, a writ which, before the abolition of real actions, lay against any person who erected a building, though on his own ground, so near to the house of another that it hung over or became a nuisance to it.—Termes de la Ley, 479. Abolished. See Roscoe on Real Actions, p. 40.

Quod permittat prosternere, a writ, in the nature of a writ of right, to abate a nuisance.—Fitz. N. B. 104. Abolished.

Quod per recordum probatum, non debet esse negatum.—(What is proved by record ought not to be denied.) See RECORD.

Quod persona nec prebendarii, etc., a writ which lay for spiritual persons distrained in their spiritual possessions for payment of a fifteenth with the rest of the parish.—Fitz. N. B. 175. Obsolete.

Quod recuperet [Lat.] (that he do recover [the debt or damages]), a final judgment for a plaintiff in a personal action.

Quod semel placuit in electionibus amplius displicere non potest. Co. Litt. 146 a. (When choice is once made, it cannot be disapproved any longer.)

Quo jure, a writ which lay for him who had land wherein another challenged common of pasture, time out of mind; and it was to compel him to show by what title he challenged it.—Fitz. N. B. 158.

Quo ligatur, eo dissolvitur. 2 Rol. Rep. 21.—(By the same mode by which a thing is bound, by that it is released.) Similarly, Quo modo quid constituitur, eodem modo dissolvitur. Jenk. Cent. 74.—(In the same manner by which anything is constituted, by that it is dissolved.) See REVOCATION; DEED.

Quo minus, a writ which lay for him who had a grant of house-bote and hay-bote in another's woods against the grantor making such waste whereby the grantee could the less enjoy his grant.—Old N. B. 148.

It also lay for the King's accountant in the Exchequer against any person against whom he had a right of action, and was called a quo minus because in it the plaintiff suggested that he was the King's farmer or debtor, and that the defendant had done him the injury or damage complained of; quo minus sufficiens existit, by which he is less able to pay the King his debt or rent; see 3 Bl. Com. 45. Afterwards this suggestion of being debtor to the King was allowed to be inserted by any plaintiff who wished to proceed in that Court against any defendant, as a mere matter of form, and in this way the Court of Exchequer obtained a jurisdiction co-extensive with that of the Common Pleas in actions personal. The writ of quo minus was abolished by 2 Wm. 4, c. 39.

Quoniam attachamenta, one of the oldest books of the Scotch law, so called from the first words of the volume. See Erskine, l. 1, tit. 1, s. 36.

Quorum (of whom), the number of members of an administrative or judicial body whose presence is necessary for the acts of the body to be valid; e.g., of a County Borough Licensing Committee, which consists of not less than seven members, the quorum is three members.—Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, s. 3. The term is derived from the 'justices of the quorum.' See JUSTICES, and the General Index to Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Quorum.'

Quot, one-twentieth part of the movable estate of a person dying in Scotland. anciently due to the bishop of the diocese wherein he had resided.

Quota, the proportion of a contribution. See, e.g., Militia Act, 1882, s. 37; Land Tax Act, 1797, s. 2.

Under the Cinematograph Films Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 29), the proportion in length of British films which renters and exhibitors respectively are obliged to include in any one year up to the end of March, 1938, for renting or exhibiting films in that year. In 1937 and 1938 the proportion in either case is 20 per cent. In coal mines, district schemes under Coal Mines Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 34), as amended, e.g., by S. R. & O., 1934, Nos. 677 and 766; and 1935, Nos. 696 and 697; the proportion of the standard tonnage which each of the coal mines in the district is to be allowed to produce under the scheme as provided by s. 3, ibid.; and see the Wheat Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 24), s. 3, as to quota payments.

Quo warranto, a writ issuable out of the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, in the nature of a writ of right for the Crown against him who claims or usurps any office, franchise, or liberty to inquire 'by what authority' he supports his claim, in order to determine the right. It lies also in case of non-user or long neglect of a franchise, or mis-user or abuse of it, whereby it is forfeited.

This proceeding was, until 1872, the one generally adopted for the purpose of trying the right to be elected to municipal offices, but the Corrupt Practices (Municipal Elections) Act, 1872, by s. 12, replaced by the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, s. 87 (see now s. 71 of the Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51)), substituted an election petition in the cases where an election is sought to be questioned on the ground of bribery, etc., disqualification, or undue return. By s. 84 of the Act of 1933, proceedings must be instituted within six months. See also Crown Office Rules, 1906, rr. 40-43.

As to procedure on quo warranto generally, see Crown Office Rules, 1906, rr. 43-48 and 123, 124. An application in the nature of quo warranto must be made by counsel; it cannot be made by an applicant in person (Re a Solicitor, 1903, 2 K. B. 205).

If the defendant be adjudged guilty of an intrusion or usurpation, the Court may give judgment of ouster against him, fine him, and order him to pay costs to the relator. See Com. Dig., tit. 'Quo warranto'; Shortt and Mellor's Crown Office Practice; Corner's Crown Practice.

Q. V. (quod vide), used to refer a reader to the word, chapter, etc., the name of which it immediately follows.

R.

Rabbit, also termed 'coney' in the Game Act, 1831, ss. 30-32 of which render trespass in the daytime in pursuit of conies punishable on summary conviction by fine up to 2*l*; trespassers may be required to quit the land and to tell their names and abodes on pain of arrest on refusal, and similar trespass with violence by five or more armed persons is punishable by fine up to 5*l*. By the Night Poaching Act, 1828, s. 1, unlawfully taking or destroying game or rabbits by night is punishable on summary conviction by imprisonment up to three months with hard labour (with increased punishments for second or third offences); and by s. 9 of the same Act, armed persons to the number of three or more unlawfully entering land for the purpose of destroying game or rabbits are punishable after conviction on indictment by penal servitude up to ten years or imprisonment with hard labour up to three years.

A tenant may shoot rabbits on his farm, although the right of sporting is reserved to the landlord: see Ground Game Act, 1880, ante, title GROUND GAME. The Forestry Act, 1919, s. 4, empowers the Commissioners to enter land and to destroy rabbits, hares, or vermin in order to protect trees or tree plants after notice to the occupier of the land and his failure to prevent such damage. See Aggs on Agricultural Holdings; and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Game'.

Rabies, madness. As to destruction of mad dogs in the metropolis by magistrate's order, see Traffic Regulations (London) Act (30 & 31 Vict. c. 134, s. 8). Under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, s. 61, the metropolitan police may destroy any dog or animal reasonably suspected to be in a rabid state or to have been bitten by a dog or animal in a rabid state. As to muzzling orders, see Acts referred to under tit. ANIMAL (Diseases).

Rabula [Lat.], a wrangling advocate, pettifogger; a classical though not a common term; see Law Quarterly Review, vol. xxx. p. 167.

Racecourse. By the Racecourse Licensing Act, 1879, no metropolitan suburban racecourse (i.e., no racecourse within ten miles of Charing Cross) is allowed without an annual licence from the justices of the peace, which may be granted at any Michaelmas Quarter Sessions. The Racecourse Betting Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 41), legalizes the use of totalisators on certain racecourses.

The Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934, amends the law as regards totalisators on horse racecourses, and prohibits betting on tracks with young persons, i.e., under eighteen years old. Regarding dog racing, see DOG RACING.

Racecourse Betting Control Board. A board appointed under Racecourse Betting Act, 1928, for the control of totalisators on approved racecourses. It consists of a chairman appointed by the Home Secretary, and eleven members, one of whom is appointed by the Home Secretary, one by the Secretary of State for Scotland, and one by the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries; one by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the remainder by certain racing organizations. The Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934, s. 18, amends the powers of the Board and interprets certain sections which give rise to doubts. This power of authorizing a person to set up a totalisator is limited to giving such authority to the persons having the management of the racecourse.

Rachetum [fr. redimo, Lat.], the compensation or redemption of a thief.

Rack, an engine of torture, said not to have been used in England since 1640. See TORTURE.

Rack-rent, rent raised to the uttermost; the full annual benefit of the property; in the Public Health Act, 1936, s. 334, in relation to any property, means a rent which is not less than two-thirds of the rent at which a house or other property might reasonably be expected to let from year to year, free from all usual tenant's rates and taxes and tithe rentcharge (if any), and deducting therefrom the probable average annual cost of the repairs, insurance and other expenses (if any) necessary to maintain the same in a state to command such rent.

Rack-vintage, a second vintage, wines drawn from the lees.

Radour [Fr.], a term including the repairs made to a ship, and a fresh supply of furniture and victuals, munitions, and other provisions, required for the voyage.—Bouvier's Law Dict.

Raffles. Selling any houses, plate, jewels, ships, goods, or other things by way of lottery or by lots, tickets, numbers or figures, was penalized by s. 36 of the Lottery Act, 1721, of which Act all but ss. 36 and 37 was repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1867, and ss. 36 and 37 have also been repealed by the Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 58), Part II. of which deals with lotteries, and the sale and distribution of tickets; there are exemptions for small lotteries incidental to certain entertainments (s. 23); private lotteries in certain cases (s. 24); and lotteries of art unions under the Art Unions Act, 1846, which Act is amended by s. 25. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Games and Gaming,' and see ART UNIONS and LOTTERY.

Rageman [fr. regimen, Lat.], a rule, form, or precedent.

Rag Flock. See the Rag Flock Act, 1911

(1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 52), an Act to prohibit the sale and use for the purpose of the manufacture of certain articles of unclean flock manufactured from rags. As to the meaning of 'rags,' see Cooper v. Swift, 1914, 1 K. B. 253; Balmforth v. Chadburn, 1927, 1 K. B. 663 (ragflock includes new material); and for further decisions on the Act, see Guildford Corporation v. Brown, 1915, 1 K. B. 256; Cooper v. Evan Cook's Depositories, ibid. 344.

Ragged Schools were exempted from poor and other rates by the Sunday and Ragged Schools Rating (Exemption from Rating) Act, 1869, in which a 'ragged school' means:

any school used for the gratuitous education of children and young persons of the poorest classes, and for the holding of classes and meetings in furtherance of the same object, and without any pecuniary benefit being derived therefrom except to the teacher or teachers employed.

The Act also gives the same advantage to Sunday-schools, i.e., schools giving religious instruction to the young without deriving pecuniary profit. Ragged schools have ceased to exist since the establishment of free State education. See EDUCATION.

Raglorious, a steward.—Seld. Tit. of Hon. 597.

Ragman's-roll, or Ragimund's-roll, a roll, called from one Ragimund, or Ragimund, a legate in Scotland, who, summoning all the benefited clergymen in that kingdom, caused them on oath to give in the true value of their benefices, according to which they were afterwards taxed by the Court of Rome.

The term Ragman's-toll also means the list of the barons and men of note who subscribed the submission to Edward I. in 1296, and which was delivered up to the Scots in 1328 (Scott's History of Scotland, vol. i. p. 162).

Railway. A road owned by a private person or public company on which carriages run over iron rails; if the road is a public highway, that part of it on which the rails are laid is called a tramway. Every railway in this country (except a few private railways running through land owned by the owner of the railway) is constructed and managed (1) under a local and personal Act of Parliament; and (2) under the Companies Clauses, Lands Clauses, and Railways Clauses Consolidation Acts; and (3) under the general Acts relating to railways. The Railway Act, 1921, provides for the reorganization of almost all the railways in England.

Railway Companies as Carriers.—The powers of railway companies as carriers are given by the 86th section of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and controlled by the Railway and Canal Traffic Acts of 1854, 1873, and 1888. The Act of 1845, s. 86, enacts that :—

It shall be lawful for the company [authorized (see s. 3) by the special Act to construct the railway] to use and employ locomotive engines or other moving power, and carriages and waggons to be drawn or propelled thereby, and to carry and convey upon the railway all such passengers and goods as shall be offered to them for that purpose, and to make such reasonable charges in respect thereof as they may from time to time determine upon, not exceeding the tolls by the special Act authorized to be taken by them.

The section is permissive only (Johnson v. Midland Ry. Co., (1849) 18 L. J. Ex. 366); but the Railway Commissioners may compel a company to act as carriers; and some special Acts, e.g., that of the Great Northern Railway Company and that of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company (see Lancashire and Yorkshire Co. v. Gidlow, L. R. 7 H. L. 517), compel companies to provide locomotive power, etc. Sections 92 and 108 of the Act of 1845 make railways public highways, s. 92 enacting that 'upon payment of the tolls from time to time demandable, all companies and persons shall be entitled to use the railway, with engines and carriages properly constructed,' etc., but this right will not be enforced by mandatory injunction (Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co. v. Taff Vale Ry. Co., (1874) L. R. 9 Ch. 331).

The powers of railway companies to charge for conveyance and carriage are specified in the various toll clauses of their special Acts, which are very imperfect. So far as 'merchandise traffic,' i.e., the traffic in goods and animals, is concerned, the 24th section of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, obliged all the companies to submit to the Board of Trade a 'revised classification of the traffic, and a revised schedule of maximum rates and charges applicable thereto,' with the view to their eventual embodiment in Acts of Parliament. Numerous Acts have been passed regulating these rates and charges. See RAILWAY RATES TRIBUNAL.

Passenger Fares.—The maximum fares for passengers have been but little revised since their first authorization by the special Acts authorizing the construction of the railways to which they are applicable. For tables of authorized maximum charges, see Hodges on Railways. The publication of fares at every station 'in a conspicuous place in the booking office' is enjoined on the companies by s. 15 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868, without any special penalty for non-compliance; and the printing upon every passenger ticket 'the fare chargeable for the journey for which such ticket is issued,' on pain of fine up to 40s. for every ticket issued without bearing the fare on its face, by s. 6 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1889. Travelling without fare and with intent to avoid payment is punishable by fine up to 40s., or in the case of a second conviction either by a fine not exceeding 20l., or in the discretion of the Court by imprisonment for a term not exceeding one month.

Government Purchase and Revision of Tolls.

—Since 1845 a clause has been inserted in every special railway Act to save the future parliamentary revision of the maximum rates and charges, and the Railway Regulation Act, 1844, authorized, after the expiration of twenty-one years from the passing of any construction Act, both Treasury Revision on three years' dividends exceeding 10 per cent., and Treasury Purchase whatever might be the rate of dividend; but 2,000 miles of railway are excluded from this Act as having been constructed before its date.

Accounts and Returns.—As to the accounts and returns which have to be made yearly to the Ministry of Transport, see the Railway Companies (Accounts and Returns) Act, 1911, as amended, and Railways Act, 1921, s. 8.

As to the protection of rolling stock from distress and execution, see ROLLING STOCK.

Electrical Power.—The Railways (Electrical Power) Act, 1903, as amended, 'facilitates the introduction and use of electrical power on railways,' and empowers the Minister of Transport to make Orders for those purposes, including the supply of electrical power and plant. The Orders may authorize the acquisition of land, but an order authorizing such acquisition compulsorily will require confirmation by Act of Parliament, and before making any order the Minister of Transport must be satisfied that public notice of the application for it has been given, and must consider any objections by 'the council of any county, any local authority, or other person,' and give to those by whom the objection is made an opportunity of being heard, with the view of declining to make the order or of so modifying it as to remove the objection if the Board decide that the objection should be upheld.

Independent powers of the companies are expressly saved ; and the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, which applies to the vast majority of the lines, empowers every company to which it applies 'to use and employ locomotive engines or other moving power, and carriages and wagons to be drawn or propelled thereby.'

Mails. As to conveyance of mails, see Railways (Conveyance of Mails) Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 98), and Conveyance of Mails Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 38). As to the reorganization of the railway system, see the Railway Act, 1921, especially s. 1 and Sched. I. For the general law relating to railways, consult Browne and Theobald on Railways; see also Leslie on Transport and Disney on Carriage by Railway.

As to derating of railways, see Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5. c. 44), which provided schemes for relieving industry and freight carrying concerns of three-fourths of the burden of rates. See QUARTER-RATING and RATES, and Railways (Valuation for Rating) Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5. c. 24), ss. 9 and 11.

Railway and Canal Commission. a body established by the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, to supersede the Railway Commissioners, who had been appointed under the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 48), with all the jurisdiction conferred by s. 3 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (see infra), on the several courts and judges empowered to hear and determine complaints under that Act, and exercise their jurisdiction with enlarged powers, and consisting of two appointed (one to be of experience in railway business) and three ex-officio commissioners: one for England, one for Scotland, and one for Ireland, bring each of them a judge of a superior Court in England, Scotland, or Ireland respectively, and not required to attend out of the part of the United Kingdom for which he is appointed. The ex-officio commissioner presides at the sittings, and his opinion upon any question of law prevails. As to appeal to 'superior Court of Appeal,' see ss. 17 and 55 of the Act of 1888.

The jurisdiction of the Commission has been curtailed by Part II. of the Railway Act, 1921, which established the Railway Rates Tribunal (q.v.). See also the Railway and Canal Commission Rules, 1924, No. 1400, as amended by 1932, No. 802.

The Commission also has power to determine differences relating to telegraphs, by virtue of the Telegraph (Arbitration) Act, 1909, if the parties agree to such reference.

Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, an Act by ss. 2 and 3 of which the Courts of Common Pleas in England and Ireland and the Court of Session in Scotland were empowered to compel railway and canal companies (1) to grant reasonable facilities for the receiving, forwarding, and delivering their own traffic; (2) to abstain from giving an undue preference to any particular person or traffic; and (3) to forward traffic without delay in cases of continuous communication. The object of the Act, which was amended in 1873 and 1888, was to ensure freedom and economy of transit from one end of the kingdom to the other. The law has been further amended by the Railway and Canal Traffic Acts, 1894 and 1912, and Railways Act, 1921. See last title, and RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS.

Railway Fires Act. See ENGINE.

Railway Passengers, Endangering, punishable under the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, ss. 32-34, and the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, ss. 35-38.

Railway Rates Tribunal. A tribunal established by the Railways Act, 1921, ss. 20 et seq., which is composed, either with or without other assistance, of one person experienced in commercial affairs, one experienced in railway business, and the president, who shall be an experienced 'lawyer.' The jurisdiction of the tribunal is dealt with by ss. 27 and 28, which transfer to it some of the powers exercised by the Railway and Canal Commission in addition to granting new powers (Road and Rail Traffic Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5. c. 53), Part II., ss. 37 et seq.). Its authority does not extend to Ireland. See also Railway Rates Tribunal Rules, 1922, No. 906.

Railway Rolling Stock Protection Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 50), protects from distress by a landlord rolling stock not being the property of the tenant. The Railway Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 127), s. 4, and the Railway Companies (Scotland) Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 126), s. 4, protect all rolling stock from execution.

Railway Securities Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 108), as amended. Enacted shortly after the 'Redpath Frauds' for the greater protection of persons lending money to railway companies upon debentures, etc., and providing that each loan shall be specifically certified by an accountable officer to be within the borrowing powers of the company.

Railways Amalgamation Tribunal. A temporary court of record established under the Railways Act, 1921, to deal with the amalgamation of railways under the Act.

Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), and Railways Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 92). These Acts contain general provisions as to the construction and management of railways, and were passed for the purposes of (1) avoiding the necessity of repeating such provisions in the special Acts by which each railway company is incorporated; and (2) securing uniformity in the provisions themselves. The Act of 1845 applies to all companies incorporated after its passing, except as expressly excepted by any special Act; the Act of 1863 applies only if expressly incorporated in a special Act.

Ran, open or public theft.

Ranger, a sworn officer of the forest and parks. His office consists chiefly in three points: to walk daily through his charge, and see, hear, and inquire of trespasses in his bailiwick; to drive the beasts of the forest, both of vinery and chase, out of the disafforested into the forested lands; and to prevent all trespasses of the forest at the next court holden for the forest.—Manwood. Also an official in control of royal parks.

Ranges Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 54), facilitated the acquisition of ranges by or for volunteer corps; the Military Lands Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 43), has repealed and superseded it with the exception of its 11th section, so far as it relates to acquisition of land under the Defence Acts. As to the right of an owner, whose lands are compulsorily taken, to be compensated for the injurious affection of his adjoining lands, see Blundell v. Rex, 1905, 1 K. B. 516, and Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation Act), 1919, also particular statutory provisions.

Rank Modus, one that is too large. See MODUS DECIMANDI.

Ranking of Creditors, the arrangement of the property of a debtor, according to the claims of the creditors and the nature of their respective securities.—Scots term.

Ransom [fr. rançon, Fr.], the price of redemption of a captive or prisoner of war, or for the pardon of some great offence. It differs from amercement, because it excuses from corporal punishment.

Rape. 1. A division of a county, especially Sussex, similar to that of a hundred, but oftentimes containing in it more hundreds than one. It was originally a military government.

2. The carnal knowledge of a woman by force against her will was for a long period punished as a capital crime in this country; but it is now provided (see s. 48 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861) that any person convicted of rape shall be guilty of felony, and be liable to be kept in penal servitude for life, or for not less than three years, or to be imprisoned for not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. See also the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, by s. 4 of which connection induced by personation of the woman's husband is declared to be rape.

The complaint of the woman shortly after the occurrence, and its particulars, may be given in evidence for the prosecution, not as evidence of the facts complained of (see HEARSAY EVIDENCE), but of the consistency of the conduct of the woman with the story told by her in the witness-box, and as negating consent on her part (Reg. v. Lillyman, 1896, 2 Q. B. 167—C. C. R.). It is the universal practice to require corroboration of the woman's accusation (see R. v. Osborne, 1905, 1 K. B. 551). As to what constitutes carnal knowledge, see s. 63 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, which provision also applies to offences under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (R. v. Marsden, 1891, 2 Q. B. 149). See ABUSING CHILDREN.

Rape of the Forest, trespass committed in the forest by violence.

Rape-reeve, an officer who used to act in subordination to the shire-reeve.

Rapine [fr. rapina, Lat.], the taking a thing against the owner's will, openly or by violence; robbery. See LARCENY.

Raptu hæredis, a writ for taking away an heir holding in socage; of which there were two sorts, one when the heir was married, the other when he was not.—Reg. Brev. 163.

Rastell, John, and William, his son, lawyers and printers of the time of Henry VIII. John Rastell translated from the French the 'Abridgment of the Statutes prior to the time of Henry VII.' He also abridged those of Henry VII., and down to the 23 & 24 of Henry VIII., which were printed together by the son William in 1533. This was the first abridgment in the English language.

The performances which most distinguish William Rastell belong to a later period than the reign of Henry VIII. These are his collection of English Statutes printed in 1559, and his 'Entries,' printed long after his death in 1596.—4 Reeves, 418.

Rasure, or Erasure, the act of scraping or shaving.

Rasure of a deed, so as to alter it in a material part, without consent of the party bound by it, etc., will make the same void, and if it be rased in the date after delivery, it is said it goes through the whole. Where a deed by rasure, addition, or alteration becomes no deed, the defendant may plead non est factum.—5 Rep. 23, 119.

A rasure or interlineation in a deed is presumed, in the absence of rebutting evidence, to have been made at or before its execution, but in a will it is presumed to have been made after its execution. See INTERLINEATION.

Rate. A contribution levied by some public body for a public purpose, as a poor rate, a highway rate, a sewers rate, upon, as a general rule, the occupiers of property within a parish or other area.

The term 'rate' is also used to mean a charge by a water, gas, railway, or other public undertaking for services rendered e.g., Railways Act, 1921, s. 20; Metropolitan Water Board Charges Act, 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. xciv.).

The poor rate was levied under the Poor Relief Act, 1601 (43 Eliz. s. 2), on the occupiers in each parish of 'lands, houses, tithes, coal mines, or saleable underwoods,' and the Rating Act, 1874, extended the liability to rates to: (1) land used for a plantation or a wood, or for the growth of saleable underwood, and not subject to any right of common; (2) rights of fowling, shooting, taking, or killing game, or rabbits, and of fishing when severed from the occupation of the land; and (3) mines of every kind (e.g., iron mines) not mentioned in the Act of Elizabeth.

As between landlord and tenant rates are ordinarily paid by the tenant, but the rating of the landlord instead of the tenant is provided for by the Act of 1925, s. 11, superseding the Poor Rate Assessment and Collection Act, 1869, and the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 211, in cases where the rateable value does not exceed 20*l.* in the Metropolis, or 16*l.* 5*s.* or, as a rule, 13*l.* in other districts. Personal property is not rateable, and stock in trade is expressly excepted by the temporary Poor Rate Exemption Act, 1840, made permanent by the Expiring Laws Act, 1922.

The multiplicity of rates leviable by public bodies for public purposes was simplified by the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925. By this Act one general rate replaces all the rates formerly made by the respective authorities having power to raise money by a public rate, the only exception being a special rate in rural districts for lighting under the Lighting and Watching Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90), the Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), or special expenses specified in the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 229.

The rating areas are either urban or rural. The rating authority in each area is the council of the county borough, borough or urban district having jurisdiction over the area; in rural rating areas the authority is the rural district council. The general rate is raised on so much in the pound on the rateable value of each hereditament in rateable occupation according to the valuation list. Contributions required by bodies such as the county council entitled out of the general rate are obtained by precepts to the rating authority requiring a levy of a specified amount in the pound calculated on the authority's estimate of the produce of a penny rate in its area: see the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, and Konstam's 'Modern Law of Rating,' and also QUARTER-RATING. For the valuation of railways, see the Railways Valuation for Rating Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 24); RAILWAYS. See CHURCH-RATES.

Rates Tribunal. See RAILWAY RATES TRIBUNAL.

Rate-tithe, when any sheep or other cattle are kept in a parish for less time than a year, the owner must pay tithe for them pro rata, according to the custom of the place.—Fitz. N. B. 51.

Ratification, confirmation. 'A contract of agency may also be created by ratification. Where A. purports to act as agent for B., either having no authority at all or having no authority to do that particular act, the subsequent adoption by B. of A.'s act has the same legal consequences as if B. had originally authorized the act. But there can be no ratification unless A. purported to act as agent, and to act for B.; and in such a case B. alone can ratify. Nor can there be any binding ratification of any agreement which was originally void' (Odgers on the Common Law), or where the principal was not in existence at the time of the act, either in fact or in the contemplation of law as in the case of persons such as trustees in bankruptcy or personal representatives who acquire title by relation (Kelner v. Baxter, L. R. 2 C. P. 174); and see also NOTICE TO QUIT. Omnis ratihabitus retrotrahitur et mandato equiparatur (Co. Litt. 207 a). As to the ratification of contracts by infants, see the Infants Relief Act, 1874, and INFANT.

Ratio, an account, a rule of proportion; also, a cause, or giving judgment therein.

Ratio decidendi, the ground of a judicial decision. The general reasons or principles of a judicial decision, as abstracted from any peculiarities of the case, are commonly styled, by writers on jurisprudence, the ratio decidendi.—Austin's Jurisprudence, p. 648.

Rationabile estoverium, alimony.

Rationabilibus divisio, an abolished writ, which lay where two lords, in divers towns, had seignories adjoining, for him who found his waste by little and little to have been encroached upon, against the other, who had encroached, thereby to rectify the bounds.

Rationabilis parte honorum, a writ which lay for a wife after her husband's death, against the executors of the husband, for her third or 'reasonable part' of his goods, after debts and funeral charges paid.—Fitz. N. B. 122: and see REASONABLE PARTS.

Rationabilis dos, a widow's third, or reasonable dower.

Rationes [M. Lat.], the pleadings in a suit. Rationes exercere, or ad rationes stare, to plead.

Ratione tenure. See HIGHWAYS.

Ravishment, forcible violation. See ABDUCTION and RAPE.

Ravishment de Gard (ravishment of ward), an abolished writ which lay for a guardian, by knight's service or in socage, against a person who took from him the body of his ward.—Fitz. N. B. 140; 12 Car. 2, c. 3.

Reader. 1. A lecturer. 2. An official of the Temple Church, appointed alternately by the Inner and Middle Temple. He reads the lessons and preaches on Sunday afternoons.

Reading-in. The title of a person instituted or licensed to any benefice with cure of souls or perpetual curacy will be divested unless he publicly read in the church of the benefice, on the first Lord's-day on which he officiates, the Thirty-nine Articles, with a declaration of his assent thereto, and to the Book of Common Prayer.—Clerical Subscription Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 122), s. 7.

Re-afforested, where a de-afforested forest is again made a forest.—20 Car. 2, c. 3. See FOREST. Also, replanted.

Real Action, one brought for the specific recovery of lands, tenements, and hereditaments.

Among the civilians, real actions, otherwise called vindications, are those in which a man demanded something that was his own. They were founded on dominion, or jus in re.

The real actions of the Roman Law were not, like the real actions of the Common Law, confined to real estate, but they included personal as well as real property. But the same distinction as to classes of remedies and actions pervades the Common and Civil Law. Thus we have, in the Common Law, the distinct classes of real actions, personal actions, and mixed actions—the first, embracing those which concern real estate where the proceeding is purely in rem; the next, embracing all suits in personam for contracts and torts; and the last embracing those mixed suits where the person is liable by reason of and in connection with property.—Story's Conf. Laws, 781.

By the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27), s. 37, all real and mixed actions, except writ of right of dower, or writ of dower unde nihil habet, quare impedit, and ejectment, were abolished. By the C. L. P. Act, 1860, s. 26, the procedure in the excepted actions of dower, etc., except ejectment, was assimilated to that of ordinary actions, and by the Rules of Court under the Jud. Acts, all remaining distinction between ejectment and other actions is abolished. See ACTION.

Real Burden. Where a right to lands is expressly granted under the burden of a specific sum, or a burden of a specific sum is constituted on the lands themselves, and not merely personally, and where the name of the creditor can be discovered from the records, the burden is said to be real, and must be registered in the REGISTER OF SASINES. See ADDENDA.

Real Chattels. See CHATTELS.

Real Estate. Before 1926, land (with all houses, etc., built thereon) including all estates and interests in lands which are held for life (not for years, however many) or for some greater estate, and whether such lands be of freehold or copyhold tenure. This is the usual meaning of real estate, but for the purposes of devolution upon deaths after 1925 the definition of real estate by s. 3 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, is 'real estate includes chattels real and land in possession, remainder or reversion and every interest in or over land to which the deceased was entitled at his death and (ii.) real estate held on trust (including settled land) or by way of mortgage or security, but not money to arise under a trust for sale of land nor money secured or charged on land'; and see TRUST ESTATE. Consult Carson's Real Property Statutes; Williams on Real Property; Burton's Compendium.

Real Evidence, as by models, etc. See Best on Evidence, 10th ed., bk. ii. pt. ii.

Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), repealed and substantially re-enacted and extended by ss. 4, 51, 52, 56, 59, 138 and 168 of the Law of Property Act, 1925. The main provisions of the Act of 1845 affect all titles after 1845; prior to 1926, they included:

Partitions or exchanges of freehold land, leases required by law to be in writing, i.e., leases for three years or more (see FRAUD), and all assignments and surrenders of leases must be by deed.

A contingent executory and future interest in land, and a possibility coupled with an interest in land, and a right of entry whether immediate, future, vested, or contingent, may be disposed of by deed.

When the reversion on a lease is gone by surrender or merger, the next estate is to be deemed the reversion—(so that if, e.g., A. in 1900 let land to B. for fourteen years, and B. in 1903 surrender, after having sub-let to C. till the end of 1905, C. will become tenant to A. till the end of 1905, notwithstanding B.'s surrender)—the statute being in affirmation of the common law as laid down in Co. Litt. 338 b, and Doe v. Pyke, (1816) 5 M. & S. 154.

Real Representative. The name formerly given to a personal representative on whom real estate devolved on the death of any person between the 31st December, 1897, and the 1st January, 1926, under the provisions of the Land Transfer Act, 1897.

Prior to the commencement on the 1st of January, 1898, of the Land Transfer Act, 1897 (see TRANSFER OF LAND ACTS), the real estate of a deceased person vested in his heir, heiresses, or devisees, and his personal estate in his executors or administrators. The Land Transfer Act, 1897, (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), reproduced and extended by the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, established a real representative in the person of the executor or administrator of any person dying after the commencement of that Act, in whom all his real estate except copyhold was vested notwithstanding his will, unless, as in a joint tenancy, any other person had a right to take by survivorship, so that one and the same person had the legal title to both the real estate and the personal estate of the deceased.

These provisions, and s. 30 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (relating to the devolution upon the personal representative of trust and mortgage estates belonging to the deceased), were consolidated and extended by the Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (which applies to deaths after 1925, s. 54, ibid.), with the object of assimilating the law of succession to real and personal property. Sect. 1 of the A. E. Act, 1925, provides:—

“(1) Real estate (q.v.) to which a deceased person was entitled for an interest not ceasing on his death shall, on his death and notwithstanding any testamentary disposition thereof, devolve from time to time on the personal representative of the deceased in like manner as before the commencement of this Act, chattels real devolved on the personal representative from time to time of the deceased person.

(2) The personal representatives for the time being of a deceased person are deemed in law his heirs and assigns within the meaning of all trusts and powers.

(3) The personal representatives shall be the representatives of the deceased in regard to his real estate to which he was entitled for an interest not ceasing on his death as well as in regard to his personal estate. Sect. 2 applies the law relating to chattels real to real estate except that (reproducing and amending the Land Transfer Act, 1897, s. 2, and the Conveyancing Act, 1911, s. 12), all the personal representatives or all the proving executors are to join in a conveyance either of realty or chattels real, and (s. 5 (21)) without prejudice to the rights and powers of a personal representative, preserves the order of administration and rights of property and action relating to real estate in favour of the persons entitled.”

Real estate over which a person exercises a general power of appointment by his will and an entailed interest disposed of by will under the statutory power (L. P. Act, 1925, s. 176) devolve upon the personal representative. An entailed interest or reversion or remainder thereto which was not disposed of by will does not devolve upon them, nor does the interest in a joint estate passing by survivorship or the interest of a corporation sole. The trustees of settled land vested in the testator and not settled by his will may be appointed by the testator (and if not so appointed, those will be deemed to have been appointed by him as) the special representatives of the settled land, without prejudice to the appointment of general representatives (see s. 22 of the A. E. Act, 1925, and Re Bridgett and Hayes, 1928, Ch. 163).

Pending the effective creation of a personal representative the real estate of an intestate devolved on the heir-at-law (Re Griggs, 1914, 2 Ch. 547); it now vests in the President of the Probate Division (ss. 9 and 55, A. E. Act, 1925); as to the powers of an administrator over the real estate previous to the grant to him, see Re Pryse, 1904, P. 301.

The real representative, by s. 2 of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, held the real estate as trustee only for the person by law beneficially entitled thereto, e.g., for the devisee, and might at any time after the death assent to a devise or convey the real estate to such person, but under the L. P.

(Amendment) Act, 1924, 9th Sched., par. 3, and after 1925, a will cannot pass a legal estate except to the personal representatives, and testamentary dispositions are only equitable. The legal estate or property will pass to the beneficiary only upon assent or conveyance by the personal representatives. See ASSENT.

Real Right, the right of property, jus in re. The person having such right may sue for the subject itself. A personal right, jus ad rem, entitles the party only to an action for performance of the obligation.

Real Things, things substantial and immovable, and the rights and profits annexed to or issuing out of them.—1 Steph. Com.

Real Warrandice, an infeoffment of one tenement given in security of another.—Scots Law.

Reality of Laws. See PERSONALITY OF LAWS.

Realm, a kingdom or country.

Realty, real estate, which see.

Reason, the very life of law, for when the reason of law once ceases the law itself generally ceases, because reason is the foundation of all our laws.—Co. Litt. 97 b, 183 b.

Reasonable. If there be a contract to do a thing or to buy goods, and no time or price is mentioned, the law implies that the thing was to be done in a reasonable time, and that a reasonable price was to be paid, and what is reasonable is a question of fact, not law. See REASONABLE TIME.

Reasonable Aid, a duty claimed by the lord of the fee of his tenants holding by knight service, to marry his daughter, etc.

Reasonable and Probable Cause, such grounds as justify any one in suspecting another of a crime and giving him in custody thereon. Its absence is one of the causes of action in an action for malicious prosecution and its existence is a defence to an action for false imprisonment. After the jury have found the facts, the question whether the facts show a reasonable and probable cause is a question of law, not fact, but the judge may leave that finding to the jury in some cases (McDonald v. Rooke, (1835) 2 Bing. (N. C.) 217). See Addison on Torts; Clerk and Lindsell on Torts. See FALSE IMPRISONMENT; MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

Reasonable Parts. The two-thirds of a man's personal property, one of which went on his death to his widow, and the other to his children, the remaining third going in accordance with his will. This right of the widow and children was expressly saved to them by a still unrepealed clause of Magna Charta, but became lost to them by imperceptible degrees. The Wills Act, 1837, is inconsistent with, but does not expressly repeal, the saving of Magna Charta for the 'reasonable parts,' but the Wills Act does not apply to Scotland, where (see LEGITIM), as generally throughout Europe, except in England and Ireland, the rights of the widow and children are in full force.

Reasonable Time, within the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (which see), is by s. 56 of that Act (and see ss. 11 (2), 18 (4), 29 (4), 35, and 37) a question of fact. Where a contract is silent as to time the law implies a contract to do the stipulated act within a reasonable time under the circumstances: Ford v. Cotesworth, (1868) L. R. 4 Q. B. 132, Blackburn, J.

Re-assurance, a contract that a first insurer enters into to release himself wholly or in part from a risk which he has undertaken by throwing it upon some other insurer. Re-assurance is not to be confounded with double insurance, which see.

Re-attachment, a second attachment of him who was formerly attached and dismissed the Court without day, by the not coming of the justices, or some such casualty.—Jac. Law Dict.

Rebate, discount; reducing the interest of money in consideration of prompt payment or otherwise.

Rebellion. 1. The taking up of arms traitorously against the Crown, whether by natural subjects or others when once subdued. 2. Disobedience to the process of the courts. See next title.

Rebellion, Commission of, one of the abolished processes of contempt in the High Court of Chancery.—See the (repealed) Consol. Ord. 1860, xxx., r. 5.

Rebouter, to repel or bar.

Rebus sic stantibus, things standing so; under the circumstances.

Rebut, to bar, reply, or contradict.

Rebutter [fr. repello, Lat., to put back or bar], the answer of a defendant to a plaintiff's sur-rejoinder. See REJOINDER.

Rebutting Evidence, that which is given by one party in a cause to explain, repel, counteract, or disprove evidence produced by the other party.

Recall, to supersede a minister, or deprive him of his office; also to revoke a judgment on a matter of fact.

Recaption, the taking a second distress of one formerly distrained, during the plea grounded on the former distress; and it was a writ to recover damages for him whose goods, being distrained for rent, or service, etc., were distrained again for the same cause, pending the plea in the County Court or before the justices.—Fitz. N. B. 71.

It is also a species of remedy by the mere act of the party injured. This happens when any one has deprived another of his property, in goods or chattels personal, or wrongfully detains one's wife, child, or servant, in which case the owner of the goods, and the husband, parent, or master, may lawfully claim and retake them, wherever he happens to find them, so it be not in a riotous manner, or attended with a breach of the peace.—3 Bl. Com. 4.

Recapture, the recovery by force of a prize captured by an enemy.

Receipt, an acknowledgment in writing of having received a sum of money, which is prima facie but not conclusive evidence of payment (Skaife v. Jackson, (1824) 3 B. & C. 421).

A stamp duty first imposed in 1783 was progressively ad valorem, until 1853, when the uniform 1*d.* rate was imposed; this was increased to 2*d.* by the Finance Act, 1920.

For the purposes of the Stamp Act, 1891, the expression 'receipt' is defined (s. 101) as including—

(1) Any note, memorandum, or writing whereby any money amounting to two pounds or upwards, or any bill of exchange or promissory note for money amounting to two pounds or upwards, is acknowledged or expressed to have been received or deposited or paid, or whereby any debt or demand, or any part of a debt or demand, of the amount of two pounds or upwards, is acknowledged to have been settled, satisfied, or discharged, or which signifies or imports any such acknowledgment, and whether the same is or is not signed with the name of any person.

And it is added that :—

(2) The duty upon a receipt may be denoted by an adhesive stamp, which is to be cancelled [see s. 8] by the person to whom the receipt is given before he delivers it out of his hands.

The receipt form sometimes indorsed upon a cheque or other bill of exchanges requires a 2*d.* stamp under this section (Midland Bank v. Inland Rev. Commisrs., 1927, 2 K. B. 465).

A receipt may also be stamped with an impressed stamp.

Section 102 provides for stamping after execution, on penalties, and s. 103 enacts that :—

If any person—

(1) Gives a receipt liable to duty and not duly stamped; or

(2) In any case where a receipt would be liable to duty refuses to give a receipt duly stamped; or he shall incur a fine of ten pounds.

There are fifteen exemptions under the heading of 'receipt' set out in the schedule, among which is a receipt given for or on account of salary, pay or wages (14 & 15 Geo. 5, c. 21, s. 36), and now also a receipt of consideration money and for sums recovered by way of compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925; see the Finance Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 28), s. 44.

The signature of counsel for a fee marked on his brief, though the fee is purely honorary, is a receipt and must be stamped (General Council of the Bar v. I. R. C., 1907, 1 K. B. 462).

Receiver. (1) An officer appointed by the Court to collect rents, etc., pending a suit. Receivers are appointed in actions for administration; in actions by mortgagees or against trustees or executors; in actions between partners for winding up the partnership business, and in a great many other cases. (2) A mortgagee may also appoint a receiver of the mortgaged property, if empowered so to do by the mortgage deed or by separate instrument, without having to apply to the Court; and by section 19 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, reproduced and extended to mortgages of certain incorporated hereditaments, such as rentcharges or annual income, by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 101, in the case of a mortgage executed on or after the 1st January, 1882, the mortgagee, when the mortgage money has become due, may appoint a receiver of the income of the mortgaged property, or of any part thereof, together with certain leasing powers conferred by the Conveyancing Act, 1911, s. 3, now replaced by s. 99, L. P. Act, 1925, but such power cannot (s. 24 of the Act of 1881, reproduced by L. P. Act, 1925, s. 109) be exercised until the mortgagee is entitled to exercise the power of sale under the Act (i.e., by s. 20, now L. P. Act, 1925, s. 103, unless default has been made in payment of the principal, after notice, or interest is in arrear for two months, or there has been other default on the part of the mortgagor); and s. 24 also regulates in detail the powers, remuneration and duties of the receiver. A receiver so appointed is the agent of the mortgagor. A practising barrister may be a receiver; a solicitor in the cause cannot, unless by consent, and without salary; nor next friends of infant-plaintiffs; nor trustees.

A receiver may be appointed by an interlocutory order of the Court, in all cases in which it shall appear to the Court to be just or convenient, that such order should be made (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 25 (8)). See now Jud. Act, 1925, s. 45.

'Receiver' includes consignee or manager appointed by the Court; see R. S. C. Ord. LXXI., r. 1; Re Neudegate Colliery Co., 1912, 1 Ch. 468.

Under the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 8, the Court may appoint the official receiver to be interim receiver of the debtor's property.

A receiver may also be appointed by way of 'equitable execution' where the property of a litigant against whom judgment has been obtained cannot be made available by fi. fa., elegit, or other ordinary process of execution; as to the appointment of such a receiver, see Harris v. Beauchamp Bros., 1894, 1 Q. B. 801; Morgan v. Hart, 1914, 2 K. B. 183; R. S. C. 1883, Ord. L., r. 15A. As to debenture holders, see Comp. Act, 1929, ss. 86, 308-310.

In the administration of estates, under the Lunacy Acts, 1890, 1891 and 1908, the Mental Deficiency Act, 1913, and the Mental Treatment Act, 1930, it is usual to appoint a receiver of the income and so much of the capital property as the Master in Lunacy may order to manage the property of the patient under the direction of the Master in Lunacy (Mills and Poyser's Lunacy Practice). The term 'receiver,' however, as thus used is not a very happy one—he may be compendiously described as standing in the position of a statutory-attorney or agent of the person under disability; see Re E. G., 1914, 1 Ch. 927. See Kerr on Receivers, and Hals. L. E., tit. 'Receivers.'

Receiver of the Fines, an officer who received the money of all such as compounded with the Crown on original writs sued out of Chancery.

Receiver of Stolen Property. Punishable under the Larceny Act, 1916, s. 33. The offence consists in receiving any property knowing the same to have been stolen or obtained in any way whatsoever under circumstances which amount to felony or misdemeanour. It matters not whether the principal thief has been prosecuted. Whether the offence is a felony or misdemeanour depends on which the original stealing, etc., was. Section 43 provides that, on a prosecution of a person for receiving stolen property knowing it to have been stolen or for being in possession thereof, there may be given in evidence for the purpose of proving guilty knowledge: (a) The fact that other property stolen within the period of twelve months preceding the date of the offence charged was found or had been in his possession; (b) the fact that within five years preceding the date of the offence charged he was convicted of an offence involving fraud or dishonesty. Before the prosecution can prove (b) a seven days' notice must be given to the accused, and evidence must be given at the trial that the property in respect of which he is being tried was found or had been in his possession.

Receivers of Wreck, officers appointed by the Board of Trade, pursuant to the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, ss. 5 and 6, which take the place of s. 439 of the repealed Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, for the preservation of wreck, etc. The Act provides for their duties and powers.

Receiver-General of the Duchy of Lancaster, an officer of the Duchy Court, who collects all the revenues, fines, forfeitures, and assessments within the duchy.

Receiver-General of the Public Revenue, an officer appointed in every county to receive the taxes granted by Parliament, and remit the money to the Treasury.

Receiving Order. An order of the Court on the petition of a creditor, or of the debtor himself, granted for the protection of the estate on an act of bankruptcy being established. The order constitutes the official receiver the receiver of the debtor's property. Legal proceedings against the person or property of the debtor in respect of debts provable in bankruptcy can thenceforth be restrained by the official receiver. The effect of the order is that unless a scheme or composition is accepted by the creditors the debtor is adjudged bankrupt. See Bankruptcy Act, 1914, ss. 3, 7, 37 (2), 107 (4), and Bankruptcy Rules, 1915, rr. 179-188A. Receiving orders in bankruptcy, whether or not known to affect land, must be registered at the Land Registry every five years or else the title of the trustee in bankruptcy will be void against a purchaser of a legal estate in good faith for money or money's worth without notice of an available act of bankruptcy under a conveyance made after the date of registration of the bankruptcy petition as a pending action (see lis pendens), unless at the date of the conveyance either the registration of the pending action is in force or the receiving order is registered—Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 7.

Reception Order. No person, not being a rate-aided poor person or a person of unsound mind so found by inquisition, can be received or detained as a person of unsound mind except under the authority of (1) a reception order, or (2) an urgency order (q.v.), or (3) a summary reception order (q.v.) (Lunacy Act, 1890, ss. 1, 9, 13). Sections 21 and 22 provide exceptions in the case of emergency, etc., and of friends and relatives taking charge. A reception order can only be made by a judicial authority, i.e., a justice of the peace specially appointed, a county court judge, a stipendiary magistrate, or by two commissioners in lunacy (ibid., ss. 1, 9, 10, and 23). It is only effective for one year unless extended (Lunacy Act, 1891, s. 7), and by s. 36 (3) of the Act, 1890, it ceases to be of any force unless the patient has been received thereunder before the expiration of seven days from its date. As to the reception of feeble-minded and mentally defective persons, see the Mental Deficiency Acts, 1913 to 1927; of Voluntary Patients, the Mental Treatment Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 23).

Receptus, an arbitrator.—Civ. Law.

Recession, a re-grant.

Récidive [Fr.], a relapse: the commission of a second offence.

Reciprocity, mutuality.

Recital, the rehearsal or making mention in a deed or writing of something which has been done before.—1 Lilly Abr. 416. As to how far the recitals govern the construction of a deed the rule is as follows:—

If the recitals are clear and the operative part is ambiguous, the recitals govern the construction. If the recitals are ambiguous, and the operative part is clear, the operative part must prevail. If both the recitals and the operative part are clear, but they are inconsistent with each other, the operative part is to be preferred (Ex parte Davies, (1886) 17 Q. B. D. p. 286, per Lord Esher, M.R.). As between the parties to a deed and for its purposes only and subject to the intention of the parties upon construction, a recital of a particular fact but not a general recital amounts to an estoppel against the party making it. Whether both parties are bound is a question of intention to be ascertained in the same way. See Notes to the Duchess of Kingston's case, 5m. L. C. See DEED.

Reclaimed Animals, those that are made tame by art, industry, or education, whereby a qualified property may be acquired in them. See FERRÆ NATURÆ, and 2 Steph. Com.

Reclaiming, the action of a lord pursuing, prosecuting, and recalling his vassal, who had gone to live in another place without his permission. Also the demanding of a thing or person to be delivered up or surrendered to the prince or State it properly belongs to, when by some irregular means it has come into the possession of another.

Reclaiming, the procedure of appeal to the Inner House from the Outer House of the Court of Session in Scotland (except in jury cases).

Recognition, an acknowledgment.

Recognitione adnullanda per vim et durtiem facta, a writ to the justices of the Common Bench for sending a record touching a recognizance, which the recognizer suggests was acknowledged by force and duress; that if it so appear, the recognizance may be annulled.—Reg. Brv. 183.

Recognitors, the jury impannelled in an assize; so called because they acknowledged a disseisin by their verdict.—Bract. 1, 5.

Recognizance, an acknowledgment of a debt owing to the Crown, with a condition to be void if the recognizer shall do some particular act, as if he, or the party for whom he is surety, shall appear at the assizes to prosecute a person, or to come up for judgment when called upon, or shall prosecute an appeal, or shall be of good behaviour, commonly called 'binding over.' As to the power of justices of their own initiative to bind over a person, though no formal charge has been made against him, see R. v. Wilkins, 1907, 2 K. B. 380. See also R. v. Sandbach, Ex p. Williams, 1935, 2 K. B. 192, and Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), s. 31, sub-s. 3, as amended by Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 38), s. 1; and as to the mode of entering into recognizance, see Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, s. 24; see also ss. 19–23. For forms of recognizance, see the schedule to the Summary Jurisdiction rules, 1886; also rules 112–115 of the Crown Office Rules of 1906, especially rule 113, by which no recognizance 'shall be forfeited, estreated, or put upon the estreat roll without the order of the Court or a Judge, nor unless an order or notice shall have been previously served upon the parties by whom such recognizances shall have been given, calling upon them to perform the conditions thereof,' and see s. 66 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933, as to forfeited recognizances.

As to enforcement of recognizances by a Court of Summary Jurisdiction in respect of proceedings in such Court, see s. 9 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879.

Recognizances of any date are not to operate as a charge on land or the unpaid purchase money of any land unless a writ or order for the purpose of enforcing the recognizance is registered at the Land Registry (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 195 (4), and see Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 6).

Recognized Mortgage, a mortgage upon which money may be advanced under the Agricultural Credits Act, 1921, s. 1 (expired); see now agricultural charges under the Agricultural Credits Acts, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 43), and 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 35).

Recognizee, he to whom one is bound in a recognizance.

Recognizor, he who enters into a recognizance.

Récolement [Fr.], re-examination.

Recommendation to Mercy. See MERCY.

Re-compensation. Where a party sues for a debt, and the defendant pleads compensation, i.e., set-off, the plaintiff may allege a compensation on his part, and this is called a re-compensation.—Scots Law Terms.

Reconduction, a relocation; a renewal of a lease.—Civ. Law.

Reconstruction of a Company, upon a voluntary winding-up the company may sell its undertaking for property of (including profits in) the purchasing company; see Companies Act, 1929, s. 234.

Reconvention, an action by a defendant against a plaintiff in a former action; a cross-bill or litigation.—Ibid.

Reconveyance. See PROVISO FOR REDEMPTION; MORTGAGE.

Record, a memorial or remembrance; an authentic testimony in writing contained in rolls of parchment, and preserved in a court of record. The public records of the kingdom are placed under the superintendence of the Master of the Rolls, and a Record Office established by the Public Record Office Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 94). The Public Record Office (commonly called the Rolls Office) is a large building in Chancery Lane, London, and was opened in 1902.

There are three kinds of records, viz.: (1) judicial, as an attainer; (2) ministerial, on oath, being an office or inquisition found; (3) by way of conveyance, as a deed enrolled.

As to ancient public records generally, see Hubback on Succession, pp. 607 et seq.

The Record Offices of the Supreme Court are now merged in the Central Office there. See R. S. C. Ord. LXI.

Also the general name given to (a) pleadings and subsequent orders and recorded matters in an action (by R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXVI, r. 30, the party entering the action for trial must deliver to the officer two copies of the whole of the pleadings in the action, one of which is for the use of the judge at the trial. Such copies must be in print, except as to such parts, if any, of the pleadings as are by the Rules permitted to be written. In Scotland, the printed pleadings in a contested action); (b) the volume containing the case, evidence and transcripts of appellants and respondents on appeal to the House of Lords or Privy Council.

Record, Conveyances by, extraordinary assurances, as private Acts of Parliament, and royal grants.

Record, Courts of, those whose judicial acts and proceedings are enrolled on parchment, for a perpetual memorial and testimony; which rolls are called the Records of the Court, and are of such high and super-eminent authority that their truth is not to be called in question. Courts of Record are of two classes—Superior and Inferior. Superior Courts of Record include the House of Lords, the Judicial Committee, the Court of Appeal, the High Court, and a few others. The Mayor's Court of London, the County Courts, Coroner's Courts, and others are Inferior Courts of Record, of which the County Courts are the most important. Every superior court of record has authority to fine and imprison for contempt of its authority; an inferior court of record can only commit for contempts committed in open court, in facie curiæ. See Co. Litt. 117 b, 260 a; Odgers on the Common Law; Odgers on Libel.

Record, Debts of, those which appear to be due by the evidence of a court of record, such as a judgment, recognizance, etc. Since 1st January, 1870, all specialty and simple contract debts of deceased persons stand in equal degree in the administration of the estate of any one deceased (Administration of Estates Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 46)).

Record of Nisi Prius, a transcript of the pleadings and issue was formerly made on parchment for the use of the Court on the trial of the action.

Record Office, Public, in Chancery Lane.

Under the Master of the Rolls, with a Keeper of Records, the repository of national records, including 'Domesday' (q.v.). See ROLLS OFFICE.

Record of Titles (Ireland) (28 & 29 Vict. c. 88), amended by 29 & 30 Vict. c. 99; (Scotland), see REGISTER OF SASINES (Ad-denda).

Record, Trial by. If a record be asserted on one side to exist, and the opposite party deny its existence, thus, 'that there is no such record remaining in Court as alleged,' and issue be joined thereon, this is an issue of nul tiel record; and the Court awards a trial by inspection of the record. Upon this, the party affirming its existence is bound to produce it in Court on a given day; failing to do so, judgment is given for his adversary. The trial by record is the only legitimate mode of trying such issue.—Steph. Plead.; 2 Chit. Arch. Prac.

Record and Writ Clerks, three officers of the Court of Chancery, appointed by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103. As to their duties, see that Act and also 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 46; 18 & 19 Vict. c. 124, s. 11; Consol. Ord. 1860, 1, rr. 35-53; and Dan. Ch. Pr. They were attached to the Supreme Court by s. 77 of the Jud. Act, 1873, and made 'masters' thereof by s. 8 of the Jud. (Officers) Act, 1879. See now Jud. Act, 1925, ss. 104-106.

Recordari facias loquelam [abbrev. re. fa. lo.], an original writ, in the nature of a certiorari, issuing out of Chancery, addressed to a sheriff to remove a cause depending in an inferior court not of record to a superior court; and it is called a recordari, because it commands the sheriff to make a record of the plaintiff in the ancient County Court, and then to send up the cause. Obsolete.—Fitz-N.B. 71.

Recorder, in municipal boroughs having a separate Court of Quarter Sessions, a barrister of five years' standing at least, appointed by the Crown, holding office during good behaviour, and receiving 'such yearly salary not exceeding that stated in the petition on which the grant of a separate Court of Quarter Sessions was made,' as the sovereign directs. He is sole judge of the Court of Quarter Sessions, 'having cognizance of all crimes, offences, and matters cognizable by Courts of Quarter Sessions in England,' except that he may not grant licences or hear licensing appeals under the Intoxicating Liquor Licensing Acts, or levy rates (Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, ss. 162, 165). He may appoint as 'deputy recorder' a barrister of five years' standing, in case of sickness or unavoidable absence, and an 'assistant recorder' if it appears that the Quarter Sessions are likely to last more than three days (ibid., s. 168), as amended by the Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 38).

Recorders also existed in some of the places (see a list in the schedule to the Municipal Corporations Act, 1883) not subject to the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882.

Recorder of London, one of the justices of oyer and terminer, and a justice of the peace of the quorum for putting the laws in execution for the preservation of the peace and government of the city. Being the mouth of the city, he delivers the sentences and judgments of the Court therein, and also certifies and records the city customs, etc. He is chosen by the lord mayor and aldermen, and attends the business of the city when summoned by the lord mayor, etc.; but by the Local Government Act, 1888, s. 42, sub-s. 14, after the vacancy next after the commencement of that Act, which vacancy happened in 1892 by the death of Sir Thomas Chambers, no Recorder may exercise any judicial functions unless he be appointed by the sovereign to exercise such functions.

Records, gramophone, are subject to the Copyright Act, 1911, ss. 19 to 35; as to reproducing broadcast music, see 15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 46.

Recoup, to keep back something due; to recompense.

Recoverer, the demandant in a common recovery after judgment.

Recovery, the obtaining a thing by judgment or trial.

A true recovery is an actual or real recovery of anything, or the value thereof, by judgment; as if a man sue for any land or other thing movable or immovable, and gain a verdict or judgment.

A feigned recovery. An abolished common assurance by matter of record, in fraud of the statute De Donis, whereby a tenant-in-tail in possession enlarged his estate-tail into a fee-simple and so barred the entail, and all remainders and reversions expectant thereon, with all conditions and collateral limitations annexed to them, and subsequent charges subordinate to the entail. But incumbrances on the estate-tail equally affected such fee-simple, and any estate or interest prior to the entail remained undisturbed.

This assurance consisted of two parts: (1) The recovery itself, which was a fictitious real action in the Court of Common Pleas, carried on to judgment, and founded on the supposition of an adverse claim ; and (2) the recovery-deed, which was partly a preparatory step to suffering the recovery, and partly a declaration of the uses when suffered.

This method barring an estate-tail by a fictitious real action was based upon (a) the doctrine that the tenant-in-tail could sell the entailed lands for an estate in fee-simple, provided that judgment was obtained in favour of the tenant-in-tail and his heirs against some one for lands of equal value, and (b) the law of warranty as applied in actions for recovery of land. The procedure in such an action for the recovery of land was as follows : X. brought a writ of recovery against Y. in respect of land which Y. had bought from Z. Y. called upon Z. to prove that he had had a good title when he sold to Y. (this was called 'vouching Z. to warranty'). If Z. failed to prove that he had had a good title at the time of the sale, judgment was given for X. against Y. and a judgment against Z. for lands of equal value was also given in favour of Y.

To bar the entail a tenant-in-tail adopted the above procedure by means of a fictitious and collusive action. A., the tenant-in-tail, procured a friend D. (the Demandant) to bring an action for recovery of land against him. A. pretended that he had bought the land from C. and vouched C. to warranty. C. was a man of no substance (generally the crier of the Court), who was willing to allow a judgment to be given against him. C. admitted, contrary to the fact, that he had sold the land to A. and craved leave to 'imparl with him,' i.e. to consult with him outside the Court. C. failed to return, and judgment was therefore given in favour of D. against A. and in favour of A. and his issue for land of equal value against C. D. becoming thus possessed of the fee-simple conveyed the land in fee-simple to A. or dealt with it as directed by him. This right to suffer a common recovery was considered as an incident of an estate-tail. In later times the proceedings became more complicated ; it was found inexpedient that the action should be brought against the tenant-in-tail himself, and so another person was brought into the action. The land was first conveyed by the tenant-in-tail to a friend, the tenant to the præcipe (so-called because he was to be served with the præcipe or writ). The demandant then brought the action against the tenant to the præcipe ; the latter vouched the tenant-in-tail to warranty ; he in his turn vouched the Court crier (the common vouchee) to warranty. The Court crier admitted (untruly) that he had sold the land to the tenant-in-tail and craved leave to imparl with him outside the Court. In his absence judgment was given by default that the lands belonged to the demandant in fee-simple and that the common vouchee must give lands of equal value to the tenant-in-tail and his heirs. See for example, Taltarum's case, Y. B. 12 Edw. 4, 19, and Tudor's Leading Cases, 3rd ed., p. 695.

This was called a recovery with double voucher, and effectually barred the entail, with every latent interest and all reversions and remainders expectant thereon. The only possible case in which a remainder with treble voucher was necessary was in the instance in which a tenant-in-tail created an entail derived out of his own, and the two entails were, in point of estate or of right, existing at one time in distinct persons, and both entails were to be barred.

To perfect the legal title, and to give a seisin to the demandant, a writ of habere facias seisinam must have been issued after judgment, and seisin duly delivered to him, whereupon the uses arose. This writ was returned by the sheriff, and the proceedings exemplified by the clerk of the Court for the purpose of proving the suffering of the recovery. In a recovery deed the proper parties, either alone or jointly with other persons, as circumstances might have required, were : (1) the person who had the immediate freehold ; (2) the intended vouchee ; (3) the intended tenant ; and (4) the intended demandant. See Williams on Real Property ; 1 Shep. Touch. c. 3 ; and 1 Prest. Conv. c. 1 ; 1 Hall. Cons. Hist. c. i. 12. An estate-tail might also be barred by a fine (q.v.). A friend brought an action of recovery against the tenant-in-tail. The action was then settled upon the terms that the friend should have the lands in fee-simple and that the tenant-in-tail should be paid a sum of money as consideration. This compromise was entered on the rolls of the Court. The effect of a fine varied from time to time, but eventually it became conclusive not only against the tenant-in-tail but against his issue, but inoperative as to remainders and reversions.

These fictions were abolished by the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1533 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74), which substituted a short deed, duly enrolled, as the mode of barring an estate-tail. See TAIL.

Recovery of Land, the title, since the Judicature Acts, of the action of 'eject-ment' to transfer the possession of land from the wrongful to the rightful owner.

Under the County Courts Orders, see Order V., actions to recover possession of land under ss. 138 and 139 of the County Courts Act, 1888, were to be so called in distinction from actions of ejectment under s. 59, ibid., but by the County Courts Act, 1934, s. 48, county courts have jurisdiction over actions for the recovery of land where neither the value of the land nor the rent exceeds 100*l.* per annum, and references to ss. 138 and 139 of the Act of 1888 are to be construed as references to s. 48 of 1934. As to the judges' discretion under s. 138 of the County Courts Act, 1888, see Sheffield Corporation v. Luxford, 1929, 2 K. B. 180.

Recreant, yielding. See CRAVEN.

Recreation Grounds. The Recreation Grounds Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 27), facilitates grants of land near populous places for use in the regulated recreation of adults, and as playgrounds for children; and ss. 76 and 77 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 53), contain provisions for their regulation. See also OPEN SPACES.

Recrimination, a charge made by an accused person against the accuser.

Recta prisæ regis, the king's right to prisage, or taking of one butt or pipe of wine before, and another behind, the mast, as a custom for every ship laden with wines. See PRISAGE.

Rectification. The power to rectify a written document which, as drawn out, does not express the mutual and concurrent intention of the parties, is a power which the Courts of equity always possessed; but such jurisdiction is exercised with the greatest care and caution, and only on evidence of the clearest and most satisfactory description. Rectification has been made in almost every kind of instrument, e.g., in marriage settlements (Cogan v. Duffield, (1876) 2 Ch. D. 46), in agreements concerning land (Olley v. Fisher, (1886) 34 Ch. D. 367), in conveyances (White v. White, (1872) L. R. 15 Eq. 247), and in leases (Cowan v. Truefitt, Ltd., 1899, 2 Ch. 309). As to wills, see Vaughan v. Clerk, (1902) 87 L. T. 144; Re Schott, 1901, P. 190.

Also an alteration rectifying an entry in a register, e.g., company, patents, trade-marks, etc.

Rectitudo, right or justice; legal dues; tribute or payment.

Recto, Breve de, a writ of right, which was of so high a nature that, as other writs in real actions were only to recover the possession of the land, etc., in question, this aimed to recover the seisin and the property, and thereby both the rights of possession and property were tried together.

There were two species: (1) writ of right patent, so called because it was sent open, and was the highest writ lying for him who had a fee-simple in the lands or tenements sued for, against the tenant of the freehold at least, and in no other case; this writ was likewise called breve magnum de recto; (2) writ of right close, which was brought where one held lands and tenements by charter in ancient demesne in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for term of life, or in dower, and was disseised.—Co. Litt. 158 b; Jac. Law Dict. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27. See ACTION (POSSESSORY).

Recto de advocacione ecclesiæ, a writ which lay at Common Law, where a man had right of advowson of a church, and, the parson dying, a stranger had presented.—Fitz. N. B. 30.

Recto de custodiâ terræ et hæredis, a writ of right of ward of the land and heir. Abolished.

Recto de dote, a writ of right of dower, which lay for a widow who had received part of her dower, and demanded the residue, against the heir of the husband or his guardian. Abolished. See 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126, s. 26, and DOWER.

Recto de dote unde nihil habet, a writ of right of dower whereof she had nothing, which lay where her deceased husband, having divers lands or tenements, had assured no dower to his wife, and she thereby was driven to sue for her thirds against the heir or his guardian. Abolished. See ibid.

Recto de rationabili parte, a writ of right, of the reasonable part, which lay between privies in blood, as brothers in gavelkind, sisters, and other coparceners, for land in fee-simple.—Fitz. N. B. 9.

Recto quando (or quia) dominus remisit curiam, a writ of right, when or because the lord had remitted his court, which lay where lands or tenements in the seignior of any land were in demand by a writ of right.—Fitz. N. B. 16.

Recto sur disclaimer, an abolished writ on disclaimer.

Rector, a governor; in ecclesiastical law, either a layman, sometimes called a 'lay rector' or 'lay impropiator,' who has that part of the revenues of a church which before the dissolution of the monasteries by King

Henry VIII. was appropriated to a monastery, the incumbent generally being a 'vicar'; or, in cases where the living had not been so impropriated and a spiritual person, the 'parson,' who has the whole revenues together with the cure of souls. See 1 Bl. Com. 384.

Rector, sinecure, one without cure of souls.

Rectorial Tithes, great or predial tithes.

Rectory, a spiritual non-impropriated living, composed of land, tithe, and other oblations of the people, separate or dedicate to God, in any congregation for the service of His Church there, and for the maintenance of the governor or the minister thereof, to whose charge the same is committed.—Spelm. Also, the house in which the rector resides. 'By the grant of a rectory or parsonage will pass the house, the glebe, the tithes, and offerings belong to it' (Shep. Touch. p. 93).

Rectum, right; also a trial or accusation.—Bract.

Rectum esse, to be right in court.

Rectum rogare, to ask for right; to petition the judge to do right.

Rectum, stare ad, to stand trial, or abide by the sentence of the Court.

Rectus in Curia, one who stands at the bar of a court, and no accusation is made against him; also said of an outlaw when he had reversed his outlawry.

Recuperatores, judges to whom the prætor referred a question.—Civ. Law.

Recusants, persons who wilfully absented themselves from their parish church, and on whom penalties were imposed by various statutes (e.g., 1 Eliz. c. 2, and 3 Jac. 1, c. 4; repealed by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 59) passed during the reigns of Elizabeth and James I. And see Canons 65, 66, by which Ministers are enjoined to denounce Recusants, and Ministers being Preachers to 'labour diligently with them from time to time thereby to reclaim them from their errors.'

Recusatio Judicis, a refusal of, or exception to, a judge upon any suspicion of partiality.—Civ. Law.

Red or Rede [fr. ræd, Sax.], advice.

Red-book of the Exchequer [liber rubens socaccarii, Lat.], an ancient record, wherein are registered the names of those who held lands per baroniam in the time of Henry II.—Ryley, 667. See Hary. Co. Lit. 68 b, Note (7).

Reddendo singula singulis, the method of construction applied in such a sentence as this, 'If any one shall draw or load any sword or gun'; the word 'draw' is applied to 'sword' only, and the word 'load' to 'gun' only, the former verb to the former noun, and the latter to the latter, because it is impossible to load a sword or draw a gun; and so of other applications of different sets of words to one another.

Reddendum, a clause reserving rent in a lease, whereby a lessor reserves some new thing to himself out of that which he granted before: it commonly and properly succeeds the habendum, and is usually made by the words 'yielding and paying,' or similar expressions importing a covenant if executed by the lessee. Consult Platt on Leases, vol. ii. p. 82. See DEED.

Redditarium, a rental of an estate or manor.

Redditarius, a renter.—Cowel.

Reddition, a surrendering or restoring; also, a judicial acknowledgment that the thing in demand belongs to the demandant, and not to the person surrendering (ibid.).

Redditit se (he has rendered himself), applied to a principal who renders himself to prison in discharge of his bail.

Redeemable Rights, rights which return to the conveyor or disposer of land, etc., upon payment of the sum for which such rights are granted.

Re-delivery, a yielding and delivering back of a thing.

Re-demise, a re-granting of land demised or released.

Redemption. 1. A paying off of a loan (see FUNDS). The term is used especially with reference to the paying off of a mortgage debt. An action of redemption is a suit brought to compel the mortgagee to reconvey the property to the mortgagor on the latter paying the mortgage debt. See EQUITY OF REDEMPTION; PROVISO FOR REDEMPTION.

2. Commutation or the substitution of one lump payment for a succession of annual ones: e.g., see the Land Tax and the Tithe Redemption Acts and many other statutes.

Re-development Areas. By ss. 34 et seq. of the Housing Act, 1936, a local authority may acquire an area of land by agreement or compulsorily for houses for the working classes if after an inspection for the purposes of detecting overcrowding under s. 1 of the Act or otherwise the authority is satisfied that the area contains fifty or more working-class houses, of which at least one-third are overcrowded or unfit for human habitation, and that the industrial and social conditions of the district are such that the area should be used for working-class houses and that the area should be re-developed as a whole for their accommodation. The authority must in those conditions prepare a re-development plan by reference to a map to be submitted to the Minister of Health for approval, and the Minister must hold a public inquiry if there is any objection, before giving or withholding or modifying the plan; in any other case approval may be given, qualified or withheld at the Minister's discretion. See s. 46, Sched. I., art. 5, and Sched. II., as to compensation, and the validity of compulsory purchase orders. The general provisions in Part V. of the Act, ss. 71-104, apply to re-development areas. As in the case of Clearance Orders, owners may offer to re-develop and recondition the area before the Minister of Health has approved a re-development plan (see ss. 51-53). See HOUSING.

Red-handed, with the marks of crime fresh on him.

Redhibition [fr. redhibitio, Lat.], an action allowed to a buyer by which to annul the sale of some movable, and to oblige the seller to take it back again upon the buyer finding it damaged, or that there was some deceit.—Civ. Law; Sand. Just.

Re-disseisin, a disseisin made by him who once before was bound and adjudged to have disseised the same person of his lands or tenements.—Fitz. N. B. 188; 1 Reeves, 263.

Redistribution of Seats (in the House of Commons). See HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Reditus albi, white rents—quit-rents by freeholders or ancient copyholders of a manor, reserved in silver or white money.—2 Bl. Com. 42.

Reditus assisus, a set or standing rent.

Reditus capitales, chief rents paid by freeholders to go quit of all other services.

Reditus nigri, black-mail, quit-rents paid in work, grain, or base money, as distinguished from reditus albi, or rents paid in silver.—2 Bl. Com. 43.

Reditus quieti, quit-rents; see that title.

Reditus siccus, a rent seek, or barren, the owner of which has neither seigniority nor reversion, nor any express power of distress reserved to him. See RENT.

Redmans, or Radmans, men who, by the tenure or custom of their lands, were to ride with or for the lord of the manor about his business.—Domesday.

Re-draft, a second bill of exchange.

Redubbers, persons who bought stolen cloth and turned it into some other colour or fashion, that it might not be known again.—3 Inst. 134.

Reductio ad absurdum, the method of disproving an argument by showing that it leads to an absurd consequence.

Reduction, an action for the purpose of setting aside or rendering null and void some deed, will, right, etc.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Reduction ex capite lecti. By the law of Scotland the heir in heritage was entitled to reduce all voluntary deeds granted to his prejudice by his predecessor within sixty days preceding the predecessor's death; provided the maker of the deed, at its date, was labouring under the disease of which he died, and did not subsequently go to kirk or market unsupported.—Bell's Scots Law Dict. But such reductions have now been abolished by the Reductions ex capite lecti.—Abolition Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 81).

Reduction Improbatio, one form of the action of reduction in which falsehood and forgery are alleged against the deed or document sought to be set aside.—Scots Law.

Redundancy, unnecessary or foreign matter inserted in a pleading.

Re-entry, the resuming or retaking that possession which one has lately foregone. A clause of this nature, called a 'proviso for re-entry,' is inserted in every properly drawn lease, empowering the lessor to re-enter upon the demised premises if the rent is in arrear for a certain period, e.g., twenty-one days, or if there shall be any breach of the lessee's covenants. A proviso for re-entry, strictly speaking, is only applicable to corporeal hereditaments; see Sitwell v. Londesborough (Earl of), 1906, 1 Ch. p. 465. A proviso for re-entry for breach of covenant has been denounced by a judge of the greatest eminence as 'a most odious stipulation' (Hodgkinson v. Crowe, (1875) L. R. 10 Ch. p. 626, per Sir Wm. James, L.J.), but in practice is certainly common enough. A proviso confined to the case of non-payment of rent is a 'usual' stipulation: see Re Anderton, (1890) 45 Ch. D. 476. A lease under the Settled Land Act, 1882, must contain a condition of re-entry on the rent not being paid within a specified time not exceeding thirty days (Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 7, sub-s. 3, reproduced and amended by s. 42, Settled Land Act, 1925; Sitwell v. Londesborough (Earl of), ubi sup.); see also Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 18 (7), now Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 99. See FORFEITURE.

Reeve [fr. gerefa, Sax.], a steward or bailiff. See DYKE-REEVE; FIELD-REEVE.

Re-examination, an examination of a witness after a cross-examination upon matters arising out of such cross-examination. If the re-examination disclose new matter which the cross-examining party could not anticipate, the Court in its discretion may permit him to cross-examine upon it.

Re-exchange is 'the difference in the value of a bill occasioned by its being dishonoured in a foreign country in which it was payable. The existence and amount of it depend on the rate of exchange between the two countries. The theory of the transaction is this: a merchant in London endorses a bill for a certain number of Austrian florins, payable at a future date in Vienna. The holder is entitled to receive in Vienna, on the day of the maturity of the bill, a certain number of Austrian florins. Suppose the bill to be dishonoured. The holder is now, by the custom of merchants, entitled to immediate and specific redress by his own act in this way: he is entitled, being in Vienna, then and there to raise the exact number of Austrian florins by drawing and negotiating a cross-bill, payable at sight on his endorser in London, for as much English money as will purchase in Vienna the exact number of Austrian florins at the rate of exchange on the day of dishonour; and to include in the amount of that bill the interest and necessary expenses of the transaction.'—Byles on Bills.

Re-extent, a second extent on lands or tenements, on complaint that the former was partially made, etc.

Re. Fa. Lo., the abbreviation of recordari facias loquelam, which see.

Refare, to bereave, take away, rob.

Referee, one to whom anything is referred; an arbitrator. Also, persons to whom are referred questions as to the locus standi of petitioners against private parliamentary Bills. Consult the works of Smethurst or Clifford and Stephens hereon.

Panels of referees are appointed to decide technical questions on appeal from departmental authorities under various statutes, see 8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 13 (licensing of stations); as to bulls, see that title; on valuation of machinery, see Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 90), s. 24; also Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 84), and other Acts. Reference committees may be appointed under the Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1929; Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 20), for compensation; and the Law of Property Act, 1925, in relation to releases or otherwise from restrictive covenants.

By s. 38 of the Workmen's Compensation

Act, 1925, legally qualified medical practitioners may be appointed as medical referees for the purposes of that Act. As to the appointment of referees under the Coal Mines Act, 1911, see s. 117; and as to courts of referees under the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 8), s. 41.

Reference was the sending of any matter of inquiry by the Court of Chancery to a chief clerk, a taxing master, or a conveying counsel, that he might examine it and certify the result to the Court. References in cases involving matters of account were also frequently made to the masters of the Courts of Common Law under the C. L. P. Acts.

The Judicature Acts and rules did not repeal the powers of reference to masters under the Common Law Procedure Acts (Judicature Act, 1873, s. 83) (see now Jud. Act, 1925, s. 125), but made provision for attaching to the Supreme Court permanent official referees, and four official referees were appointed shortly before that Act came into operation. To any of such official referees, or to a special referee, questions arising in an action may, by Jud. Act, 1925, ss. 88, 89, be referred: (1) subject to the right to a jury, for inquiry and report; or (2) where the parties consent, and also without such consent in any cause 'requiring any prolonged examination of documents or accounts or any scientific or local investigation which cannot, in the opinion of the Court, conveniently be made before a jury, or conducted by the Court through its other ordinary officers,' for trial.

The Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), as amended by the Arbitration Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 14), has amended and consolidated the law of references. See also ARBITRATION.

Reference, Incorporation by, of an earlier statute by a later one, judicially stigmatized in Knill v. Touse, (1889) 24 Q. B. D. 186, and Chislett v. Macbeth & Co., 1909, 2 K. B. at p. 815. See ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

Referendary, one to whose decision anything is referred.—Cowel: Spelm.

Referendum, a note addressed by an ambassador to his own government touching a proposition as to which he is without power and instructions.

Also, a mode, obtaining in Switzerland, and, under the Borough Funds Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 91), s. 4 (now repealed by the Local Government Act, 1933), and replaced by s. 255 and the 9th Sched., ibid., in England, of appealing from an elected body to the whole body of electors.

Reform Acts (2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 45 (1832), 30 & 31 Vict. c. 102 (1867) ), commonly called the Representation of the People Acts; and the Representation of the People Act, 1884 (48 Vict. c. 3): Acts for extending the parliamentary franchise. The Acts of 1832 and 1867 applied to England and Wales only, there being separate Acts for Scotland and Ireland at the same period: the Act of 1884 applied to Scotland and Ireland as well. See now Representation of the People Act, 1918 (7 & 8 Geo. 5, c. 64) (England, Wales and Scotland).

Reformatory Schools. Sect. 44 of the Children Act, 1908, defined a 'reformatory school' as 'a school for the industrial training of youthful offenders, in which youthful offenders are lodged, clothed, and fed, as well as taught.' As to the present law, see APPROVED SCHOOLS.

Refraction, reparation of a building.—Civ. Law.

Refresher. A further or additional fee allowed to counsel when a case heard on vivâ voce evidence lasts longer than one day. The allowance of refreshers is regulated by Ord. LXV., r. 27 (48).

Refreshment House, a house, etc., 'kept open for public refreshment, resort, and entertainment between 10 p.m. and 5 a.m.' (24 & 25 Vict. c. 91, s. 8), to keep which an Inland Revenue licence only is required, unless wine, etc., be sold therein, in which case a licence from the justices of the peace is required also. See also Refreshment Houses Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 27), and 39 & 40 Vict. c. 16, s. 4, as to wine licences and subsequent Licensing Acts, and 10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 24, s. 1, as to the certificates of justices. See PUBLIC-HOUSE CLOSING ACT; Chit. Stat., tit. 'Refreshment House.'

Refusal, where one has, by law, a right and power of having or doing something of advantage, and he declines it.

Regale episcoporum, the temporal rights and privileges of a bishop.

Regalia, the royal rights of a sovereign, which the civilians reckon to be six—viz., power of judicature, of life and death, of war and peace, masterless goods, as waifs, estrays, etc., assessments, and minting of money.

The crown, sceptre and other articles used at a coronation are also commonly called the regalia. For an account of the extraordinary attempt made by Col. Blood in 1673 to steal them from the Tower, see Scott's Peveril of the Peak, Centen. Ed., note BB.

Regalia facere, to do homage or fealty to the sovereign by a bishop when he is invested with the regalia.

Regality, a territorial jurisdiction in Scotland conferred by the Crown. The lands were said to be given in liberam regalitatem, and the persons receiving the right were termed lords of regality.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Regard, Court of, a tribunal held every third year for the lawing or expeditation of dogs, to prevent them from chasing deer.

Regard of the Forest, the oversight or inspection of it, or the office and province of the regarder, who is to go through the whole forest, and every bailiwick in it, before the holding of the sessions of the forest, or justice-seat, to see and inquire after trespassers, and for the survey of dogs.—Manw.

Regardant, Villein, or Regardant to the Manor, an ancient servant or retainer annexed to the manor or land, who did the base services within the manor.—Co. Litt. 120.

Regarder of the Forest, an ancient officer of the forest, whose duty it was to take a view of the forest hunts, and to inquire concerning trespasses, offences, etc.—Manw.

Rege inconsulto, a writ issued from the sovereign to the judges not to proceed in a cause which may prejudice the Crown until advised.—Jenk. Cent. 97.

Regency, a temporary monarchy—the rule of a person appointed to administer a kingdom during the incapacity, minority, or absence of the sovereign. The Regency Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 16), provides for the person next in line of succession to the Crown, if qualified, to be the 'Regent' during the minority or incapacity of the Sovereign.

Regest [fr. registum, Lat.], a register.—Milton.

Regiam Majestatem, a collection of the ancient laws of Scotland. It is said to have been compiled by order of David I., King of Scotland, who reigned from A.D. 1124 to 1153.—Hale's Hist. 271.

Regicide, the murder of a sovereign; also the murderer.

Regimental Debts Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 5), and the regulations made thereunder, provide for the payment of certain debts of a deceased person who was subject to military law out of the proceeds of his property in camp, etc., which property is to be seized by the committee of adjustment (q.v.).

Regio assensu, a writ whereby the sovereign gives his assent to the election of a bishop.—Reg. Brev. 294.

Register [fr. gter, Fr., to lodge], a public book serving to enter and record memoirs, Acts, and minutes, to be had recourse to for the establishing matters of fact; as the register of companies under the Companies Act, 1929; of bills of sale under the Bills of Sale Acts, 1878 and 1882; and Administration of Justice Act, 1925, s. 23; of births, deaths, and marriages, and of baptisms; and of parliamentary, municipal, county, district, and parochial electors.

Register of Writs, an old book in which new forms of original writs were entered. The Register of Writs is said to be the oldest book in the law—a character which may, in a great measure, be true, but should not be allowed without some consideration. It is not more certain than extraordinary that the forms of writs were settled in their substance and language very nearly in the manner in which they were drawn ever after. However, this uniformity was not so exact as that the writs published and used in the reign of Henry VIII. were all of them identically the same with those used at the first origin of this invention, in the reign of Henry II. It is not to be wondered at that there should be a difference in these forms at their infancy, and at this advanced state of our law; but it is remarkable that the difference should be so small.—4 Reeves, 426; Co. Litt. 16 b, 37 b, 159 a.

Registrar, or Registry, an officer whose business is to write and keep a register; as the Registrars of the Chancery Division of the High Court, who draw up the orders of the Court (see R. S. C. Ord. LXII.; Dan. Ch. Pr.; Seton on Judgments); the Registrar of a County Court under s. 1 of the County Courts Act, 1924. See now County Courts Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), ss. 16 et seq.: of solicitors, of which the Law Society shall perform the duties, Solicitors Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 1 (see INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY); of friendly societies under the Friendly Societies' Act, 1896, and many other statutes. See, e.g., COMPANIES; REGISTRATION OF TITLE.

Registrar, District. See DISTRICT REGISTRAR.

Registrar-General. See REGISTRATION OF BIRTHS, DEATHS AND MARRIAGES (Civil Registration).

Registrar-General of Shipping and Seamen. To secure the great object of affording general information from time to time as to the state of our mercantile marine, it is provided that there shall be in the Port of London a 'General Register and Record Office for Seamen,' under the management of this officer. See Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, ss. 251 et seq.

Registrarius, a notary or registrar.

Registration for Preservation. In Scotland any deed may be registered in the books of Council and Session for preservation (stamp 10s.); official extracts are equivalent to originals. See also WILLS.

Registration of Births, Deaths, and Marriages.

Ecclesiastical Registration.—The 70th Canon made in 1603 directs the churchwardens of every parish to provide a register, and the minister to enter baptisms, marriages, and burials therein; and the Parochial Registers Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 146), directs the rector, vicar, curate, or officiating minister to make and keep similar registers, the books to remain in their custody in an iron chest, and copies thereof to be transmitted annually to the registrars of each diocese. So much of this Act as related to marriages was repealed by the Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836. Consult Hubback on Succession, pp. 469 et seq.

Civil Registration.—A general registry office was established by the Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 86), by which district registrars are directed to send copies of registers of births, deaths, and marriages to superintendent registrars, who forward them to the Registrar-General. This Act was amended by the Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 22), and by the Marriage and Registration Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 119). The duty of registering births is thrown on parents and others, and the duty of registering deaths is thrown on relatives and others by the Births and Deaths Registration Acts (37 & 38 Vict. c. 88 and 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 64); the Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 48), as amended by the Public Health Act, 1936, and the Registration (Births, Stillbirths, Deaths and Marriages) Consolidated Regulations, 1927 (S. R. & O., 1927, No. 486).

The registration of births, deaths and marriages occurring outside the United Kingdom among officers and soldiers in the army and their families is regulated by the Registration of Births, Deaths and Marriages (Army) Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 8); and see BIRTHS, MARRIAGES AND DEATHS.

Registration of Charges on Land, for the registration of charges affecting land, and for the protection of purchasers for value of the land in case of non-registration ; and for allowing searches of the registers on payment of fees. See LAND CHARGES.

Registration of Companies. See COMPANY.

Registration of Copyright. The Copyright Act, 1842, authorizing in every case of copyright the registration of the title of the proprietor at Stationers' Hall, and providing that, without previous registration, no action should be commenced, was repealed by the Copyright Act, 1911, and no such registration is now necessary.

Registration of Deeds and Wills affecting Land. See MIDDLESEX ; YORKSHIRE ; BEDFORD LEVEL.

Registration of Electors. The representation of the People Act, 1918, provides for the preparation of a spring and an autumn register in each year by the registration officer for each parliamentary borough or county. This officer is the clerk of the county or the town clerk (see Part II. of the Act, ss. 11 et seq.). See (as amended 12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 12, and Local Gov. Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51)).

Registration of Title to Land. The Land Registration Act, 1925 (15 Geo. 5, c. 21), repeals and re-enacts the Land Transfer Acts, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87) and 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), with amendments in keeping with innovations which were introduced by the property laws of 1925. Its object is to simplify the indicia of land ownership and transfer by mere inscription and transcription in a register. The advantages which are claimed for the system are (a) purchasers for value of an absolute or good leasehold title are absolved from any inquiry into the title other than it is shown to be on the register ; (b) certain equitable claims which would be binding on the land under the general law and cannot be removed or over-reached without onerous formalities do not affect such purchasers ; (c) the method of conveyance or charge is simple ; (d) subject to the statutory provisions, registration guarantees the title to purchasers for value and mortgagees. It should be observed that mines and minerals which have been excepted from a grant of land are not guaranteed unless separately registered. All registered land, irrespective of the nature of title, remains subject to 'over-riding interests.' See below, notwithstanding registration.

All estates and interests in land which come under the description of 'legal estates' in s. 3 of the L. R. Act, 1925, and ss. 1 and 205 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, may, and in districts where registration is compulsory must, as a rule be registered except leaseholds having not more than 21 years unexpired, and except all mortgage terms where there is a subsisting right of redemption (see s. 8, Land Registration Act, 1925). But the latter exception has little practical importance, for the reasons that charges, which for all practical purposes are equivalent to a mortgage, may be registered under s. 25 of the L. R. Act, 1925 (see s. 27, ibid., and see ss. 86 and 87 of the Law of Property Act, 1925).

Registration is compulsory in the counties of London, Middlesex (q.v.), County Borough of Eastbourne (Order in Council, S. R. & O., 1926, No. 1262, as from 1st January, 1925). and County Borough of Hastings (O. C., 1928, No. 253, as from 1st January, 1929). Compulsory registration may be introduced in any county or part of a county by Order in Council at the instance of a county, or county borough council, or otherwise (see ss. 120 et seq.). In a compulsory area, land may but need not be registered until, in the case of freehold land, a sale takes place, and in the case of leasehold land, a grant or sale of a term thereout having not less than forty years to run is effected. The penalty for not registering land in a compulsory area within two months from the date of conveyance is that the purchaser will not acquire the legal estate, and until that takes place the purchaser is open to the risk of the vendor establishing or perfecting equities against him and even fraudulently conveying the same land to another purchaser, who may obtain a perfect title if he registers his conveyance before the prior purchaser.

Freehold land may be registered with absolute, qualified, or possessory title, leaseholds of which more than twenty-one years are still unexpired, with absolute, qualified, good leasehold, or possessory title. Registration with absolute title, of either tenure, confers on purchasers for value all the advantages referred to. Registration with qualified title is granted where it appears to the registrar that the title can only be established for a limited period or subject to reservations. Registration in this form is seldom effected. Registration with possessory title gives the registered proprietor no guarantee of title other than the registered title for what that may be worth, nor does it absolve a purchaser from inquiring into the vendor's title under the general law prior to registration (ss. 6 and 20 (3)). But a possessory registered title confers on the registered proprietor and purchasers from him all the advantages of registration in respect of matters arising subsequently to registration, and further, under s. 77, the registrar may change the possessory into absolute title under the statutory conditions if the land was registered before the 1st January, 1926, or, if first registered after that date the title has been possessory for fifteen years (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 172).

The same incidents, according to the quality of the title, attach to registered leaseholds to the extent of the term and estate which has been registered.

Registration with 'good leasehold' title confers the same privileges and is subject to the same incumbrances and interests (if any) as registration with 'absolute' title, except that 'good leasehold' does not include a guarantee of the lease itself. Registration with qualified title is the same as 'absolute' but without prejudice to any excepted rights appearing on the register. Registration with possessory title gives such privileges as are conferred on possessory titles of freeholds and no more to the extent of the registered leasehold estate.

A purchaser for value of registered land with any title but possessory is not affected by trusts, express, implied, or constructive (s. 74). A possessory title is affected by trusts arising prior to the first registration, of which the purchaser has actual or constructive notice either upon investigation of title or otherwise if these trusts have not been over-reached upon conveyance under the Law of Property or Settled Land Acts, 1925.

The incumbrances and other liabilities to which all registered land is subject are:—

(a) All entered on the register at the time of first registration.

(b) Those entered subsequently to the first registration.

- (i.) Charges (s. 25).
- (ii.) Notices of leases (s. 48).
- (iii.) Annuities and rentcharges (s. 49).
- (iv.) Severance of mines and minerals (s. 49).
- (v.) Land charges under the Land Charges Act, 1925 (ss. 3, 49 and 59, L. R. Act).
- (vi.) Widow's rights.
- (vii.) Notices by creditors and others (ss. 49, 59 and 61).

(viii.) Restrictive covenants (s. 50).

(x.) Certain over-riding incidents (s. 70 (3)).

(xi.) Notice of lien by deposit of certificate (s. 66).

(xii.) Priority notices (s. 88).

(xiv.) Notices as to a sole trustee of registered land (s. 99).

The priority of these incumbrances is regulated by the date of entry on the Land Register. It should be observed that registration under the Land Charges Act, 1925, does not affect registered land (see s. 110 (7) L. R. Act, and Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 23 (1)), except local land charges, which obtain priority according to the date of registration in the local register. Under the Land Charges Act, s. 15 (8), incumbrances are protected (1) by means of caution or restriction against the registered proprietor (ss. 54 and 58). Strictly speaking, cautions and restrictions are not incumbrances on the land, but they serve to give the persons entitled time to assert their rights, if any. (2) By entry or notice of the incumbrance (s. 79 and L. R. R. 1925, 190); on the charges register (s. 25). (3) In addition to these, s. 57 confers a remedy styled inhibition, which is analogous to an injunction. As to bankruptcy, s. 61 and L. R. R. 1925, 229, provide for bankruptcy and priority inhibitions.

A large number of incumbrances in the usual and even the legal sense of the term are protected by law and are not prejudiced or affected by registration of the land under the L. R. Act, 1925. Such incumbrances are included in the term 'over-riding interests,' a list of which is given in s. 70. Rights to mines and minerals are over-riding interests on land registered before 1898, and so are all such rights if created before first registration of the land after 1898 and before 1926. Mines and minerals in respect of land registered after 1925 are now included in the word 'land' by the Act, subject to its provisions. Persons interested in the transfer or charge of registered land should be careful to make all proper inquiries outside the Land Registry in regard to the many important incumbrances, claims, charges and other matters included in the list contained in s. 70.

Claims by beneficiaries and others which would be over-reached upon sale by trustees for sale or under the Settled Land Act, 1925, or otherwise as provided by the Law of Property Act, 1925 (see s. 2, ibid.), are not over-riding interests and are classed among minor interests (see ss. 3 (xv.), 101 to 103, 105), and being equitable will be over-ridden by a registered disposition for value subject to the entries on the register. A purchaser for value is not concerned with anything not appearing on the register, but, as between minor interests, those interests, which, if the Law of Property Acts, 1922 and 1925, had not been passed, would have been legal estates, have priority over other minor interests, and as regards dealings effected after 1925 between assignees and incumbrancers of life interests, remainders, reversions and executory interests, priority is established by order of special priority cautions or inhibitions, noted in a 'Minor Interests Index,' which does not concern a purchaser of the land from a registered proprietor. Death duties after 1925, even if registered, do not affect a purchaser for money or money's worth of registered land, but with that exception they affect the registered proprietor and the land if entered on the register (see s. 73).

On first registration the first registered proprietor of any land is affected by all minor interests of which he has notice under the general law, and subsequent registered proprietors not being purchasers for value are under the same liability in regard to minor interests which affected the registered proprietor at the time of transfer to them (s. 20 (4)).

Upon registration the proprietor becomes entitled to the issue to him of a certificate called the 'Land Certificate' or Charge Certificate, as the case may be, which is evidence of the matters appearing therein (s. 58). The land certificate is conclusive evidence of the state of the register up to the time but not later than the date of its last issue from the registry. Subsequent entries (if any) are ascertained by inquiry at the Land Registry. The certificate must, as a rule, be produced by any person requiring an entry or notice on the register, and must be produced at the registry and endorsed on every important dealing by the proprietor (see s. 64). The register is in three parts :—

1. The property register, or parcels by reference to the Land Registry General Map or to a filed plan.

2. The proprietorship register, stating the nature of the title, e.g., absolute, good leasehold, possessory, etc., and the name and description of the registered proprietor.

3. The charges register, notifying incumbrances, e.g., registrable leases, and charges, mortgages, restrictive covenants, etc.

As a rule (see L. R. Rules, 1925, 287 to 297), no one but the proprietor of the land or of any charge or incumbrance thereon may inspect any entry on the register or any document in the custody of the registrar without authority of the proprietor of the land or any such charge or incumbrance. Any person authorized to inspect may apply for an official search against the title, charge or incumbrance, and obtain a certificate of the result from the registrar. The certificate is conclusive and comprehensive of all registered matters affecting the title or object of search. The search at the Land Registry is more conveniently practical for intending purchasers or incumbrancers than a search under the Land Charges Act, 1925, which must be made by reference to the names of proprietors and incumbrancers, who may be numerous and not easily identified. The search at the Land Registry is made by reference to the land registered and is made possible by the system of mapping and indexing, which has been brought to great perfection at the registry. For the practice and procedure fees and legal charges at the Land Registry, consult Fortescue-Brickdale and Steward-Wallace on the Land Registration Act, 1925.

Registration of Trade Marks. See TRADE MARKS.

Registrum Brevium, a register of writs. See WRIT.

Registry, District. See DISTRICT REGISTRIES.

Registry of Ships. The registry of ships appears to have been introduced into this country by the Navigation Act (12 Car. 2, c. 18, A.D. 1660); several provisions were made with respect to it by 7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 22, and the whole was reduced into a system by the 27 Geo. 3, c. 19. It is now provided for by Part I. of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), Chit. Stat., tit. 'Shipping,' by which (s. 2) every British ship must be registered under the Act, except (s. 3) 'ships not exceeding fifteen tons burden employed solely in navigation on the rivers or coasts of the United Kingdom, or on the rivers or coasts of some British possession within which the managing owners of the ships are resident,' and 'ships not exceeding thirty tons burden, and not having a whole or fixed deck and employed solely in fishing or trading coastwise on the shores of Newfoundland or parts adjacent thereto, or in the Gulf of Saint Lawrence, or on such portions of the coasts of Canada as lie bordering on that gulf.

Regius Professor, a royal professor, or reader of lectures, founded in the universities by the King. Henry VIII. founded in each of the universities of Oxford and Cambridge five professorships—viz., of Divinity, Greek, Hebrew, Law, and Physic.

Regnal Year. The year as calculated from the sovereign's accession to the throne—e.g., 6 Geo. V. means the sixth year since the accession of George the Fifth on May 6th, 1910, i.e., 6th May, 1915, to 5th May, 1916. For Table of Regnal Years, see Chitty's Statutes, vol. xvi., p. 53.

Regnant, reigning, having regal authority. See KING; and 2 Steph. Com.

Regni populi, a name given to the people of Surrey and Sussex, and on the sea-coasts of Hampshire.—Blount.

Regnum ecclesiasticum, the ecclesiastical kingdom.—2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 324.

Regrating, buying corn, etc., in any market, and selling it again in or near to the same place. It was illegal, but is, by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 24, now no longer so. See FORESTALLING THE MARKET.

Regress, Letters of. They were granted by the superior of lands mortgaged to the wadsettor or mortgagor. Their object was this: by the wadset or mortgage, the mortgagor was completely divested, and when he redeemed, he appeared to claim an entry from the superior as a stranger, and the superior was no more bound to receive the mortgagor than he would have been forced to receive any third party; to remedy this, letters of regress were granted by the superior under which he became bound to re-admit the wadsettor at any time when he should demand entry.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Regulæ generales (General Rules), which the courts promulgate from time to time for the regulation of their practice. Before the Judicature Act the more important of these were those promulgated in Hilary Term, 1853, abbreviated as 'R. G. H. T. 1853.' Since the Judicature Act the description is 'Rules of the Supreme Court,' abbreviated as 'R. S. C.'

Regular Clergy, the monks, who lived secundum regulas of their respective houses or societies.—2 Steph. Com.

Regulars, those who profess and follow a certain rule of life (regula), belonging to a religious order, and observe the three approved vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience.

Rehabere facias seisinam, a judicial writ which lay when the sheriff in the habere facias seisinam had delivered more than he ought.—Reg. Judic. 13.

Rehabilitate, to restore a delinquent to former rank, privilege, or right; to qualify again; to restore a forfeited right.

Re-hearing. See APPEAL.

Reif [fr. reifan, Sax.], a robbery.

Re-insurance or Re-assurance, a contract by which a first insurer relieves himself from the risks which he has undertaken, and devolves them upon other insurers, called re-insurers or re-assurers.

Rejoinder, a defendant's answer to a plaintiff's reply, which must have been delivered within four days after notice, unless the defendant was under any terms of 'rejoining gratis,' which meant rejoining within four days from the delivery of the replication without a notice to rejoin, or a demand of a rejoinder.

By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXIII., no pleading subsequent to reply, other than a joinder of issue, may be pleaded without leave, except in Admiralty actions, and subject to this rule every pleading subsequent to reply must be delivered within four days after the delivery of the previous pleading. The pleadings subsequent to reply are Rejoinder, Surrejoinder, Rebutter and Surrebutter (see those titles).

Relation, where two different times or other things are accounted as one, and by some act done the thing subsequent is said to take effect 'by relation' from the time preceding. Thus letters of administration relate back to the intestate's death, and not to the time when they were granted; see Re Pryse, 1904, P. 301; Foster v. Bates, (1843) 12 M. & W. 226. See FORFEITURE; BANKRUPTCY; TRESPASS.

Relations, a general word meaning, primæ facie, next-of-kin of any degree or, colloquially, kindred of all degrees.

Relator, a rehearser, teller, or informer. It was the name given to a plaintiff in an information in Chancery, where the rights of the Crown were not immediately concerned, who was responsible for costs; he must have given the solicitor a written authority to file the information.—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 11. For the former information in Chancery an action is now substituted (see R. S. C. Ord. 1., r. 1), but the term 'relator' is still in use as meaning the person responsible for costs at whose suggestion an action is commenced by the Attorney-General.

Also, a person who brings an information in the nature of a quo warranto, or a criminal information.

Release [fr. relatio, Lat.], a gift, discharge, or renunciation of a right of action (see SURETY, CONSIDERATION); also a Common Law conveyance of a larger estate, or a remainder, or reversion to one already in possession, the operative verb in which is 'release'; hence the name. It operates or inures in five modes:—

(a) By passing an estate to one or more already in possession (mitter l'estate), as where a coparcener conveys his estate to his coparcener, or where one of more than two joint tenants conveys his interest to one or more but not all of the others so as to sever that share. It also operates without mitter l'estate where one joint tenant releases his estate to the other, or all the other joint tenants so as not to create a severance. See Halsbury, L. of E., tit. 'Release.' In consequence of the privity between such parties, a fee-simple will pass without any words of limitation. Tenants in common, however, could not thus release to one another, since they had distinct interests in the property. They now are equitably interested only in proceeds of sale. See UNDIVIDED SHARES, and the question of the release of a legal estate does not arise, but the interest can be released.

(b) By transferring a right (mitter le droit), as in the case of a disseisee discharging his right to a disseisor, his heir, or grantee. Words of limitation are not necessary, since the subject of transfer is a simple right, which once discharged is for ever extinguished, and not an estate which may be qualified or restricted.

The difference between this and the previous mode is, that the former passes an estate, where a privity exists between the parties; this passes only a right in the absence of privity.

(c) By extinguishment, as the lord releasing his seigniorial rights to his tenant, or a life tenant having conveyed a greater estate than he owns, the expectant releasing his right to the tenant's grantee. A release of all demands extinguishes all actions and titles, and is the amplest discharge that can be given.

(d) By enlarging a particular estate into an estate commensurate with that of the person releasing; but a privity of estate must at the time exist between the releasor and the releasee, who must have an estate actually vested in him susceptible of enlargement.

(e) By entry and feoffment, as a disseisee releasing to one of two disseisors, who then becomes as solely seised as if the disseisee had entered upon the property, put an end to the disseisin, and then enfeoffed such disseisor. Consult Jac. Law Dict.; Shep. Touch. c. xix.

In modern practice a release generally means a discharge under seal of a right of action, or of some claim or demand upon another person—most commonly, perhaps, the formal discharge given by beneficiaries to trustees on the winding-up of a trust. A trustee cannot ordinarily insist on a release under seal; he is only entitled (in the absence of special circumstances) to a simple receipt for the funds he hands over, but in practice a release is often given him. A release, however wide its terms, does not extend beyond the matters expressly in the contemplation of the parties, and every claim intended to be released should therefore be mentioned in the recitals.

A release in general terms upon surrender of a lease does not impliedly release from past breaches of covenant, only the future. (Richmond v. Savill, 1926, 2 K. B. 530.) Consult Dav. Prec. in Con., vol. v., pt. ii.

Releasee, the person to whom a release is made.

Releaser or Releasor, the maker of a release.

Relegation, exile; judicial banishment.

Abjuration, i.e., a deportation for ever into a foreign land, is a civil death; relegation is banishment for a time only.—Co. Litt. 133 a. In Rome, relegation was a less severe punishment than deportation, in that the relegated person did not thereby lose the rights of a Roman citizen, nor those of his family, as the authority of a father over his children, etc.—Sand. Just.

Relevancy. In Scots law the relevancy is the justice or sufficiency in law of the allegations of a party. A plea to the relevancy is therefore analogous to the demurrer of the English courts.

Relevant, applying to the matter in question; affording something to the purpose; especially of evidence as meaning supporting the contention of a party to a suit.

Rellet, a widow.

Relicta verifications. Where a judgment was confessed by cognovit actionem after plea pleaded, and the plea was withdrawn, it was called a confession or cognovit actionem relictâ verificatione.—2 Chit. Arch. Proc.

Formerly, a defendant who had pleaded a bad plea which was demurred to, could withdraw it by entering a relicta verificatione, upon which he would not have to pay costs until the plaintiff obtained judgment in the action; but by Reg. Gen. H. T. 1853, r. 8, 'a defendant shall not be at liberty to waive his plea, or enter a relicta verificatione after a demurrer, without leave of the Court or a judge, unless by consent of the plaintiff or his attorney.'—2 Chit. Arch. Prac.

Relletion, the sudden recession of the sea from land. See DERELICT LANDS.

Relief, legal remedy for wrongs, etc.; charitable assistance.

In the feudal law a payment made to the lord by the tenant coming into possession of an estate held under him. Abolished with other feudal grievances.

Relief with respect to Election Offences.

If a candidate at a parliamentary or municipal election has become responsible in respect of an election offence committed unwittingly, or which he has taken all reasonable means to prevent, he can apply for relief at the trial of an election petition, or if no petition is on the record, to the High Court, under Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 51), the application being usually to a Divisional Court: see Shaw v. Reckitt, 1893, 1 Q. B. 779; 2 Q. B. 59; and as to municipal elections under the Municipal Elections (Corrupt and Illegal Practices) Act, 1884, ss. 7 and 8, see Nichol v. Fearby, 1923, 1 K. B. 480.

Relief against Forfeiture of Lease. See FORFEITURE; and see TRUSTEES.

Religion. To deny the Christian religion, after having been brought up in or professed it, is an offence against the Blasphemy Act (see BLASPHEMY); and the uniformity of religious worship in the Church of England is enjoined by the Act of Uniformity (14 Car. 2, c. 4); but restrictions on religious worship by Nonconformists are removed by the Toleration Act (1 W. & M. c. 15), and other Acts. The Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829, however, subjects Jesuits and members of other religious orders in the Church of Rome (except nuns) to banishment for life; but this part of the Act is virtually a dead letter: see Re Smith, 1914, 1 Ch. 937. See JESUITS; ROMAN CATHOLICS; and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Religious Worship.'

Religious Men [fr. religiosus.], such as entered into some monastery or convent, there to live devoutly. They were held to be civiler mortui.

Relinquishment, forsaking, or giving up.

Reliqua, the remainder or debt which a person finds himself debtor in upon the balancing or liquidation of an account. Hence reliquary, the debtor of a reliqua; as also a person who only pays piecemeal.

Reliques, remains, such as the bones, etc., of saints, preserved with great veneration as sacred memorials; they have been forbidden to be used or brought into England.—3 Jac. 1, c. 26.

Relocation, a reletting or renewal of a lease; a tacit relocation is permitting a tenant to hold over without any new agreement.—Scots Law.

Rem, Action in, in the Admiralty Court. By proceedings in rem the property in relation to which the claim is made, or the proceeds of such property in court, can be made available to answer the claim, and be proceeded against. See Williams and Bruce, Adm. Pr. 186. See ADMIRALTY.

Rem, Information in, when any goods are supposed to become the property of the Crown, and no one appears to claim them or to dispute the title, as anciently in the case of treasure-trove, wrecks, waifs, and estrays seized by the Crown's officers. After such seizure an information was usually filed in the Exchequer, and thereupon a proclamation was made for the owner (if any) to come in and claim the effects, and at the same time there issued a commission of appraisement to value the goods, after the return of which and a second proclamation made, if no claimant appeared, the goods were supposed derelict, and condemned to the use of the Crown; and when in later times forfeitures of the goods themselves, as well as personal penalties on the parties, were inflicted by Act of Parliament for transgressions against the laws of the customs and excise, the same process was adopted in order to secure such forfeited goods for the public use, though the offender had escaped justice. See 18 & 19 Vict. c. 90 as to the Crown paying costs. See now ACTION. Consult Robertson on the Crown.

Rem, Judgment in, is an adjudication pronounced upon the status of some particular subject-matter by a tribunal having competent jurisdiction and concluding all persons (not merely the parties to the proceedings) from saying that the status of the thing adjudicated upon was not such as declared by the adjudication (Res v. Hartington, 4 E. & B. 780; and see Castrique v. Imrie, 8 C. B. N. S. 1, 405, and L. R. 4 H. L. 414). Where a court rei sita has control over the thing and jurisdiction to decide as to its disposition, the adjudication is conclusive against the world. See opinion of judges, per Blackburn, J., in the House of Lords, supra. The chief instances are in the Admiralty Courts; foreign judgments, declaring status of a ship; or in the matrimonial causes, etc.; grants of probate or administration; condemnation of goods by a competent tribunal (Geyer v. Aquilar, 7 T. R. 696; and as to highways, Wakefield Corporation v. Cooke, 1904, A. C. 31. See The Duchess of Kingston's case, and notes thereto, 2 Sm. L. C.

Remainder [fr. remanentia, Lat.], that expectant portion, remnant, or residue of interest which, on the creation of a particular estate, is at the same time limited over to another, who is to enjoy it after the determination of such particular estate.

After 1925 remainders can operate only as equitable interests, and in that manner they can be created in respect of personalty as well as realty. The following explanation of legal remainders has been retained as relating to titles to land existing before 1926, and see Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 4, as to the construction of equitable interests.

A remainder may be limited in all freehold estates, but not strictly and technically in chattels real and personal, although these may be limited over after a previous limitation or a partial interest in them. It may be limited by way of use (which is, in practice, the usual method), as well as by a conveyance deriving its effect from the Common Law.

In the same land there may at the same time be an estate in possession, and one estate or several estates in remainder, and an estate in reversion.

When the estate in possession is determined, the estate in remainder (if there be any), otherwise the estate in reversion, will become an estate in possession, with priority as to the estates in remainder, when there are several, according to the order in which they are limited.

An interest in possession and an interest in remainder or reversion are several parts of the same estate. When there are a particular estate and a remainder, the several limitations give distinct interests to the persons to whom these limitations are made.

These interests (different as they are in their nature), and also a reversion, are with reference to the person by whom the limitations are made, and the connection and relative situation of the tenants, several parts of the same estate.

Estates are said to be in remainder or reversion according to the relative situation they bear to each other.

The interest which as to one man is an estate in remainder, may, as to another person, be an estate in reversion. Thus if A. leases to B. for life, with remainder to C. in fee, and C. leases to D. for life, the estate of C. is still a remainder in reference to the estate of B., but in reference to the estate of D. it is a reversion.

So an estate which as to one person is an estate in possession, or a particular estate, may, as to another person, be an estate in reversion; and consequently there may be two reversions in the same land. As if A. lease to B. for life, B. has the possession and A. the reversion as between themselves; and if B. lease to C., then as between B. and C., C. has the possession and B. the reversion; hence the doctrine of privity of estate.

A remainder does not, like a reversion, arise by operation of law, but is always created by act of parties. It may be granted over, charged, devised, or barred by a prior tenant in tail. Mr. Burton (Comp. pl. 28) thus indicates the difference between a reversion and a remainder:

'If the gift were simply "to you for your life," the reversion in fee-simple would remain in the feoffor. But this consequence would be varied if the gift were "to you for your life, and after your decease to A. and his heirs"; or "to you for twenty-one years, and subject to that estate to A. and his heirs"; or "to you and the heirs of your body" (which would constitute an estate tail), "and upon your decease, and failure of your issue, to A. and his heirs." In any of these three cases A. would take an estate in fee-simple, giving him a right to the possession of the land upon the death of the feoffee, or the expiration of twenty-one years, or the extinction of the feoffee and his issue. But this estate is not called a reversion—as the land does not revert or return to the feoffor—but a remainder, being the residue or remnant of the whole estate conveyed, after subtracting the feoffee's estate; which last, in relation to the remainder, as in this, or to the reversion, as in the former, case is called the particular estate.'

Remainders are of three kinds:—(1) vested or executed; (2) contingent or executory; and (3) cross.

The seven following rules affecting the remainders should be observed:—

(1) There must be a present or particular estate created which, if the remainder be vested, must be, at least, for years, but an interesse termini would be sufficient; or, if the remainder be contingent, it must be an estate of freehold, expressly limited, or arising by a resulting or implied use in order to give such a remainder existence. A chattel interest will not support a contingent remainder, since, while the contingency is in suspense, there must be an ulterior estate of freehold vested in some person, for otherwise there would be no vested freehold at law, which the law will not allow. There is not, however, any necessity for a preceding freehold to support a contingent remainder for years; for such a remainder not amounting to a freehold, no freehold estate appears requisite to pass out of the grantor in order to give effect to a chattel remainder.

An Act of 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 76) converted future contingent remainders into executory interests which were not hampered in the same way, but the Real Property Act, 1845, repealed this Act, and restored the rules relating to contingent remainders to their pristine vigour although the Act had abolished real actions on which they were largely based. This Act, however, provided that the accidental determination by forfeiture, surrender or merger of a preceding estate of freehold should not affect the estate in contingent remainder, but it was not until the Contingent Remainders Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 33), was passed that the liberal purpose of the Act of 1844 was restored by providing that every contingent remainder created after the 2nd August, 1877, which would have been valid as a springing or shifting use or executory devise or other limitation had it not had a sufficient estate to support it as a contingent remainder should be capable of taking effect as a springing or shifting use or executory devise or limitation. The Act of 1877 was repealed by the Law of Property (Amendment) Act, 1924, 10th Sched.

(2) The particular estate and the remainders must be created by the same deed or instrument, but a will and codicil may be fairly denominated the same instrument, for they take effect at the same time; and a deed giving a power, and the appointment exercising such power, are esteemed the same deed.

(3) The remainder must vest in the grantee during the particular estate, or the very instant it determines. But an estate limited on a contingency may fail as to one part, and take effect as to another, wherever the preceding estate is in several persons in common or in severalty; for the particular tenant of one part may die before the contingency, and the particular tenant of another part may survive it. Posthumous children are capable of taking in remainder in the same manner as if they had been born in their father's lifetime, and the remainder vests in them while yet in ventre matris.—10 & 11 Wm. 3, c. 16.

(4) A contingent remainder must be limited, upon a legal event, to some one that may by common possibility be in being, at or before the determination of the particular estate.

(5) It is not necessary for the support of a contingent remainder that the preceding estate of freehold continue in the actual seisin of the rightful tenant; it is sufficient that there subsists a right to such preceding estate at the time the remainder should vest, provided such right be a present subsisting right of entry preceding the contingency, and not a right of action. It is necessary to distinguish between a right of entry and a right of action. If A. is disseised by B., then, while the possession continues in B., it is a mere possession unsupported by any presumption of right, and A. may restore his possession by an entry on the land, without any previous action. If A. enter and B. defend his possession, and the question is tried in a possessory action, the gist of it must be who has the better title to the possession, and A. must necessarily recover. Thus far the party disseised, even during the disseisin, is considered in law to be the rightful tenant. But if B. continue in the possession of the estate till his decease, the law, at his decease, casts the possession upon his heir; thus, upon B.'s decease his heir acquires the possession by act of law, and his title, though immediately derived from a person who himself acquired it by wrong, is so far respected in law that A. cannot restore his possession by entry, and can only recover it by action. This removes A.'s title one degree farther than while he could restore his possession by entry, and is therefore said to reduce him to a right of action, and it is called a right of action in contradistinction to a right of entry.

(6) Where a contingent remainder is limited to the use of several who do not all become capable at the same time, notwithstanding it vests in the person first becoming capable, yet it shall divest as to the proportions of the persons afterwards becoming capable, before the determination of the particular estate.

(7) If a condition be annexed to a particular estate, making it void on a given event, and a remainder be limited to take effect not only on the determination of the particular estate but on the destruction of that estate, by the effect of the condition the remainder is void; the Common Law rule being that a stranger shall not take advantage of a condition, but only the grantor or his heirs. But if the condition for defeating the prior estate be to operate on one event, and the remainder be to arise on another and totally different event, the remainder will not be void, but the particular estate will be discharged from the condition. If A. make a feoffment to B., a widow, for life, provided that if she marry again, then her estate shall cease, and immediately after her death or second marriage the estate shall enure to B. in fee, this is a bad remainder; because it is limited to take effect, not only on the determination of the widow's estate, but also on the event which is mentioned in the condition to cut that estate short—namely, her second marriage; but if the remainder had been introduced without the words in italics, then it would have been a good contingent remainder, and the condition would be viewed as surplusage.—Fearne's Cont. Rem. 270. So, if the limitation had been to the widow durante viduitate, the remainder would have been good; as then her death or second marriage would have been the natural period for the determination of her estate. But if the remainder had been introduced by the words 'from and immediately after the determination of that estate,' it would be liable to objection, on the ground that the remainder-man would be taking advantage of the condition unless the word 'determination' could be construed to refer to the death only of the widow, and not to her second marriage.

But such a remainder is supported, as a conditional limitation, in wills and conveyances under the Statute of Uses.

A remainder is to commence when the particular estate is, from its very nature, to determine; it is, as it were, a continuance of the same estate; it is a part of the same whole. A conditional limitation is not a continuance of the estate first limited, but is entirely a different and separate estate. It is not to commence on the determination of the first, but the first is to determine when the latter commences. It is the commencement of the latter which rescinds and destroys the former, and not the ceasing of the former which gives existence to the latter. The particular estate and remainders are, in fact, as the very terms imply, but one and the same estate. The estate first appointed, and the conditional limitations, are separate and distinct estates. See CONTINGENT REMAINDERS; CROSS-REMAINDERS; VESTED REMAINDER; EXECUTORY DEVISE.

Remainder-man, a general term for a person entitled to an expectant estate. See last title.

Remand, to re-commit, or send back to prison, one charged before a magistrate (see Indictable Offences Act, 1848, s. 21, and Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 1848, s. 16, and 1879, s. 24), in the first instance for the sake of allowing further evidence to be collected and adduced at a further hearing.

Remanent pro defectu emptorum (they remain unsold for want of buyers). A sheriff's return to a writ of fi. fa.

Remanet, the name given to a cause the trial of which has been postponed from one sittings to another. A new notice of trial does not seem to be necessary either when a cause has been made a remanet at the assizes, or when it has been made a remanet from one sittings to another, or has been put off by order of Nisi Prius. See A. P., notes to R. S. C. Ord. XXXVI., r. 34.

Costs incurred for witnesses, etc., are allowed to the party ultimately prevailing.

Also the unexpired part of a sentence in Criminal Law. See SENTENCE.

Remedial Statutes, those which are made to supply such defects, and abridge such superfluities in the Common Law, as arise either from the general imperfection of all human laws, from change of time and circumstances, from the mistakes and unadvised determinations of unlearned judges, or from any other cause. This being effected either by enlarging the Common Law where it is too narrow and circumscribed, or by restraining it where it is too lax and luxuriant, has occasioned a division of remedial Acts of Parliament into enlarging and restraining statutes.—1 Bl. Com. 86.

Remedy, the legal means to enforce or recover a right. Also, a certain allowance for variation from the standard weight and fineness of coins: see Coinage Act, 1870, s. 3.

Remembrancer, an officer of the Exchequer. See QUEEN'S REMEMBRANCER; now KING'S.

Remise, to surrender or return; to release.

Remission, a pardon from the Crown, passed under the Great Seal; a release.

Remitment, the act of sending back to custody: an annulment.

Remittance, money sent by one person to another, either in specie, bill of exchange, cheque, or otherwise.

Remittee, the person to whom a remittance is sent.

Remitter. Where he who has the right of entry in lands, but is out of possession, obtains afterwards the possession of the lands by some subsequent, and, of course, defective title, he is remitted or sent back, by operation of law, to his ancient and more certain title. The possession which he has gained by a bad title is ipso facto annexed to his own inherent good one; and his defeasible estate is utterly defeated and annulled by the instantaneous act of law, without his participation or consent. As if A. disseise B., i.e., turn him out of possession, and afterwards demise the land to B. (without deed) for a term of years, by which B. enters, this entry is a remitter to B., who is in of his former and surer estate. But if A. had demised to him for years by deed indented, or by matter of record, there B. would not have been remitted. For if a man by deed indented take a lease of his own lands, it shall bind him to the rents and covenants, because a man never can be allowed to affirm that his own deed is ineffectual, since that is the greatest security on which men rely in all manner of contracting. The same law holds, if it had been by matter of record, for that is of its own nature uncontrollable evidence, which a man cannot be allowed to controvert.—3 Steph. Com.

Remitter of Actions to County Court. See County Courts Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), s. 45, which replaces the County Courts Act, 1919, s. 1, which took the place of the County Courts Act, 1888, c. 65. The High Court may remit to the County Court any action brought in the High Court where (1) the plaintiff's claim is founded either on contract or tort and the amount claimed or remaining in dispute does not exceed 100*l.*, whether the counterclaim (if any) exceeds or does not exceed 100*l.*; or (2) the only matter remaining in dispute is a counterclaim, founded on contract or tort, not exceeding 100*l.*; or (3) by s. 50, the plaintiff's claim is for recovery of land, with or without a claim for rent or mesne profits, by a landlord against a tenant (or some one claiming by, through, or under him), whose term has expired or been determined or has become liable to forfeiture for non-payment of rent, and the action could have been brought in the County Court. Sect. 46 provides for the remission of any action of tort where the plaintiff has no visible means of paying the defendant's costs in the event of the claim failing. Certain equity proceedings may be transferred to the County Court (s. 54), and also certain Admiralty proceedings (s. 58) and certain probate proceedings (s. 61), application to attach debts or bring execution against members of a firm (s. 138). Interpleader issues may also be remitted to the County Court if they may be more conveniently determined there, and the amount or value of the matter in dispute does not exceed 500*l.* (Jud. Act, 1925), s. 204. See, generally, the County Courts Act, 1934.

Remittitur damnum. Where a jury gave greater damages than a plaintiff had declared for, the mistake might be rectified by entering a remittitur for the excess; or, if a plaintiff had signed judgment for the greater sum, the Court would give him leave to amend it, by entering a remittitur for the excess, even in a subsequent term and after error brought. The damages were usually remitted in ejectment and replevin where judgment was signed by confession or default.—2 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed. 1517.

Remittitur of Record. Formerly, when a writ of error in the Exchequer Chamber abated or was discontinued, the transcript must have been remitted, and a remittitur entered, before a defendant could sue out execution; but this was afterwards unnecessary, for the record remained in the court below, and execution was, therefore, in all cases, issued out of that court.—H. T. 4 Wm. 4, r. 16.

Remoteness, want of close connection between a wrong and the injury, as cause and effect, whereby the party injured cannot claim compensation from the wrongdoer. Where the damage sustained by the plaintiff is neither the necessary nor the probable result of the defendant's conduct, nor such as can be shown to have been in his contemplation at the time, it will be excluded as too remote. Consult Maine on Damages, and see CAUSA CAUSANS. The term is also often used to signify an infraction of the rule against perpetuity, a limitation exceeding the prescribed limits being said to be 'void for remoteness.' See Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 163, and PERPETUITIES. Consult Gray on Perpetuities.

20.—(An impediment being removed, an action emerges.)

Removal of Goods to prevent Distress. See the Distress for Rent Act, 1737 (11 Geo. 2, c. 19), which, if the removal of his goods by a tenant be fraudulent, or clandestine, allows the landlord to follow and distrain upon the goods for thirty days, wherever they are. See Woodfall, L. & T.

Removal of Poor Person. See SETTLEMENT.

Renant, or Reniant [fr. negans, Lat.], denying.—32 Hen. 8, c. 2.

Renecounter, a sudden meeting; as opposed to a duel, which is deliberate.

Render, to yield, give again, or return.

Certain things lie in render, i.e., must be rendered or answered by the tenant, as rents, heriots, and other services.—3 Steph. Com.

Renegade [from the Latin renego, to renounce], one who has changed his profession of faith or opinion: one who has deserted his church or party. See APOSTASY.

Renewal of Lease, a re-grant of an expiring lease for a further term. Where a lease contains a covenant by the lessor for renewal, this covenant is commonly subject to the condition that the covenants in the lease shall have been performed by the lessee, and this condition is strongly enforced by the Court (Finch v. Underwood, (1876) 2 Ch. D. 310).

Leases may be surrendered in order to be renewed, without a surrender of under-leases, by virtue of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1730 (4 Geo. 2, c. 28), s. 6, before which Act a surrender of each under-lease was necessary.

As to covenants for perpetual renewal, see Wynn v. Conway Corporation, 1914, 2 Ch. 705, and cases there referred to.

By the Law of Property Act, 1922, s. 145, and 15th Sched., perpetually renewable leases have, from the 1st January, 1926, been converted into terms of 2,000 years from the date of the commencement of the existing term. The conversion is without prejudice to the covenants and conditions of the lease or the trusts, powers, limitations, rights and equities or defects in title affecting the original term. The long term may be terminated by ten days' previous notice at any date on which the original lease would have expired, apart from renewal. Every assignment or devolution of the term is to be registered with the lessor, his solicitor, or agent, within six months at a fee of a guinea in substitution for similar covenants

(if any) in the lease, and a further covenant for production of the lease and proof of right of renewal to the lessor, etc., and endorsement by the latter of notice of such production, is also implied in a lease before the 1st January, 1927. Disputes as to notices to quit or right to renewal and other matters are referred to the Minister of Agriculture, and fines payable upon renewal have been converted into annual rents. The only substantial change in rights is that the liability for rent and breach of covenant attaches to the tenant only for so long as he holds the term, even though he may be the original lessee. Long leases or leases with perpetual right of renewal, taking effect as a demise for 2,000 years, may be granted, but any contract to renew an existing lease for a term exceeding sixty years from the termination of the original lease is void, and apparently this contract cannot be entered into until less than twenty-one years of the existing term is unexpired (see s. 149 (3), Law of Property Act, 1925). Corresponding provisions are made in regard to subleases with perpetual right of renewal. A comprehensive code on this subject is provided in the L. P. Act, 1922, 15th Sched. Copyholds held with a perpetual right of renewal are converted into enfranchised freehold by s. 135 of the L. P. Act, 1925, and see the 12th Sched., ibid. Subleases with perpetual right of renewal, become leases for 2,000 years under the provisions of s. 145 (Law of Property Act, 1922) and 15th Sched. (1).

By s. 44 of the Small Holdings and Allotments Act, 1908 (see SMALL HOLDINGS), a local authority which has compulsorily hired land for the purposes of the Act can obtain a compulsory renewal of the lease, and see the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, for renewal of leases by way of compensation for improvements and increase in value due to goodwill. See, generally, Woodfall, L. & T.

Renewal of Writs. It is provided by R. S. C. 1883, Ord. VIII., that no writ of summons shall be in force for more than twelve months; but upon application before the expiration of the twelve months, may be renewed for six months from the date of such renewal, and so from time to time during the currency of the renewed writ, so as to be 'available to prevent the operation of any statute whereby (see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS) the time for the commencement of an action may be limited.' See Hewett v. Barr, 1891, 1 Q. B. 98.

Renounce, to give up a right. An executor who declines to take probate of the will of his testator is said to 'renounce' probate. Where any person, after 1st January, 1858, renounces probate of the will of which he is appointed executor, his right shall wholly cease, and go and devolve as if he had not been appointed—Court of Probate Act, 1857, s. 79. Whenever an executor appointed in a will survives the testator, but dies without taking probate, or an executor named in a will is cited to take probate and does not appear, his right shall cease, and go in like manner as if he had not been appointed.—Court of Probate Act, 1858, s. 16.

Renovant, renewing.

Rent [fr. redditus, Lat.], a certain profit issuing yearly out of lands and tenements corporeal; it may be regarded as of a two-fold nature—first, as something issuing out of the land, as a compensation for the possession during the term; and secondly, as an acknowledgment made by the tenant to the lord of his fealty or tenure. It must always be a profit, yet there is no necessity that it should be, as it usually is, a sum of money; for spurs, capons, horses, corn, and other matters, may be, and occasionally are, rendered by way of rent; it may also consist in services or manual operations, as to plough so many acres of ground and the like; which services, in the eye of the law, are profits. The profit must be certain, or that which may be reduced to a certainty by either party; it must issue yearly, though it may be reserved every second, third, or fourth year; it must issue out of the thing granted, and not be part of the land or the thing itself.

There are several kinds of rents, viz. :—

(1) Rent-service, so called because it has some corporeal service incident to it, as at the least, fealty.

(2) Rent-charge, where the owner of the rent has no future interest or reversion in the land. It is usually created by deed or will, and was accompanied by express powers of distress and entry. Small rent-charges were frequently granted for the mere purpose of qualifying the grantee for the parliamentary franchise, as a forty-shilling freeholder, under 8 Hen. 6, c. 7, but this kind of qualification was abolished by the Representation of the People Act, 1884, s. 4.

As to the period of limitation after which the right of recovering a rent-charge is barred, see Shaw v. Crompton, 1910, 2 K. B. 370.

(3) Fee farm rent, one issuing out of an estate in fee, of at least one-fourth of the value of the lands at the time of its reservation.

(4) Rent-seck, a barren rent, which is in effect nothing more than a rent reserved by deed or will, but without any clause of distress. See infra.

(5) Rents of assize, the certain established rents of the freeholders, and ancient copyholders of a manor, which cannot be departed from. Those of the freeholders are frequently called chief-rents, and both sorts are indifferently denominated quit-rents, because thereby the tenant goes quit and free of all services.

(6) Rack-rent, a rent of the full value of the tenement, or near it. See RACK-RENT.

(7) Fore-hand-rent, otherwise called rent payable in advance. See 2 Bl. Com. pp. 14 et seq.; and Harg. Co. Litt. 144 a, note (5).

(8) Ground-rent, the rent reserved on a lease generally in respect of land let on condition that certain buildings are built thereon.

For the purposes of the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 205 (xxiii.), ibid., declares that 'rent' includes a rent service or a rent-charge or other rent, toll or duty, royalty or annual or periodical payment in money or money's worth, reserved or issuing out of or charged upon land, but does not include mortgage interest; 'rent-charge' includes a fee farm rent.

Rents-seck, rents of assize, and chief rents, to which the Common Law remedy of distress did not attach, because no reversion existed to the land from which they issued, became recoverable by distress (Landlord and Tenant Act, 1730, s. 5); and any annual sum charged on land by way of rent-charge or otherwise, not being rent incident to a reversion, by distress and entry under s. 44 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, reproduced, together with s. 6 of the Conveyancing Act, 1911, by the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 121, with the additional powers of creating a term to secure payment by mortgage, sale or receipt of income of the land comprised in the term.

Quit-rents, chief-rents, rent-charges, and other annual sums issuing out of land may by s. 45 of the 1881 Act be redeemed on requisition of the owner to the Copyhold Commissioners (now the Ministry of Agriculture), who certify the amount of money to be paid for the redemption, and such rents if payable out of former copyholds are manorial incidents to which the enfranchised land is liable until extinguished under the

L. P. Act, 1922, ss. 128 and 138–144. See COPYHOLDS.

Sect. 45 of the C. Act, 1881, has been reproduced and extended by the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 191, to rent reserved on a sale or on a conveyance (not a lease) for building purposes and to compensation rent-charges for the extinguishment of manorial incidents upon enfranchisement of copyholds.

The rights conferred by ss. 121 and 191 of the L. P. Act, 1925, only relate to rent-charges or other rents not being rent incident to a reversion. If they are held in fee simple in possession or for a term of years absolute (see LEASE) they are legal estates. All other rent-charges and rents, such as for life or remainder, etc., have become equitable estates (L. P. Act, 1925, s. 1 (8)), but see s. 149, L. P. Act, 1925, converting leases for life or determinable with life into terms of years absolute.

Sect. 122 of the L. P. Act, 1925, enables a rent-charge to be created out of another rent-charge with power to appoint a receiver of the same charged upon default for twenty-one days.

Rent is not due till midnight of the day upon which it is reserved, although sunset is the time appointed by law to make a proper demand of it, to take advantage of a condition of re-entry or to tender it, in order to save a forfeiture; but, more properly speaking, the demand should be made before sunset, so as to allow sufficient light to count the money; and the person making the demand or tender must remain on the land till the sun has set. It may lawfully be made payable on a Sunday (Child v. Edwards, 1909, 2 K. B. 753). Where rent is reserved generally and no such mention is made, as is usual, of half-yearly or quarterly payments, nothing is due until the end of the year.

Rent is considered as of a higher nature than even a debt due on an instrument under seal, as between the parties themselves. This is the effect of Davis v. Gydle, (1835) 2 A. & E. 624, where a distress for rent after a bill of exchange had been given for it was held good; but in Bramley v. Palmer, 1895, 2 Q. B. 405, it was held that the giving of such a bill was some evidence of an agreement by the landlord to suspend his remedy by distress during his currency; but the ordinary words 'yielding and paying' import a payment in cash (Henderson v. Arthur, 1907, 1 K. B. 10); and see Woodfall, L. & T. Rent in arrear due by the executors of a tenant was, before 32 & 33 Vict. c. 46, of a higher degree than simple contract debts, and of equal degree with specialty debts; but that Act has abolished the priority (see Shirreff v. Hastings, (1877) 6 Ch. D. 610), and see now the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 34.

As to the apportionment of rents, see the L. P. Act, 1925, ss. 77 and 190, and title APPORTIONMENT.

Rent-charge. See RENT.

Rental Bolls, when the tithes (teinds) have been liquidated and settled for so many bolls of corn yearly.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Rental-rights, a species of lease usually granted at a low rent and for life. Tenants under such leases were called rentalers or kindly tenants.

Rental Value. See MINERAL RIGHTS DUTY.

Rente [Fr.], an annuity. Rentes is the term applied to the French Government Funds, and Rentier to a fundholder or other person having an income from personal property.

Rente Viagère [Fr.], a life annuity.

Rent Restriction. See INCREASE OF RENT, ETC., ACTS.

Renunciation, the act of giving up a right.

Renvol, a term employed in private international law to denote the sending, or determination, of a matter to or according to the law of a tribunal outside the jurisdiction where the question arose. Apparently, the Courts of France, Italy and Germany will apply the law of nationality, and where the law of nationality, as in England, applies the law of the domicile, the latter law appears to have been applicable under German law in Germany (Re Askeu, Majoribanks v. Askeu, 1930, 2 Ch. 259), and Italy (Re Ross, Ross v. Waterfield, 1930, 1 Ch. 377), and, in France, as to movables (Re Annesley, Davidson v. Annesley, 1926, 2 Ch. 692). See Bate on the Doctrine of Renvol.

Reparatione facienda, an ancient writ, which lay in many cases to compel repairs.—Fitz. N. B. 127.

Repeal, a revocation or abrogation. Repeal of one Act of Parliament by another is either express or implied, the rule being that a later Act repeals a former one if contradictory thereto.—Leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant. By s. 11 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, re-enacting s. 5 of Lord Brougham's Act (13 Vict. c. 21), where an Act passed after 1850 repeals a repealing enactment, it does not revive any enactment previously repealed. And by s. 38 of the same Act, where any Act passed after January 1st, 1890, repeals and re-enacts any provisions of a former Act, references in any other Act to the provisions so repealed are to be construed as references to the provisions so re-enacted, as had been already specially provided in the consolidating Public Health Act, 1875, by s. 313, and Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, by s. 102, and see R. v. Minister of Health, Ex p. Villiers, 1936, 2 K. B. 29.

Implied Repeal.—The effect of an implied repeal is the same as that of an express repeal; but the leaning of the courts is against implied repeal. See West Ham v. Fourth City Mutual Building Society, 1892, 1 Q. B. 654, and other cases cited in Mews's Digest, vol. 19, p. 842, tit. 'Statute.'

Repertory, a classified inventory.

Repetition, a recovery of money paid under mistake.—Civ. Law.

Repetitum namlum, a second or reciprocal distress, in lieu of the first, which was eloigned.

Repetundæ, or Pecuniæ repetundæ, the terms used to designate such sums of money as the socii of the Roman state, or individuals, claimed to recover from Magistratus, Judices, or Publici Curatores, which they had improperly taken or received in the provincia, or in the Urbs Roma, either in the discharge of the jurisdictio, or in their capacity of Judices, or in respect of any other public function. Sometimes the word repetundæ was used to express the illegal act for which compensation was sought, as in the phrase, 'Repetundarum insimulari damnari'; and pecuniæ meant, not only money, but anything that had value. Original inquiry was made into this offence, extra ordinem ex senatus consulto, as appears from the case of P. Furius Philus and M. Matienus, who were accused of it by the Hispani.—Smith's Dict. of Antiq.

Repleader, to plead again. The motion for a repleader was made when, after issue joined and verdict thereon, the pleading was found (on examination) to have miscarried, and failed to effect its proper object, of raising an apt and material question between the parties. A repleader might become necessary where the issue had been defectively joined.

Replegiare, to redeem a thing detained or taken by another, by giving sureties.

Replegiare de averlis, a writ brought by one whose cattle were distrained or put in pound, on any cause, by any person, on surety given to the sheriff to prosecute or answer an action.—Fitz. N. B. 68.

Replegiari facias, the original writ out of Chancery commencing an action of replevin, superseded by the Statute of Marlbridge, 52 Hen. 3, c. 21.

Repletion, where the revenue of a benefice is sufficient to fill or occupy the whole right or title of the graduate who holds it.—Can. Law.

Replevable, or Replevisable, that which may be taken back or replevied.

Replevin, a personal action to recover possession in specie of goods unlawfully taken (generally, but not exclusively, applicable to the taking of goods distrained for rent), by contesting the validity of the seizure, whereas, if the owner prefer to have damages instead, the validity may be contested by action of trespass or unlawful distress. The word means a re-delivery to the owner of the pledge or thing taken in distress. It is re-delivered to him by the registrar of the county court of the district within which it was taken, upon his undertaking and giving security to try the validity of the distress or taking, in an action of replevin to be forthwith commenced by him against the distrainer, and prosecuted with effect and without delay either in the County Court or in the High Court, and to restore it if the right be adjudged against him; after which the distrainer may keep it in distraint subject to the law of distress.

It is a general rule that whoever brings replevin ought to have the property of the goods either general or special in him at the time of the taking, and it lies against him who takes the goods and also against him who commands the taking, or against both. Whatever may be distrained may be replevied.

In cases of distress for rent the replevy should be made before the expiration of five days (or fifteen, if s. 6 of the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888, applies) after the distress, otherwise the distrainer may sell the goods; though, indeed, they may be replevied at any time before they have been sold. See Jacob v. King, (1814) 5 Taunt. 451.

An action for replevin may be commenced in the High Court, and if the replevisor wish to proceed in that court, he must at the time of the replevying give security sufficient to cover the alleged rent or damage for which the distress is made, and the probable costs of the cause, conditioned to commence and prosecute an action of replevin in that court, a week from date, and to prove that he had ground to believe that the title to some hereditament, or to some toll, etc., was in question, or that such rent or damage exceeded 20l., and to make return of the goods, if return adjudged. In the County Court the action must be commenced within a month (County Courts Act, 1934, ss. 101-103).

Avowry and Cognizance.—In avowries and cognizances for rent was set forth, as in a statement of claim, the nature and merits of the defendant's case, to show that the distress taken by him was lawful, and to entitle him to a judgment de retorno habendo. The technical difference between an avowry and cognizance was this: where the action was against the principal or landlord, he made avowry—that is, he avowed taking the distress in his own right; where, on the other hand, it was against the bailiff or servant, he made cognizance—that is, he acknowledged the taking in right of the principal or landlord; and where it was against both, the one avowed and the other made cognizance.

The action of replevin is now rarely brought, it being usually more convenient to sue for damages for illegal distress. Consult Bullen and Leake, Prec. of Plead., 7th ed. pp. 393, 816.

Replevy, or Replevish, to let one to mainprise on surety; also to re-deliver goods which have been distrained to their owner, upon his giving pledges in an action of replevin. See last title.

Repliant, or Repleant. a litigant who replies, or files or delivers a replication.

Replication. This was before the Judicature Acts the term for a plaintiff's answer to a defendant's plea, and still so used in the Mayor's Court, London. See now REPLY.

Reply, the response of the opening counsel on a trial, which is only allowed when evidence has been given in answer to the case first stated, except in the case of the Crown, which is always entitled to reply. See Criminal Procedure Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 18), which applies to civil as well as criminal cases.

Also the pleading of the plaintiff which follows the defendant's statement of his defence or counterclaim (see R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXIII.), by which (r. 1), where plaintiff desires to deliver a reply, he shall deliver it within seven days from the delivery of the defence; (r. 2), when a counterclaim is pleaded, a reply thereto shall be subject to the rules applicable to defences. See ISSUE and PLEADING.

Report Office, was a department of the Court of Chancery. The suitor's account there is discontinued by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 36.

Reporter, a person who reports the decisions upon questions of law in the cases adjudged in the several Courts of Law and Equity. See LAW REPORTS.

Reports. 'A report,' says Coke, 'signifyeth a public relation or bringing again to memory of cases judicially argued, debated, resolved, or adjudged in any of the King's Courts of justice, together with such causes and reasons as were delivered by the judges.'—Co. Litt. 293 a. See LAW REPORTS.

Also, certificates from the masters of the Courts, when the Courts make reference to them concerning matters of account, etc.; or from committees of either House of Parliament.

Reports, The. Coke's reports from 14 Eliz. to 13 Jac. 1, which are usually quoted as 'Rep.' They are divided into thirteen parts, and the modern editions are in six volumes, including the index.

Reposition of the Forest, a reputting; a re-afforesting.—Manw.

Repositorium, a storehouse or place wherein things are kept; a warehouse.—Cro. Car. 555.

Representation, standing in the place of another for certain purposes, as heirs, executors, or administrators. See EXECUTOR; ADMINISTRATOR; PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE; REAL REPRESENTATIVE.

Any indication by words, letters, signs or conduct by one person to another of the existence of a fact. A representation of simple commendation or expectation at or before a contract of which the other party can or should form his own opinion is not as a rule actionable; 'an innocent misrepresentation gives no ground for damages,' but this involves the question whether the misrepresentation is innocent. If made at the time of sale of personal chattels, 'it is a warranty' (or collateral contract), 'provided it appears to have been so intended' (Pasley v. Freeman, (1789) 3 T. R. 634), and in that case, being a collateral contract, it may be proved by parol or extrinsic evidence, even if the contract to which it is collateral must be in writing under the Statute of Frauds or otherwise, if the principal or written contract is wholly silent on the subject: De Lassalle v. Guildford, 1901, 2 K. B. 235 (warranty that drains were in order before taking a lease), and Heilbut, Symons & Co. v. Buckleton, 1913, A. C. 30.

In equity, on principles which are now applicable in all courts, see Judic. Act, 1925, ss. 36 et seq., even though a representation might not amount to fraud, or a warranty, its untruth might be a ground for resisting specific performance (Redgrave v. Hurd, 20 Ch. D. 1), or for rescinding the contract (Newbigging v. Adam, 34 Ch. D. 582); and see Russell and Brown's Contract, 1934, Ch. 34 (underlease described as a lease), and see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 11, as to conditions and warranties.

A collateral statement, in insurance, either by parol or in writing, of such facts or circumstances relating to the proposed adventure, and not inserted in the policy, as are necessary for the information of the insurer to enable him to form a just estimate of the risk. Such representations are often the principal inducement to the contract, and afford the best ground upon which the premium can be calculated. Consult Arnould on Marine Insurance.

The statement as to another's character, etc., within the meaning of s. 6 of the Statute of Frauds Amendment Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 14), which enacts that:—

No action shall be brought whereby to charge any person upon or by reason of any representation or assurance made or given concerning or relating to the character, conduct, credit, ability, trade or dealings of any other person, to the intent or purpose that such other person may obtain credit, money, or goods upon, unless such representation or assurance be made in writing, signed by the party to be charged therewith.

A signature by an agent is not sufficient, so that a bank is not liable on the signature of the manager of one of its branches; see Swift v. Jewsbury, (1874) L. R. 9 Q. B. 301—where the manager was held personally liable; Hirst v. West Riding Banking Co., 1901, 2 K. B. 560. See DECEIT; CONDITION; WARRANTY and CONTRACT OF SALE OF LAND.

Representative, bearing the character or power of another. Before 1926, an heir-at-law or devisee was a real representative; an executor or administrator is a personal representative. See now definition in the Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 117 (xviii.), and Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 55 (xi.). If the plaintiff sues, or any of the defendants is sued, in a representative character, this must be stated on the writ, and must also appear in the title or heading of the statement of claim (Ord. III., r. 4; Re Tottenham, 1896, 1 Ch. 628), and Ord. XVI., r. 19, as to representation of parties in an action.

Reprive [fr. reprendre, Fr., to take back], the suspension of the execution of a criminal's sentence.

It may take place (1) ex mandato regis, at the mere pleasure of the Crown.

Or (2) ex arbitrio judicis, either before or after judgment; as, where the judge is not satisfied with the verdict, or the indictment is insufficient, or any favourable circumstances appear in the criminal's character, in order to give time to apply to the Crown for either an absolute or conditional pardon.

Or (3) ex necessitate legis: as where a woman is capitally convicted and pleads her pregnancy. See JURY OF MATRONS.

Or (4) if the criminal become non compos.—4 Steph. Com.

Reprimand, a formal and public stigmatization of an offence addressed by a judge to a convicted offender, or by an official superior to an inferior, generally in substitution for any other punishment: see, e.g., that enjoined for the first offence against the Wild Birds Protection Act, 1880 (see BIRDS), in the case of a sparrow or other not scheduled bird, and that enjoined in the case of officers convicted by court-martial, which may be either 'reprimand,' or 'severe reprimand,' by s. 44 (g) of the Army Act.

Reprisal, the taking one thing in satisfaction for another. Reprisals are used between nation and nation, in order to do themselves justice, when they cannot otherwise obtain it. If a nation has taken possession of what belongs to another—if she refuses to pay a debt, to repair an injury, or to give adequate satisfaction for it—the latter seizes something belonging to the former, and applies it to her own advantage, unless she obtains payment of what is due to her, together with interest and damages, or may keep it as a pledge until she has received ample satisfaction. For the latter it is rather a stoppage or a seizure than reprisals, but they are frequently confounded in common language.—Vattel, by Chi. 283. Reprisals are either ordinary, as arresting and taking the goods of merchant-strangers within the realm, or extraordinary, as satisfaction out of the realm, and are under the Great Seal.—Lex Mercat. 120. See also RECAPTION; CAPIAS IN WITHERNAM; LETTERS OF MARQUE.

Reprises, deduction and payments out of a manor or lands, as rent-charges, annuities.

Reprobation, the propounding of exceptions either to facts, persons, or things.—Ecol. Law.

Rep-silver, money anciently paid by servile tenants to their lord, to be quit of the duty of reaping his corn.

Republication of Wills, a second publication after cancelling or revoking.

The Wills Act, 1837 (7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), provides in s. 22 as follows:—

No will or codicil, or any part thereof, which shall be in any manner revoked, shall be revived otherwise than by the re-execution thereof, or by a codicil executed in manner hereinbefore required, and showing an intention to revive the same; and when any will or codicil which shall be partly revoked and afterwards wholly revoked, shall be revived, such revival shall not extend to so much thereof as shall have been revoked before the revocation of the whole thereof, unless an intention to the contrary be shown.

Every will re-executed, or republished, or revived by any codicil, shall for the purposes of the Wills Act be deemed to have been made at the time at which the same shall be so re-executed, republished, or revived (s. 34).

Repudiation, (1) the putting away of a wife or of a woman betrothed; (2) the renunciation of a contract (which renders the repudiator liable to be sued for breach of contract, and entitles the repudiatee, on accepting the repudiation, to treat the contract as at an end: see per Lord Blackburn in Messy Steel and Iron Co. v. Naylor, (1884) 9 App. Cas. 434) (see WARRANTY); (3) the refusal to accept a benefice.

Repugnant, that which is contrary to what is stated before. The rule of construction is that in a will the later of two contradictory clauses prevails, but in other writings the earlier. Conditions which are repugnant to a previous gift or limitation are void (Bradley v. Peixoto, (1797) 3 Ves. 325; Britton v. Twining, (1817) 3 Mer. 184; Stagdon v. Lee, 1891, 1 Q. B. 661). See RESTRAINT ON ALIENATION.

Reputation, credit, honour, character, good name. Injuries to one's reputation, which is a personal right, are defamatory. See CHARACTER; LIBEL.

Certain private and public rights may be established by reputation, e.g., highways (Austin's case, (1672) 1 Vent. 181); commons (Warwick v. Queen's College, Oxford, (1871) 6 Ch. App. 716); connection of mark or name with goods: see TRADE MARKS.

Reputed Owner, one who has, to all appearances, the right and actual possession of property. By the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 38—an enactment which repeats with little variation the successive enactments on the subject dating from the reign of James I.—it is provided that all goods being at the commencement of the bankruptcy in the possession, order, or disposition of the bankrupt, in his trade or business, by the consent and permission of the true owner, under such circumstances that he is reputed owner thereof, pass to his trustee. As to the conduct of the owner, see Simeons v. Durand, 1928, 2 K. B. 66, and see Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1908, s. 4, enabling a landlord to distrain on goods comprised in any bill of sale, hire-purchase agreement, or settlement made by a tenant or on goods in the possession, order and disposition of such tenant by the consent and permission of the true owner under such circumstances that such tenant is the owner thereof. See HIRE-PURCHASE.

Request, Letters of. Many suits are brought before the Dean of Arches, as original judge, the cognizance of which properly belongs to inferior jurisdiction within the province, but in respect of which the inferior judge has waived his jurisdiction under a certain form of proceeding known in the canon law by the denomination of Letters of Request.—3 Steph. Com.

Request-notes, applications to obtain a permit for removing excisable articles.

Requests, Courts of, tribunals of a special jurisdiction for the recovery of small demands, which were abolished by the County Courts Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 95), and Order in Council, 9th May, 1847, with a few exceptions.

Requisition, made by a creditor, that a debt be paid or an obligation fulfilled.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.; and (by Government) France, Fenwick & Co. Ltd. v. Rex, (1926) 43 T. L. R. 18.

Requisitions on Title, a series of inquiries and requests which arise upon a title on behalf of a proposed purchaser or mortgagee, and which the vendor or mortgagor is called upon to satisfy and comply with. In the case of sales, they are often curtailed by the conditions of sale (see ABSTRACT and CONDITIONS OF SALE OF LAND). Consult Williams or Dart on Vendors and Purchasers; Jackson and Gossett on Investigation of Title.

Reredos, an ornamental screen covering the wall at the altar. See Philpotts v. Boyd, (1876) L. R. 6 C. P. 435.

Rere-fiefs, inferior feudatories in Scotland.—Steph. Com.

Res, all physical and metaphysical existences, in which persons may claim a right. See Sand. Just.; Cum. C. L. 59.

Res generalem habet significationem quia tam corporea quam incorporea, cujuscunque sunt generis, nature, sive speciei, comprehendit. 3 Inst. 182.—(The word 'thing' has a general signification, because it comprehends corporeal and incorporeal objects, of whatever nature, sort, or species.)

Res accessoria sequitur rem principalem.—(The accessory follows the principal.)

Re-sale, a second sale.

Rescalt, or Recelt [fr. receptio, Lat.], an admission or receiving of a third person to plead his right in a cause already commenced between two other persons.—13 Rich. 2, c. 17.

Rescalt of Homage, the lord's receiving homage of his tenant at his admission to the land.—Kitch. 148.

Rescission, annulment or destruction. A general term for the repudiation and annulment of any contract or transaction: see Sale of Goods Act, 1893. A contract for the sale of real estate very commonly contains a power for the vendor to rescind the contract if the purchaser makes or insists upon any objection or requisition which the vendor is unable or unwilling to comply with; but see ss. 42 and 45 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, precluding the vendor from rescinding in certain cases, and this facility will not assist the vendor in case of a serious defect in title or substantial misrepresentation (see Re Hardicke Co. v. Lipski, 1901, 2 Ch. 666). Where a purchaser rescinds under a power in the contract he has a lien for his deposit (Whitbread & Co. v. Watt, 1902, 1 Ch. 835), but before 1926 the purchaser in the absence of misrepresentation was precluded from recovering his deposit if he chose to rescind upon an objection which he was precluded by statute from taking under an open contract, or by the conditions in the contract (Scott v. Alvarez, 1895, 2 Ch. 603). Under ss. 45 (11) and 49 (2) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, the Court can, if it thinks fit, order the return of any deposit where the Court refuses to grant specific performance or in any action for the return of the deposit.

Rescissory Action, one to rescind or annul a deed or contract.—Scots Law.

Rescous (rescussus), an ancient French word coming from rescourrer, recuperare, that is, to take from, to rescue or recover. See RESCUE.

Rescript, the answer of the Roman emperor when consulted by a particular person on some difficult question; it is equivalent to an edict or decree; a counterpart.

Rescriptum principis contra jus non valet. Reg. Civ. Dur.—(The prince's rescript avails not against law.)

Rescue, the taking away and setting at liberty, against law, a distress taken, or a person arrested by the process or course of law (Co. Litt. 160 b). Rescue of persons in the custody of the law has been dealt with by a number of Statutes from 23 Edw. 1. Aiding a prisoner to escape is a felony by the Prison Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 126), s. 37. See Archbold's Criminal Pleading, Ev. and Practice, 25th ed. pp. 1112–1123. Rescue of children from approved schools (late reformatory or industrial), see Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 12); rescues from prisons abroad, see 22 Vict. c. 25; of persons of unsound mind, see Lunacy Act, 1890.

Rescue lies where a person distrains for rent or services, or for damage feasant, and is desirous of impounding the distress, and another person rescues the distress from him. The party distraining must be in possession of the distress, otherwise there cannot be a rescue.

The action of rescue has fallen into disuse; the usual remedy is by an action on the case, under the Sale of Distress Act, 1690 (2 W. & M. sess. 1, c. 5), s. 4, which gives treble damages to the person grieved. When a distress is taken without cause, or contrary to law, the tenant may lawfully make rescue before it is impounded, for then it is deemed to be in the custody of the law. The Pound Breach Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 30), gives a summary remedy for pound breach and rescue in certain cases after a distress for damage feasant.

Rescailing Writ, the second sealing of a writ by a master so as to continue it, or to cure it of an irregularity.

Reservation, a keeping aside or providing. See SACRAMENT. Reservation of the Sacrament is an offence punishable by deprivation (Oxford (Bishop) v. Henly, 1909, P. 319).

As to a reservation in a conveyance and how it differs from an exception, see title EXCEPTION.

Reservatio non debet esse de proficulis ipsis, quia ea conceduntur, sed de redditu novo extra proficula. Co. Litt. 142 a.—(A reservation ought not to be of the profits themselves, because they are granted, but from the new rent apart from the profits.)

Reserve Forces. 1. Army.—The Reserve Forces Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 48), repealing and consolidating the prior Acts on the subject, established an 'Army Reserve' and a 'Militia Reserve.' The 'Army Reserve' consists of time-expired regular soldiers who are on its strength by reason of the terms of their enlistment or by re-engagement. As to the present character of the Militia, see that title. The Reserve is further strengthened by the Territorial Army Reserve, consisting of a reserve division, and also by a body composed of owners of motor cars who are liable to military service in an emergency, and the Act has been applied to an Air Force Reserve and Auxiliary Air Force Reserve under 7 & 8 Geo. 5, c. 51, and 14 & 15 Geo. 5, c. 15, and S. R. & O. 1924 (Nos. 1212 and 1213) and 1934 (No. 592). By 11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. 37, the 'Territorial Force' which was provided for in the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), became the 'Territorial Army,' and the special reserve became 'militia,' for the purposes of the Act of 1907 and otherwise. The sections of the Act of 1907 relating to Militia Reserves were repealed.

Calling out Reserve.—By s. 5 a Secretary of State 'at any time when occasion appears to require' may call out the whole or part of the Army Reserve 'to aid the civil power in the preservation of the public peace'; and by s. 12 the Sovereign in Council in case of imminent national danger, or of great emergency, may order the Army Reserve to be called out on permanent service.

2. Navy.—The reserve forces of the Navy are composed of:—(a) the Royal Naval Reserve, established by the Royal Naval Reserve (Volunteer) Act, 1859, which consists of officers and men from the merchant service who receive an annual retaining fee; (b) the Royal Fleet Reserve, formed of time-expired members of the Royal Navy and Marines; (c) the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve, a force in many ways comparable to the Territorial Army (see generally, the Royal Naval Reserve Acts, 1859 to 1927.

See Chitty's Statutes, tits. 'Army' and 'Navy.'

Reserving Points of Law. It was long the practice for a judge at the assizes to reserve points of law for consideration by the full Court (for which he was sitting as Commissioner) at Westminster, and this practice, recognized by s. 34 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, which conferred a right of appeal, was kept up by s. 46 of the Judicature Act, 1873, and R. S. C. Ord. XXXVI., r. 22, of the Rules of 1875. But s. 17 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876, and R. S. C. Ord. XXXVI., r. 22a (now rescinded), substituted for this procedure the argument of the point on 'further consideration' before the judge himself, and now by R. S. C. Ord. XXXVI., r. 39, the judge shall, at or after trial, direct judgment to be entered as he shall think right, and no motion for judgment shall be necessary.

As to the reserving points of law at sessions or assizes, see Crown Cases Act, 1848; Judicature Act, 1873, s. 47 (see now Jud. Act, 1925, s. 31 (1) (a)), and Judicature Act, 1875, s. 19 (see now Jud. Act, 1925, s. 103 (2)); and title CROWN CASES RESERVED.

Reservoirs. As to construction of reservoirs, see Waterworks Clauses Acts, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17) and 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), and the Reservoirs Safety Provisions Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 51). For powers and procedure of local authorities to construct, lease or purchase reservoirs, see Public Health Act, 1936, ss. 116–123, subject to the conditions imposed by the Acts. The Limited Owners Reservoirs and Water Supply Further Facilities Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 31), gives limited owners power to form reservoirs and to charge their estates with the expense. Reservoirs are among the 'improvements' which may be made with capital trust money under the Settled Land Act, 1882; see s. 25 (xiii.); now under the Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 83, and 3rd Sched., Part I.

Reset, the receiving or harbouring an outlawed person.

Reset of Theft, the feloniously receiving and keeping of stolen property, with knowledge of the theft.—Scots term.

Res gestæ, the things done (including words spoken) in the course of an event. The phrase is commonly used in connection with evidence, and the admissibility in evidence of words spoken—e.g., the cries of a woman who is being ravished: see Reg. v. Lillyman, 1896, 2 Q. B. 167, and EVIDENCE.

Resiance, residence, abode, or continuance.

Resiant Rolls, those containing the resiants (residents) in a tithing, etc., which are to be called over by the steward on holding courts-leet.

Residence, abode; also the continuance of a parson or vicar on his benefice. It is upon the supposition of residence that the law styles every parochial minister an incumbent.

By the Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), repealing former Acts, every spiritual person (with exceptions for heads of houses in the universities and others) holding a benefice, which comprises all parochial churches, perpetual curacies, chapels, and church or chapel districts, if with cure of souls, shall reside on his benefice, in the house of residence ; and if he absent himself (without licence from the bishop, grantable by s. 43 for incapacity of mind or body, or illness of wife or child for six months) for more than three months in any year, he shall forfeit, unless resident at some other of his benefices, a certain portion of the value of his benefice. It is further provided that annual returns of residents and non-residents must be made to the Sovereign in Council ; and that in case of non-residence, the bishop, instead of enforcing the penalties, may issue a monition, to be followed up by an order to reside ; and in case of non-compliance, may sequester the profits of the benefice, and apply them to the purposes in the Act specified.

Under the Pluralities Acts Amendment Act, 1885, the inadequate performance of ecclesiastical duties may be inquired into by the Commissioners ; and (s. 12) a non-resident incumbent may not return, without the bishop's permission, until the expiration of his licence, nor, if he be non-resident for more than twelve months, interfere with the discharge of the duties of the benefice as entrusted to the curate.

Ordinary meaning.—The word 'resides' denotes 'the place where an individual eats, drinks, and sleeps, or where his family or his servants eat, drink, and sleep' (per Bayley, J., in R. v. Inhabitants of North Curry, (1825) 4 B. & C. at p. 959), and for the meaning, extent or interpretation of the word under statutes, see the particular statute, e.g., franchise, burial, company law, jurisdiction of courts, divorce, income tax, juries, poor law, local government, etc. See DOMICIL.

Residence of Party to an action. See INDORSEMENT OF ADDRESS.

Resident, an agent, minister, or officer residing in any distant place with the dignity of an ambassador ; the chief representative of the Government at certain native states in India. Residents are a class of public ministers inferior to ambassadors and envoys ; but, like them, they are under the protection of the law of nations.

Also, a tenant, who was obliged to reside on his lord's land, and not to depart from the same ; called also homme levant et couchant, and in Normandy, resseant du fief.—Leg. H. I.

Residual, or Residuary, relating to the residue ; relating to the part remaining.

Residuary Devisee, the person named in a will who is to take all the real property remaining over and above the other devisees.

It is provided by the Wills Act, 1837, s. 35, 'that unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will, such real estate or interest therein as shall be comprised or intended to be comprised in any devise in such will contained, which shall fail or be void by reason of the death of the devisee in the lifetime of the testator, or by reason of such devise being contrary to law or otherwise incapable of taking effect, shall be included in the residuary devise (if any) contained in such will.'

Residuary Legatee, the person to whom the surplus of the personal estate, after the discharge of all debts and particular legacies, is left by the testator's will.

Residue, the surplus of a testator's or intestate's estate after discharging all his liabilities. Unless it appear in the will that the executor was intended to have the residue, he will be deemed to be trustee for the next of kin (Executors Act, 1830 (11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 40)) ; repealed and replaced by the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 49 ; see Re Glukman, 1908, 1 Ch. 552 ; affirmed, nom. A.-G. v. Jeffereys, 1908, A. C. 411. The distribution of the surplusage of an intestate's estate was provided for by the Statute of Distribution (22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10), explained by 29 Car. 2, c. 3, and 1 Jac. 2, c. 17. The distribution of the estates of persons dying after 1925 is regulated by Part IV. of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925. See LARSE ; WIDOW.

Resignatio est juris proprii spontanea refutatio. Godh. 284.—(Resignation is a spontaneous relinquishment of one's own right.)

Resignation, the giving up a claim, office, or possession ; also, the yielding up a benefice into the hands of the ordinary, called by the canonists 'renunciation' ; and though it is synonymous with surrender, yet it is by use restrained to yielding up a spiritual living to the bishop, as surrender is the giving up of temporal land into the hands of the lord.

Ecclesiastical Resignations.—By the Incumbents Resignation Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 44), as amended by 50 & 51 Vict. c. 23, and see Clergy Pensions Measure (16 & 17 Geo. 5), No. 5, and Church Assembly Measure (20 & 21 Geo. 5), No. 6, provision is made for enabling the incumbent of any benefice, provided he has been the incumbent of such benefice for seven years continuously, to resign on the ground of incapacity by permanent mental or bodily infirmity from the due performance of his duties, and to obtain a pension.

The resignation of infirm archbishops or bishops is provided for by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 111. A pension is provided (see Episcopal Pensions Measure, 1926).

The resignation of deans and canons is provided for by the Deans and Canons Resignation Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 8), repealed and replaced by the Clergy Pensions Measure (16 & 17 Geo. 5), No. 6.

A covenant to resign a living on request, given to the patron before and in consideration of presentation thereto, was formerly simoniacal, and, therefore, illegal (see Fletcher v. Lord Sondes, (1827) 3 Bing. 501), but by the Clergy Bonds Resignation Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 94) (repealed, see Church Assembly Measure (14 & 15 Geo. 5), No. 1), every engagement for the resignation of any living 'to the intent, manifested by the engagement, that any one person whatsoever, specially named therein, or one or (sic) two persons specially named, each of them by blood or marriage, an uncle, son, grandson, brother, nephew, or grand-nephew of the patron, shall be presented' to the living was made valid.

Resignation of Judge.—The office of a judge of the High Court of Justice, or of the Court of Appeal, may be vacated by resignation in writing under his hand, addressed to the Lord Chancellor, without any deed of surrender.—Jud. Act, 1873, s. 7 (see now Jud. Act, 1925, s. 10). A county court judge desirous of resigning, and afflicted with permanent infirmity, may be recommended by the Lord Chancellor to the Treasury for a pension.—County Courts Act, 1934, s. 9.

Resignation of Borough Councillors, etc.—The resignation by writing, and on payment of a fine, of corporate offices under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, is provided for by s. 36 of that Act. See also Local Government Act, 1933 (c. 51), s. 62.

Resignation of Member of Parliament.—A member of the House of Commons cannot resign his seat. All he can do is to accept an office of profit under the Crown, which has the effect of vacating his seat. See CHILTERN HUNDREDS.

Res integra, a point not covered by the authority of a decided case, so that a judge may decide it upon principle alone.

Res inter alios acta alteri nocere non debet (a transaction between strangers ought not to injure another party), e.g., the sworn evidence of a witness in one cause cannot be made available in another cause between other parties. Consult Best on Evidence, bk. 3, pt. 2, ch. 5, where it is pointed out that the maxim, in many varying forms, was well known both in the Civil and Canon Law; and see also Broom's Legal Maxims, citing the Duchess of Kingston's case, (1771) 20 How. St. Tr. 335; 2 Sm. L. C., and other cases in illustration of the rule, and Higham v. Ridgway, (1808) 10 East, 109; 2 Sm. L. C., and other cases in which entries of a deceased stranger declarant against his interest, or in the course of his business, have been held admissible, in illustration of the exceptions.

Res ipsa loquitur (the thing speaks for itself), a phrase used in actions for injury by negligence where no proof of negligence is required beyond the accident itself, which is such as necessarily to involve negligence, e.g., a collision between two trains upon a railway: see Carpue v. London, Brighton, and South Coast Ry. Co., (1844) 5 Ex. 787.

Res judicata, a final judgment already decided between the same parties or their privies on the same question by a legally constituted Court having jurisdiction is conclusive between the parties, and the issue cannot be raised again. The judgment may have been given by a foreign Court (Tarleton v. Tarleton, 4 M. & S. 21). A matter which is res judicata cannot be further gone into; but if the decision was obtained by fraud it can be set aside (Cole v. Langford, 1898, 2 Q. B. 36). Criminal proceedings do not constitute a res judicata as regards civil proceedings arising out of the same facts (Caine v. Palace Shipping Co., 1907, 1 K. B. 670; and see also Anderson v. Collinson, 1901, 2 K. B. 107). See ESTOPPEL.

Res judicata pro veritate accipitur. Co. Litt. 103 a.—(A thing adjudicated is received as true.) See Broom's Leg. Max.

Res Mancipi. The Res Mancipi of old Roman law were, land—in historical times, land on Italian soil—slaves, and beasts of burden, such as horses and oxen; and the mode of conveyance by which they were transferred was called a Mancipium or Mancipation. Distinguished from them was another class called Res nec Mancipi, 'things which did not require a Mancipation,' i.e., could be transferred by a simpler mode of assurance, and were held to pass by mere delivery: see Maine's Ancient Law, Ch. VIII.

Res nova, a matter not yet decided.

Res nullius (a thing which has no owner).

Resolution, a solemn judgment or decision; a revocation of a contract. As to the cases in which resolutions of the House of Commons varying or renewing taxation have statutory effect for a limited period, see Provisional Collection of Taxes Act, 1913 (3 Geo. 5, c. 3). As regards companies, resolutions are of three kinds: (a) Ordinary, i.e., a resolution passed by a simple majority of members; (b) Extraordinary, i.e., a resolution passed by three-fourths of such members entitled to vote as are present in person or by proxy (where proxies are allowed) at a general meeting, of which notice specifying the intention to propose the resolution as an extraordinary resolution has been duly given; (c) Special, i.e., when passed by such a majority as is required for the passing of an extraordinary resolution and at a general meeting of which not less than 21 days' notice, specifying the intention to propose the resolution as a special resolution has been duly given, or if all members entitled to attend and vote agree, a special resolution may be passed at a meeting at less than 21 days' notice. At any meeting for the passing of an extraordinary or special resolution the chairman's declaration that the resolution is carried shall, unless a poll is demanded, be conclusive evidence of the fact without proof of the number or proportion of votes recorded in favour of or against the resolution (Companies Act, 1929, s. 117). For the purposes of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, 'ordinary resolution' means a resolution decided by a majority in value of creditors present, personally or by proxy, at a meeting of creditors and voting on the resolution: 'special resolution' means a resolution decided by a majority in number and three-fourths in value of the creditors present, personally or by proxy, at a meeting of creditors and voting on the resolution: 'resolution' means ordinary resolution (s. 167).

Resolutory Condition, one the accomplishment of which revokes a prior obligation.

Resort. A court whose decision is for the particular case before it final and without appeal is, in reference to that case, said to be a Court of Last Resort. The House of Lords has been especially so spoken of.

As to place of public resort, see PUBLIC PLACE.

Respectu computi vicecomitis habendo, a writ for respiting a sheriff's account addressed to the treasurer and barons of the Exchequer.—Reg. Brev. 139.

Respectum, Challenge propter. See JURY.

Res perit domino (the loss falls on the owner). For illustrations of this maxim, see Taylor v. Caldwell, (1863) 32 L. J. Q. B. 164; Krell v. Henry, 1903, 2 K. B. 740; CONTRACT FOR SALE AND SALE OF GOODS ACT, 1893.

Respite, to postpone—thus, to enter and respite an appeal is to enter the same, and postpone the hearing to a future day. Consult Pritch. on Q. Sess.

Also, interval, reprieve, suspension of a capital sentence, a delay, forbearance, or continuation of time.

There are respite of execution, of debt, of homage, and of a jury.

Respondent ouster (let him answer over).

If a demurrer is joined in a plea to the jurisdiction, person, or writ, etc., and it be judged that the defendant put in a more substantial plea, interlocutory judgment is given that he shall answer. Also, if a prisoner fail upon a plea in bar, he has judgment of respondent ouster, and may plead over to the offence the general issue, not guilty.—Steph. Com., 7th ed., iii. 569; iv. 405.

Respondent superior. 4 Inst. 114.—(Let the principal be held responsible.) The person directing an unlawful act to be done by his servant or agent is answerable as if he had done the act with his own hand. See Knott v. London County Council, 1934, 1 K. B. 126; VICARIOUS RESPONSIBILITY.

Respondent, a party answering in a suit, whether for himself or another; the defendant in an appeal; the defendant in a suit in the Court for Divorce.

Respondentia, money which is borrowed not upon the vessel, as in bottomry, but upon the goods and merchandise contained in it, in cases of extreme urgency, as a last resort and where communication with the owners is impossible in the circumstances. The shipowner must indemnify the owner of the cargo thus hypothecated.

Respondere non debet [Lat.] (he ought not to answer).

Responsa prudentium (the answers of the learned in the law), the opinions and decisions of learned lawyers, forming part of the Roman laws.—Cum. C. L. 6; Maine's Anc. Law, Ch. II.

Responsalis ad lucrandum vel petendum, he who appears and answers for another in court at a day assigned; a proctor, attorney, or deputy.—1 Reeves, 169.

Ressolser, the taking of lands into the hands of the Crown, where a general livery or ouster le main was formerly misused.—Staudf. Prærog.

Rest. Periodical balancing of accounts for the purpose of determining and allocating interest; also, in banking, a reserve fund.

Restaur, or Restor, the remedy or recourse which assurers have against each other, according to the date of their assurances ; or against the master, if the loss arise through his default, as through ill loading, want of caulking, or want of having the vessel tight ; also, the remedy or recourse a person has against his guarantee or other person, who is to indemnify him from any damage sustained.—Encyc. Londin.

Restitutio in integrum, the rescinding of a contract or transaction, so as to place the parties to it in the same position, with respect to one another, which they occupied before the contract was made, or the transaction took place. The restitutio here spoken of is founded on the edict. If the contract or transaction is such as not to be valid, according to the jus civile this restitutio is not needed, and it only applies to cases of contracts and transactions, which are not in their nature or form invalid. In order to entitle a person to the restitutio, he must have sustained some injury capable of being estimated, in consequence of the contract or transaction, and not through any fault of his own, except in the case of one who is minor xzv. annorum, who was protected by the restitutio against the consequences of his own carelessness.

The following are the chief cases in which a restitutio might be decreed :—

The case of vis et metus. When a man had acted under the influence of force or reasonable fear, caused by the acts of the other party, he had an actio quod metus causâ for restitution against the party who was the wrongdoer ; and also against an innocent person, who was in possession of that which had thus illegally been got from him ; and also against the heredes of the wrongdoer, if they were enriched by being his heredes. If he were sued in respect of the transaction, he could defend himself by an exceptio quod metus causâ. The actio quod metus was given by the prætor, L. Octavius, a contemporary of Cicero.

The case of dolus. When a man was fraudulently induced to become a party to a transaction, which was legal in all respects saving the fraud, he had his actio de dolo malo against the guilty person and his heredes, so far as they were made richer by the fraud, for the restoration of the thing of which he had been defrauded ; and if that were not possible, for compensation. Against a third party, who was in bonâ fide possession of the thing, he had no action. If he were sued in respect of the transaction, he could defend himself by the exceptio doli mali.

The case of minores xzv. annorum. A minor could by himself do no legal act, for which the assent of a tutor or curator was required ; and, therefore, if he did such act by himself, no restitutio was necessary. If the tutor had given his auctoritas or the curator his assent, the transaction was legally binding ; but yet the minor could claim restitutio if he had sustained injury by the transaction.

There were, however, cases in which minores could obtain no restitutio ; for instance, when a minor with a fraudulent design gave himself out to be a major, when he confirmed the transaction after coming of age, and in other cases.

The case of absentia, which comprehends not merely absence in the ordinary sense of the word, but absence owing to madness or imprisonment, and the like causes.

The case of error. Mistake comprehends such error as cannot be imputed to blame ; and in such a case a man could always have restitutio when another was enriched by his loss.

The case of alienatio in fraudem creditorum facta (Dig. 42, tit. 8). When a man was insolvent (non solvendo), and alienated his property for the purpose of injuring his creditors, the prætor's edict gave the creditors a remedy.

In the imperial times restitutio was also applied to the remission of a punishment (Tac. Ann. xiv. 12 ; Plin. Ep. x. 64, 65 ; Dig. xlviii., tit. 19, s. 27), which could only be done by the imperial grace.—Sand. Just., 7th ed. 48, 74, 219.

Restitutio, the restoring anything unjustly taken from another ; also putting in possession of lands or tenements him who had been unlawfully dispossessed of them ; a person being attainted of treason, etc., he or his heirs may be restored to his lands, etc., by royal charter of pardon.

Restitutio, Writ of. If the judgment below was reversed in a court of error, the plaintiff in error might have had a writ of restitution in order that he might be restored to all he had lost by the judgment. If execution on the former judgment had been actually executed, and the money paid over, the writ of restitution issued without any previous scire facias ; but if the money had not been paid over, scire facias quare restitutionem non, suggesting the matter of fact, viz., the sum levied, etc., must have previously issued. Error is now abolished (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. LVIII., r. 1). And, generally, if money, etc., be levied under a writ of execution, and the judgment be afterwards reversed or set aside, the party against whom the execution was sued out may have his writ of restitution; but where the judgment is set aside for irregularity, etc., restitution (when necessary) forms part of the rule; and if the goods or money be not restored, the Court will grant an attachment. A writ of restitution may also be awarded when a judgment in ejectment is upset. Restitution takes place when there has been a writ of restitution before granted; and restitution is generally a matter of duty; but re-restitution is matter of grace.—Raym. 35. See Dan. Ch. Pr.; Chitty's Archbold.

Restitution of Conjugal Rights. See CONJUGAL RIGHTS.

Restitution of Minors, a restoring them to rights lost by deeds executed during their minority.—Scots Law.

Restitution of Stolen Goods. By the Common Law there was no restitution of goods upon an indictment, because it is at the suit of the Crown only; therefore the party was enforced to bring an appeal of robbery in order to have his goods again; but a writ of restitution was authorized to be granted by 21 Hen. 8, c. 11, and it became the practice of the court, upon the conviction of a felon, to order, without any writ, immediate restitution of such goods as were brought into court to be made to the several prosecutors. The Larceny Act, 1916, s. 45, gives power to the court to award from time to time writs of restitution for stolen property, or to order the restitution thereof in a summary manner, upon a conviction of the guilty party. This restitution reaches the stolen goods (unless they be negotiable instruments) notwithstanding that the guilty party may have sold them for value to an innocent purchaser (see s. 24 (1), Sale of Goods Act, 1893), but see MARKET OVERT; a sum not exceeding the proceeds of such sale out of the moneys taken from the guilty party on his apprehension may be delivered to such innocent purchaser. The order is suspended pending an appeal by s. 6 of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907. See R. v. Elliott, 1908, 2 K. B. 452. The property in goods obtained by fraud or other wrongful means not amounting to stealing does not revert in the owner by reason of the conviction of the offender. As to the tracing, following, and recovery of proceeds of fraud, see Bankue Belge v. Hambrouk, 1921, 1 K. B. 321.

Restitutioe extracti ab ecclesiâ, a writ to restore a man to the church, which he had recovered for his sanctuary, being suspected of felony.—Reg. Brev. 69.

Restitutioe temporalium, a writ addressed to the sheriff, to restore the temporalities of a bishopric to the bishop elected and confirmed.—Fitz. N. B. 169.

Restraining Order. 5 Vict. c. 5, s. 4, extended the preventive powers of Chancery by giving its judges authority, upon the application of any party interested, by motion or petition, to restrain the Bank of England, or other public company, from permitting the transfer of stock in the name of any person or body politic or from paying any dividends due or to become due; but this procedure is superseded by the procedure under R. S. C. Ord. XLVI., rr. 3-14, first made in 1880. See DISTINGUAS.

Restraining Statutes, those which restrict previous rights and powers, as 1 Eliz. c. 19; 13 Eliz. cc. 10, 20; 14 Eliz. c. 11; 18 Eliz. cc. 6, 11; and 43 Eliz. c. 9, restraining bishops and others from granting leases binding on their successors for more than a limited time. See 5 Reeves, c. xxiii., p. 26.

A large proportion of modern legislation is of this nature, e.g., Public Health, Housing, Rent Restriction, Shops and Factory Acts, Road Traffic, Law of Property, etc.

Restraint of Marriage. On the ground of public policy, conditions attached to gifts or bequests to a person who has never been married, if in general restraint of marriage, are void, i.e., the donee or legatee takes the gift or bequest whether he or she marry or not; but a condition in restraint of the second marriage, whether of a man or woman, is not void (see Allen v. Jackson, (1875) 1 Ch. D. 399), and a condition is good if the restraint be partial only, e.g., if there be a bequest, with a gift over if the legatee should marry a particular person, or without a particular person's consent. Consult Theobald on Wills.

Restraints of Princes. The expression occurs in marine insurance policies, bills of lading, etc., usually as part of the phrase 'Arrests or Restraints of Princes, Rulers or People,' being one of the group of contingencies against which provision is made. It covers any forcible interference with the voyage or adventure at the hands of the constituted government or ruling power of any country. See Carver on Carriage by Sea, 6th ed., pp. 113-117, and the Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, 1924, Sched., Art. iv. 2.

Restraint of Trade. Contracts in general restraint of trade—that is, that a party shall not carry on a particular trade at all—are void on the ground of public policy (Michel v. Reynolds, (1711) 1 P. Wms. 181; 1 Sm. L. C.), but contracts in partial restraint of trade—that is, where the restraint does not extend further than is necessary for the reasonable protection of the party for whose protection it has been agreed to—are good, if made, although by deed, for some consideration, and if not injurious to the public interests of this country. See the Nordensfelt case, 1894, A. C. 535, in which it is recognized that the law of this subject has been gradually growing in liberality: Attwood v. Lamont, 1920, 3 K. B. 571; Deves v. Fitch, 1921, 2 A. C. 158; and consult Leake or Chitty on Contracts.

Restraint on Alienation. Although conditions in restraint of alienation of an absolute interest in possession in either real or personal property are generally void on the ground of repugnancy (see Re Dugdale, (1888) 38 Ch. D. 176, and REPUGNANT), gifts of a life estate or of income or apparently of a reversionary interest (Churchill v. Marks, (1844) 1 Coll. 441), until alienation or charging, are permissible, if there is a gift over and the gift is properly expressed (see Re Mabbett, 1891, 1 Ch. 707, and Trustee Act, 1925, s. 33). A settlement upon himself by a settlor determining his estate upon bankruptcy is void. As to alienation of advowson, see Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), and ADVOWSONS. As to church property, see Halsb. Laws of England, tit. 'Ecclesiastical Law', and as to married woman, see ANTICIPATION.

Restraint upon Anticipation. See ANTICIPATION.

Restriction. Under the Land Registration Act, 1925, s. 58, and rules 56 and 58, L. R. Rules, 1925, is an entry on the register, usually requiring notice to or consent by a named person before any further dealing is registered. The restriction may be limited to a special class of dealings and may have a continuous effect unlike a 'caution,' which can only operate once. Restrictions are frequently entered for the protection of settled land. Consult Fortescue-Brickdale and Stewart-Wallace on the Land Registration Act, 1925.

Restrictive Covenant, defined by the Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 10, Class D (ii.), as a covenant or agreement (not being made between lessor and lessee), restrictive of the user of the land, and see s. 20 (11), ibid. Such a covenant is in the nature of an equitable easement restricting the use or enjoyment of certain land for the benefit of other land and binding on every owner (see Law of Property Act, 1925, ss. 78 and 79) of the (servient) land having notice of the covenant (see Tulk v. Moxhay, 2 Phil. 774, and Smith's L. C., Notes to Spencer's case). Upon sale of land under a building scheme, of which the restriction formed part, the purchasers of plots may enforce the covenant (see Elliston v. Reacher, 1908, 2 Ch. 665; see also Drake v. Gray, 1936, 1 Ch. 465; Re Union of London and Smith's Bank; Miles v. Easter, 1933, Ch. 611). Under the Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 10, Class D (ii), restrictive covenants made after 31st December, 1925, must be registered as a land charge (q.v.), and under s. 13, if not so registered before completion of the purchase, shall be void against a purchaser of the (servient) land for money or money's worth. See also REGISTRATION OF LAND AND PRIORITY NOTICE. As to extinction or modification of these covenants, see Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 84, enabling an 'authority,' being one or more of the official arbitrators under the Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919, to discharge or modify the covenants under the conditions imposed by the Act.

Restrictive Indorsement, prohibits the further negotiation of a bill of exchange or promissory note, or cheque, by expressing that 'it is a mere authority to deal with the bill, etc., as thereby directed, and not a transfer of the ownership thereof, as, for example, if a bill be endorsed, "pay D. only," or "pay D. for the account of X.," or "pay D. or order for collection." '—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 35.

Resulting Trust, a trust created by operation of law. Resulting trusts are of two kinds: (1) Where an owner of property makes a disposition of the legal estate and there is nothing to show that he meant to deal with the equitable interest, but by s. 60 of the Law of Property Act, provides that in a voluntary conveyance executed after 1925, a resulting trust for the grantor will not be implied merely because the property is not expressed to be conveyed for the benefit of the grantee; (2) where a purchaser of property takes the conveyance not in his own name but in that of some one else. In either of these cases the law creates a 'resulting trust'—in the former case, in favour of the owner of the legal estate; in the latter, in favour of the purchaser, i.e., the man who paid the purchase money. See Levin on Trusts.

Resulting Use, an implied use.

A resulting use arose where the legal seisin was transferred, and no use was expressly declared, nor any consideration nor evidence of intent to direct the use; the use then remained in the original grantor, for it cannot be supposed that the estate was intended to be given away, and the statute immediately transferred the legal estate to such resulting use. The Statute of Uses has been repealed by the Law of Property Act, 1925.

Re-summons. a second summons, calling upon a person to answer an action where the first summons is defeated. Obsolete.

Resumption. 1. The taking again by the Crown of such lands or tenements, etc., as on false suggestion had been granted by letters-patent.—Bro. Ab. 291.

2. By agricultural landlord, before legal tenancy ended, of the tenant's land (generally in part only) for building, etc., purposes, making an abatement of rent and giving compensation for damage to crops. Notice to quit part only being invalid at common law (Doe v. Archer, (1811) 14 East, 245), this resumption has frequently to be specially stipulated for; but in many cases of yearly tenancy recourse may be had to s. 27 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, by which:—

Where a notice to quit is given by the landlord of a holding to a tenant from year to year with a view to the use of land for any of the following purposes:—

- (i.) The erection of farm labourers' cottages or other houses with or without gardens;
- (ii.) The provision of gardens for farm labourers' cottages, or other houses;
- (iii.) The provision of allotments;
- (iv.) The provision of small holdings as defined by the Small Holdings and Allotments Acts, 1908 to 1919;
- (v.) The planting of trees;
- (vi.) The opening or working of any coal, ironstone, limestone, brick earth, or other mineral, or of a stone quarry, clay, sand, or gravel pit, or the construction of any works or buildings to be used in connexion therewith;
- (vii.) The making of a watercourse or reservoir;
- (viii.) The making of any road, railway, tramroad, siding, canal, or basin, or any wharf, pier, or other work connected therewith; and the notice is given with a view to any such use—

(a) it shall, by virtue of this Act, be no objection that it relates to part only of the holding . . .

See as to counter-notice to quit the entire holding by the tenant upon notice by the landlord in regard to part of the land, Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 140 (2), as amended by the L. P. (Amendment) Act, 1926, s. 2.

There is also, by s. 46 of the Small Holdings and Allotments Act, 1908 (amended by the Land Facilities Act, 1919, s. 25, and Sched. II.), a power of resumption of possession by a landlord of land compulsorily hired by a local authority when it is needed for industrial purposes.

Res universitatis, property belonging to a city or municipal corporation.

Retail, to sell goods in small parcels and not in gross. For the purpose of the Licensing Acts, retail of spirits is a sale of less than two gallons (Spirits Act, 1880, s. 104), of wine, of less than two gallons, or one dozen quart bottles (Refreshment Houses Act, 1860, s. 4), and of beer or cider, of less than four gallons and a half (Beer-house Act, 1834, s. 19).

Retainer. (1) The contract between client and solicitor or between solicitor and counsel for professional services: the contract that such services shall not be given to the opposite party; (2) a document given by a solicitor to counsel, engaging the person who receives it to appear for a party, either in some particular suit or action in prospect (which is called a special retainer), or in all matters of litigation in which such party may at any time be involved; this is called a general retainer. Subject to rr. 20 and 21 of the Retainer Rules, a special retainer is binding if duly tendered, whether accepted or not, but there is no rule of the profession which makes a general retainer binding on a counsel unless it is accepted by him.

Rules 20 and 21 are shortly as follows.

By rule 20 counsel who has drawn pleadings or advised, or accepted a brief, during the progress of an action on behalf of any party must not accept a retainer or brief from any other party without giving the party for whom he has drawn pleadings or advised, or on whose behalf he has accepted a brief, the opportunity of retaining or delivering a brief to him.

By rule 21 no counsel can be required to accept a retainer or brief or to advise or draw pleadings in any case where he has previously advised another party on or in connection with the case, and he ought not to do so in any case in which he would be embarrassed in the discharge of his duty by reason of confidence reposed in him by the other party.

As to enforcement of rule 20, it is a rule of the profession that when a brief is offered or delivered to any counsel, and he finds that another counsel has become entitled to a brief within the meaning of that rule and has not been briefed, 'such first named counsel ought, where practicable, to ascertain from the solicitor offering or delivering such brief whether there is any sufficient explanation why a brief has not been offered or delivered to such other counsel, and unless a satisfactory explanation is given ought to refuse or return the brief.' See Annual Practice.

Retainer of Debts. An executor or administrator (not being a creditor-administrator, who is now precluded from retaining by the form of the administration bond) has a legal right to retain his own debt out of the legal or equitable (Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 34 (2)) assets in priority to all other creditors of equal degree, and before the costs of all parties, including the plaintiff (see EXECUTOR). The right is not affected by a judgment for administration (Re Barrett, (1889) 43 Ch. D. 70), nor by payment into court (Richmond v. White, (1879) 12 Ch. D. 361); but it cannot be exercised by a bankrupt administrator (Wilson v. Wilson, 1911, 1 K. B. 327). Since the Administration of Estates Act, 1869, the right may be exercised against specialty as well as simple contract creditors (Re Harris, 1914, 2 Ch. 395). Consult Williams or Ingpen on Executors; Seton on Judgments, 7th ed., p. 1466.

Retaliation, the lex talionis, which see.

Retenementum, detaining, withholding, or keeping back.

Retention, in Scots law, the right of withholding a debt or retaining property until a debt due to the person claiming the right of retention shall be paid; a lien.

Retinentia, a retinue, or persons retained by a prince or nobleman.

Retiring a Bill, taking up and paying a bill of exchange when due.—Byles on Bills.

Retorna brevium, the returns of writs.

Retorno habendo. When the defendant has judgment in replevin for the return of the goods, there issues in his favour a writ de retorno habendo, whereby the goods are returned again into his custody, to be sold or otherwise disposed of, as if no replevin had been made. See REPLEVIN.

Retorsion, retaliation.

Retour, an extract from the chancery of the service of an heir to his ancestor.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Retour sans protest [Fr.] (return without protest), a request or direction by a drawer of a bill of exchange, that should the bill be dishonoured by the drawee, it may be returned without protest or without expense (sans frais).—Byles on Bills.

Retractus aquæ, the ebb or return of a tide.

Retraxit (he has withdrawn), a disused proceeding somewhat similar to a nolle prosequi, except that a retraxit was a bar to any future action for the same cause; whereas a nolle prosequi is not, unless made after judgment. See DISCONTINUANCE.

Retrocession, a re-assignment of inheritable rights to the cedent or original assignor.—Civ. Law.

Rette, a charge or accusation.—Co. Litt. 173 b.

Return-Days. These were certain days in term for the return of writs.—1 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed. 160.

Returning Officer, the official who conducts an election. The Representation of the People Act, 1918, s. 28, provides that in parliamentary elections the sheriff shall be the returning officer in counties, and in parliamentary boroughs which have a sheriff and in other boroughs the mayor, or in some cases the chairman of the council. As to returning officers at university elections, see Sched. V., Part I., s. 1. As to county council, municipal, parish council, rural district, and urban district elections, see the same Act as amended by the R. P. Act, 1922, and Local Government Act, 1933.

The same Acts provide that the duties of the returning officer are to be discharged by the registration officer (see REGISTRATION OF ELECTORS). In parliamentary elections the returning officer, if registered, is to have the casting vote but no other vote, by the Parliamentary Elections (Returning Officers) Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 84).

Retorno habendo. See RETORNO HABENDO.

Returnum averlorum, a judicial writ similar to the retorno habendo.—Cowel.

Returnum irreplegiabile, a judicial writ addressed to the sheriff for the final restitution or return of cattle to the owner when unjustly taken or distrained, and so found by verdict; it is granted after a nonsuit in a second deliverance.—Reg. Judic. 27.

Reus, a defendant, properly the debtor to whom the question was put. Rei, the parties or litigants.—Cum. C. L. 251.

Reve, or Greve, the bailiff of a franchise or manor, an officer in parishes within forests, who marks the commonable cattle.

Reveach, rebellion.—Domesday.

Reveland, the land which in Domesday is said to have been thane-land, and afterwards converted into reveland. It seems to have been land which, having reverted to the king after the death of the thane, who had it for life, was not granted out to any by the king, but rested in charge upon the account of the reve or bailiff of the manor.—Spelm. Feuds, c. 24.

Revels, sports of dancing, masking, etc., formerly used in princes' courts, the inns of court, and noblemen's houses, commonly performed by night; there was an officer to order and supervise them, who was entitled the Master of the Revels.

Revendication. Upon the sale of goods on credit, by the law of some commercial countries, a right is reserved to the vendor to retake them, or he has a lien upon them for the price, if unpaid: and in other countries he possesses a right of stoppage in transitu (q.v.) only in cases of insolvency of the vendee. The Roman law did not generally consider the transfer of property to be complete by sale and delivery alone without payment or security given for the price, unless the vendor agreed to give a general credit to the purchaser; but it allowed the vendor to reclaim the goods out of the possession of the purchaser, as being still his own property. Quod vendidi (say the Pandects), non aliter fit accipientis, quam si aut pretium nobis solutum sit, aut satis eo nomine datum, vel etiam fidem habuerimus emptori sine ulla satisfactioe. The present code of France gives a privilege or right of revendication against the purchaser for the price of goods sold, so long as they remain in possession of the debtor. In respect to ships, a privilege is given by the same code to a certain class of creditors, such as vendors, builders, repairers, mariners, etc., upon the ship, which takes effect even against subsequent purchasers, until the ship has made a voyage after the purchase; and, by the general maritime law, acknowledged in most, if not in all, commercial countries, hypothecations and liens are recognized to exist for seamen's wages and for repairs of foreign ships, and for salvage.—Story's Confli. of Laws, s. 401.

Revenue, income, annual profit received from land or other funds; also money at the disposal of the Crown, i.e., the executive. The chief sources are (1) Crown property, surrendered to the nation; (2) taxation—income tax, death duties, customs and excise, stamp duties; (3) certain managed enterprises, such as the Post Office, and Lands, Woods and Forests and miscellaneous holdings such as shares in the Suez Canal, and other profits or fiscal prerogatives of the Crown.

See Halsb. Encycl. Laws of England, tit. 'Revenue'; Chitty's Statutes, tits. 'Cusoms,' 'Property Tax,' 'Death Duties,' 'Stamps,' and 'Revenue.'

Revenue causes were peculiarly within the province of the Court of Exchequer; the practice of which court in matters of revenue was regulated by the Queen's Remembrancer Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 21), ss. 9 et seq.; and the Crown Suits Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 104).

The jurisdiction of the Court of Exchequer was transferred to the High Court of Justice (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 16, see now Jud. Act, 1925, s. 18 (2) (iv.)); but all causes which would have been within the exclusive cognizance of the Court of Exchequer were assigned to the Exchequer Division of the High Court (ibid., s. 34), see now Jud. Act, 1925, s. 56 (2) (a); but in 1881, by Order in Council, under s. 32 of that Act, the Exchequer Division was merged in the Queen's Bench (now King's Bench) Division. The practice and proceedings on the revenue side of that division are, except as provided by R. S. C. Ord. LXVIII., not affected by the Rules of the Supreme Court.

Reverend, not a title of honour or dignity, and a person prefixing it to his name does not thereby claim to be in Holy Orders; see Keet v. Smith, (1875) 1 P. D. 73, in which case the incumbent of a parish having refused to allow a tombstone describing the deceased as a daughter of the 'Rev. H. Keet, Wesleyan Minister,' to be erected in his churchyard, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, allowing an appeal, ordered a faculty to issue for the erection of the tombstone.

Reversal of Judgment. A judgment might have been reversed without a writ of error, for matters foreign to or dehors the record, i.e., not apparent upon the face of it, so that they could not be assigned for error in the superior Courts, or by writ of error, which lay from all inferior jurisdictions to the King's Bench and thence to the Exchequer Chamber and the House of Lords. It was brought for mistakes as to matters of substance, appearing in the judgment or other parts of the record. See Steph. Com., 7th ed., iii. 579; iv. 463. See now R. S. C. Ord. LVIII.

Reverse, to undo, repeal, or make void.

Reversion, a reversioner.

Reversio terræ est tanquam terra revertens in possessione donatori, sive hæreditibus suis post donum finitum. Co. Litt. 142 b.—(A reversion of land is, as it were, the return of the land to the possession of the donor or his heirs after the termination of the estate granted.)

Reversion [fr. revertor, Lat.], that portion left of an estate after a grant of a particular portion of it, short of the whole estate, has been made by the owner to another person. It is thus described by Mr. Watkins (Conv. c. 16): 'When a person has interest in lands, and grants a portion of that interest, or in other terms, a less estate than he has in himself, the possession of those lands shall, on the determination of the granted interest or estate, return, or revert to the grantor. This interest is what is called the grantor's reversion, or, more properly, his right of reverter, which, however, is deemed an actual estate in the land, bearing the fruits of seigniority. Thus a grant to an estate by the owner of the fee-simple "to A. for life," leaves in the grantor the reversion in fee-simple, which will commence in possession after the determination of A.'s life-estate; and this is called the particular estate; particular, as carved or sliced out of the larger estate or reversion.'

Settled reversions of freehold or leasehold estates have been reduced to equitable interests by the Law of Property Act, 1925, but the word is also used to mean the freehold or leasehold reversion to a lease or term of years absolute in which case there is an estate in possession of the rents and profits as well as in the freehold or leasehold reversion, which together may form a legal estate subject to the term.

Reversion Duty. A duty imposed by the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, in certain cases on the determination of leases of more than twenty-one years. Repealed.

Reversionary, that which is to be enjoyed in reversion. Unconscionable bargains for the sale of reversionary interests may be set aside, but by the Sale of Reversions Act, 1867, reproduced by the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 174, not merely on the ground of under value. See EXPECTANT HEIR.

Reversionary Interests of Married Women in Personality. See Married Women's Reversionary Interests Act, 1857 ('Malins's Act'), 20 & 21 Vict. c. 57, enabling married women to dispose of such interests; Conveyancing Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 7, and Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 167, abolishing acknowledgments by married women.

Reversionary Lease, one to take effect in futuro. A second lease to commence after the expiration of a former lease. It did not create any term or estate, but only an interesse termini (see that title). By the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 149, a term at a rent or in consideration of a fine cannot be created in law to take effect more than twenty-one years from the date of the instrument purporting to create it, and see RENEWAL and OPTION. Consult Foa or Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant.

Reversioner, one who has a reversion.

Reverter, reversion.

Review. Under Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, s. 11, weekly payments can be reviewed at any time by either party. An application to a taxing master to reconsider certain items in a bill of costs which has been taxed is called an application to review (R. S. C. Ord. LXV., r. 27 (39)-(40)).

Review, Bill of, was in the nature of proceedings in error, and its object was to procure an examination and alteration or reversal of a final decree in Chancery duly signed and enrolled.

The objects of this proceeding may now be attained by an appeal to the Court of Appeal. See APPEAL.

Review, Bill in Nature of Bill of, filed where decree had not been enrolled.

Review, Commission of, a commission which was sometimes granted in extraordinary cases, to revise the sentence of the Court of Delegates, when it was apprehended they had been led into a material error. The Court of Delegates is abolished.

Reviling Church Ordinances, an offence against religion, punishable by fine and imprisonment.—4 Steph. Com.

Revised Reports. A republication of such cases in the English Courts of Law and Equity from 1785 to 1865 as are still of practical utility. Edited by Sir F. Pollock.

Revised Statutes. A republication by Government authority of such public general statutes as are still unrepealed, or parts of them. See ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

Revising Assessors, two officers elected by the burgesses of non-parliamentary municipal boroughs for the purpose of assisting the mayor in revising the parish burgess lists (Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, s. 29, and Sched. III.); but their duties were transferred to the revising barristers, and their office abolished by the County Electors Act, 1888.

Revising Barristers' Courts were courts presided over by a revising barrister which were held throughout the country each autumn to revise the list of voters for members of Parliament, for town councillors, and for county councillors. A revising barrister was appointed for one year, and was a member of the junior Bar of at least seven (originally three) years' standing. An appeal lay on a point of law to the High Court. These courts were finally abolished by the Representation of the People Act, 1918, which repealed the statutes under which they existed (Sched. VIII.).

Revive, to make oneself liable for a debt barred by the Statute of Limitations by acknowledging it; or for a matrimonial offence once condoned by committing another. The legal effect of an acknowledgment of a statute-barred debt is that of a promise to pay the old debt, and for this purpose the old debt is a consideration in law (Philips v. Philips, (1844) 3 Ha. 281, 299). As to what will amount to an acknowledgment, see Tanner v. Smart, (1827) 6 B. & C. 603; Re River Steamer Co., (1871) L. R. 6 Ch. 822; and LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, and, as to testamentary instruments, PUBLICATION.

Revivor. By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XLII., r. 23, where six years have elapsed since the judgment, or any change has taken place by death or otherwise in the parties entitled or liable to execution, the party alleging himself to be entitled to execution may apply to the Court or a judge for leave to issue execution accordingly. And such Court or judge may, if satisfied that the party so applying is entitled to issue execution, make an order to that effect, or may order that any issue or question necessary to determine the rights of the parties shall be tried in any of the ways in which any question in an action may be tried. And in either case such Court or judge may impose such terms as to costs or otherwise as shall be just. Ord. XVII. also provides for the non-abatement of a cause prior to judgment. See ABATEMENT.

Revivor, Bill of, was a bill filed to revive and continue the proceedings, whenever there was an abatement of the suit before its final consummation either by death or marriage. Bills of revivor were abolished by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 52.

Revocation, the undoing of a thing granted, or a destroying or making void of some deed that had existence until the act of revocation made it void. It may be either general, of all acts and things done before; or special, to revoke a particular thing.—5 Rep. 90.

Revocation and New Appointment. The appointor may reserve a power of revocation and new appointment in the deed of appointment, although not expressly authorized so to do by the assurance creating the power; and such a power may be reserved toties quoties. By a revocation the original power revives. When a deed of appointment contains no power of revocation it is absolute and cannot be revoked, although there be a power of revocation in the assurance creating the power. When a power is executed by will, an express power of revocation need not be reserved, since a will is always revocable. Consult Sugden or Farwell on Powers.

Revocation of Agency. An agency is dissolved or determined in several ways:—

(I.) By the act of the principal, either

(a) Express, as

(1) By direct and formal writing, publicly advertised;

(2) By informal writing to the agent privately;

(3) By parol; or

(b) Implied from circumstances, as by appointing another person to do the same act, where the authority of both would be incompatible.

The exceptions to the power of the principal to revoke his agent's authority at mere pleasure are—

(1) When the principal has expressly stipulated that the authority shall be irrevocable, and the agent has also an interest in its execution.

(2) Where an authority or power is coupled with an interest, or is given for a valuable consideration, or is a part of a security, unless there is an express stipulation that it shall be revocable.

(3) When an agent's act in pursuance of his authority has become obligatory, for nemo potest mutare consilium suum in alterius injuriam.

(II.) By the agent's giving notice to his principal that he renounces the agency; but the principal must sustain no damage thereby; otherwise the agent would be responsible therefor.

(III.) By operation of law, as

(a) By the expiration of the period during which the agency was to exist or to have effect.

(b) By a change of condition or of state, producing an incapacity of either the principal or the agent, as

(1) Mental disability established by inquisition, or where the party is placed under guardianship.

(2) Bankruptcy, excepting as to such rights as do not pass to the trustee under the adjudication.

(3) Death, unless the authority is coupled with an interest in the thing vested in the agent.

(4) By the extinction of the subject of the agency.

(5) By the ceasing of the principal's powers.

(6) By the complete execution of the trust confided to the agent, who then is functus officio. Consult Halsbury's Laws of England, tit. 'Agency.'

As to the law when the agent is constituted by power of attorney, see POWER OF ATTORNEY.

Revocation of Will. There are four modes in which a will can be revoked, viz.: (1) by another will or express declaration in, or by intention to be inferred from another properly executed testamentary instrument; (2) by burning or other act done animo revocandi; (3) by the disposition of the property by the testator in his lifetime; (4) by marriage, except in certain cases of testamentary appointment. By the first and third of these modes, the will may be revoked either entirely or partially; by the second and last, the revocation will be total, unless under the provisions of the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 177, the will has been made in contemplation of a particular marriage (Sallis v. Jones, 1936, P. 43).

Revocatione parliamenti, an ancient writ for recalling a parliament.—4 Inst. 44.

Reward, a recompense for anything done.

By the Criminal Law Act, 1826, s. 28, the Courts may order the sheriff of the county, in which certain offences have been committed, to pay the person active in or towards the apprehension of persons charged with felonies a reasonable sum to compensate for expense, exertion, and loss of time, and by s. 30, if a man be killed in attempting to take such offenders, the Court may order compensation to his wife or relatives. See Archbold, Crim. Pleading, etc., 25th ed., pp. 276 et seq.

Corruptly taking a reward for helping to the recovery of stolen property without exercising all due diligence to cause the offender to be brought to trial is punishable by penal servitude up to seven years (Larceny Act, 1916, s. 34, and cf. s. 5 (3)).

The offering of rewards by the Government has been discontinued for several years in England on the ground that persons committed crimes for the purpose of obtaining them by false accusations, and the Home Office, though urgently requested to offer a reward for the discovery of a series of murders in Whitechapel in 1888, steadily refused to do so. Advertising a reward for the return of property stolen or lost with the use of words 'purporting that no questions will be asked,' etc., or publishing any advertisement to that effect, entails a forfeiture of 50*l.* to any person who will sue for the same, by s. 102 of the Larceny Act, 1861; but by the Larceny (Advertisements) Act, 1870, an action under this section against a newspaper must be brought within six months, and with the consent of the Attorney-General.

As to notice to be given to the local authority of reception, death or removal of infants kept for reward, see Children and Young Persons Act, 1932, ss. 65 and 77, and Sch. II.; and see BRIBE.

Action for Reward.—An offer for reward for information is a contract to pay the reward to the first person giving it and to him only, his motive being immaterial. See Williams v. Carwardine, (1833) 4 B. & Ad. 621, and other cases in Chitty on Contracts.

Rex. See KING.

Rhandir, a part in the division of Wales before the Conquest; every township comprehended four gavels, and every gavel had four rhandirs, and four houses or tenements constituted every rhandir.—Taylor's Hist. Gav. 69.

Rhetoric, the art of speaking not merely correctly, but with art and elegance.—Latham. See Whateley's Elements of Rhetoric, Introduction, s. 1.

Rhodian Law, a code of maritime law made by the people of Rhodes.

Ribaud, a rogue, vagrant, whoremonger; a person given to all manner of wickedness.

Ribbonmen, associations or secret societies formed in Ireland, having for their object the dispossession of landlords by murder and fire-raising. See Alison's Hist. of Europe from 1815 to 1852, vol. 4, cap. 20, s. 13.

Richmond Forest, a royal forest founded by Charles I. As to Richmond Park, see 2 Hall. Const. Hist. 14, and PARKS.

Richmondshire, the part of Yorkshire about Richmond, North Yorkshire.

Rider, an inserted leaf or clause; an additional clause tacked to a bill passing through Parliament. Now usually applied to an additional opinion put forward by a jury in a criminal case with their verdict, as, for example, a recommendation to mercy.

Rider-roll, a schedule or small piece of parchment, often added to some part of a roll, record, or Act of Parliament.

Riding armed. The offence of riding or going armed with dangerous or unusual weapons is a misdemeanour tending to disturb the public peace by terrifying the good people of the land.—4 Steph. Com.

Riding Clerk, one of the Six Clerks in Chancery, who, in his turn, for one year, kept the controlment books of all grants that passed the Great Seal. The Six Clerks were superseded by the Clerks of Records and Writs.

Riding or Driving furiously, an offence against the Highway Act, 1835, s. 78 (if it endanger the life or limb of any passenger), punishable by fine up to 5*l.* (10*l.* if the owner) in addition to liability to civil action. See also Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, s. 28; Metropolitan Police Act, 1839, s. 54; Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 35; Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), s. 11; and see Chit. Stat., tits. 'Highways,' 'Police,' and 'Police (Metropolis).'

Ridings [corrupted from trithings], the names of the three parts or divisions of Yorkshire, viz., East Riding, North Riding, and West Riding.

Riens in Arrear, a plea which was used in an action for debt for arrearages of account, whereby the defendant alleged that there was nothing in arrear. See STATEMENT OF DEFENCE.

Riens passe per la fait (nothing passes by the deed), the form of an exception taken in some cases to an action on a deed. Obsolete.

Riens per descent (nothing by descent), the plea of an heir where he was sued for his ancestor's debts, and had no land from him by descent or assets in his hands.—3 Cro. 151. See now STATEMENT OF DEFENCE.

Rier, or Reer-county [fr. retro-comitatus, Lat.], close county, in opposition to open county. It appears to be some public place which the sheriff appoints for the receipt of the king's money after the end of the county court. Fleta says it is dies crastinus post comitatum.

Riffare [fr. reife, Sax.], to take away anything by force.

Right [fr. recht, Teut.; rectus, Lat.]. The application of the same word to denote a straight line and moral rectitude of conduct, has obtained in every language I know.—Dugald Stewart, in its primitive sense, that which the law directs; in popular acceptance, that which is so directed for the protection and advantage of an individual, is said to be his right.—1 Stark. Evid. 1, n. (b). It has been described as a liberty of doing or possessing something consistently with law, or more strictly, the liberty of the doing or possessing something for the infringement of which there is a legal sanction. It is often confused in the popular mind with licence for the doing of something which is not prohibited by law, however damaging the act may be to individuals or the community. See MALUM IN SE.

Right Close, Writ of, a writ which is directed unto the lord of ancient demesne, which lieth for those tenants within ancient demesne who hold their lands by charter in fee-simple, or in fee tail, or for life, or in dower.—Fitz. N. B. 11 F.; and see Mertens v. Hill, 1901, 1 Ch. p. 853.

Right in Court. See RECTUS IN CURIA.

Right Patent. An obsolete writ which was brought for lands and tenements, and not for an advowson, or common, and lay only for an estate in fee-simple, and not for him who had a lesser estate, as tenant-in-tail, tenant-in-frank marriage, or tenant for life.—Fitz. N. B. 1.

Right, Petition of. See PETITION OF RIGHT.

Right to Begin. If the affirmative of the issue is on the plaintiff, he, in general, has a right to begin. If in replevin the defendant avow for rent in arrear, and the plaintiff reply riens in arrear, the plaintiff must begin. In any action where the plaintiff seeks to recover damages of an unascertained amount, he is entitled to begin, though the affirmative be with the defendant.

In considering, however, which party ought to begin, it is not so much the form of the issue which is to be considered as the substance and effect of it, and the judge will consider what is the substantial fact to be made out, and on whom it lies to make it out. And it seems that, as a general rule, the party entitled to begin is he who would have a verdict against him if no evidence were given on either side.

In the Court of Appeal, and in all other civil appeals, the appellant's counsel begins.

On a appeal to quarter sessions from the petty sessions, the person who appears in support of the order of the magistrate begins. Consult Best on Evidence, ss. 636–639.

Right, Writ of [brevé de recto, Lat.], a procedure for the recovery of real property after not more than sixty years' adverse possession; the highest writ in the law, sometimes called the writ of right proper. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27; last used in 1835 in Davies v. Loundes, (1835) 1 Bing. N. C. 597.

Rights, Bill of. See BILL OF RIGHTS.

Ring-dropping, a trick variously practised. One mode is as follows, the circumstances being taken from Patch's case, 2 East, P. C. 678:—The prisoner, with accomplices, being with their victim, pretends to find a ring wrapt in paper, appearing to be a jeweller's receipt for a 'rich brilliant diamond ring.' They offer to leave the ring with the victim if he will deposit some money and his watch as a security. He lays his watch and money, is beckoned out of the room by one of the confederates, while the others take away his watch, etc. This is a larceny. See further 2 Russ. on Cr.

Ringling the Changes, a trick practised by a criminal, by which, on receiving a good piece of money in payment of an article, he pretends it is not good, and, changing it, returns to the buyer a counterfeit one, as in Frank's case, 2 Leach, 64 :—A man having bargained with the prisoner, who was selling fruit about the street, to have five apricots for sixpence, gave him a good shilling to change. The prisoner put the shilling into his mouth, as if to test it by biting, and returning a shilling, said it was a bad one. The buyer gave him a second, which he treated like the first, and returned with the same words, and so with a third shilling. The shillings he returned being bad, this was an uttering of false money.—1 Russ. on Cr., 5th ed. 231.

Riot, a tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three persons or more assembling of their own authority, with an intent mutually to assist one another against any who shall oppose them in the execution of some enterprise of a private nature, and afterwards actually executing the same in a violent and turbulent manner to the terror of the people, whether the act intended were of itself lawful or unlawful. By 13 Car. 2, c. 5, more than ten persons coming to present a petition to the King, and by 57 Geo. 3, c. 19, more than fifty persons near Westminster when Parliament is sitting, constitute a riot. The punishment for riots not falling within the provisions of the Riot Act is fine and imprisonment to which hard labour may, by 3 Geo. 4, c. 114, be superadded.

As to riots at elections, see 2 Wm. 4, c. 45, s. 70, and 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 36, s. 8.

In any case of riot, or even apprehended riot, all places where intoxicating liquors are sold may be ordered to be closed by justices of the peace, under s. 63 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, and in Scotland by the sheriff, under s. 12 of the Temperance (Scotland) Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 33).

The riotous demolition of buildings or machinery is felony by the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, s. 11, and see PUBLIC ORDER ACT.

Riot Act (1 Geo. 1, st. 2, c. 5), whereby if twelve or more persons assemble unlawfully, to the disturbance of the peace, and do not disperse within one hour after proclamation by a justice of the peace, sheriff, undersheriff, or mayor, they are felons, punishable by penal servitude for life, originally by death.

Riot Damages Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 38), providing compensation, out of the police rate, to any person sustaining damage by riot. From very early times (see the repealed Acts scheduled to 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27) compensation of some kind for damage by riot was recoverable from 'hundredors' (see HUNDREDORS), and the consolidating Act (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 31), regulated the procedure for obtaining the compensation, limiting the title to recover to cases where there had been a felonious demolition of property, and giving no compensation for property stolen. A serious riot occurring in the metropolis on February 8th, 1886, and disclosing insufficiency in the law of compensation, led very quickly to the Metropolitan Police Compensation Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 11), applicable to the metropolis only and retrospective, and shortly afterwards to the general Riot Damages Act, 1886, by which (1) the police district is substituted for the hundred as the area liable to compensation; (2) simple demolition is substituted for felonious demolition as giving the right to compensation; (3) compensation is given for stolen property; and (4) in fixing the amount of compensation, regard is to be had to the conduct of the claimant, whether as respects precautions taken by him, or the part taken by himself in the riot, or the provocation offered by him to the rioters. The time for sending in claims, and the procedure generally as to claims, is fixed by regulations of a Secretary of State. See the Riot (Claims for Compensation) Regulations dated October 1st, 1921 (No. 1536), which provide that claims shall be made in a specified form and within fourteen days; the time may, however, be extended to forty-two days. As to the elements which must have existed in the disturbance in order to constitute a 'riot' within the meaning of this Act, see Field v. Receiver for Metropolitan Police District, 1907, 2 K. B. 853.

Riparia, a mediæval-Latin word, which Sir Edward Coke takes to mean water running between two banks; in other places it is rendered 'bank.' See MAGNA CHARTA, cap. 15; 2 Inst. 478.

Riparian Nations, those who possess opposite banks or different parts of banks of one and the same river.—Inter. Law.

Riparian Proprietors, owners of lands bounded by a river or water-course. As to their duties, see Clayton v. Sale Urban District Council, 1926, 1 K. B. 415; WATER.

Ripon, Bishopric of, created pursuant to the report of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

Riptowell, or Reaptowel, a gratuity or reward given to tenants after they had reaped their lord's corn or done other customary duties.

Ripuarian Laws, a code of laws belonging to the Franks who occupied the country upon the Rhine.

Risk, in insurance, the danger, peril, or event insured against.

Risk Note, the name sometimes given to the special contract, sanctioned by s. 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31), but not binding on the consignor unless signed by him and also just and reasonable, exempting a railway or canal company from liability for loss of or injury by their negligence or that of their servants to goods or animals carried by them. Both before and after the decision of the House of Lords in Peck v. North Staffordshire Ry. Co., (1868) L. R. 10 H. L. 473, in which it was held, after summoning the judges, that the contracts must be both reasonable and signed, these risk notes have occasioned much litigation; see especially Great Western Ry. Co. v. McCarthy, (1887) 12 App. Cas. 218, to the effect that by offering alternative rates—a higher rate with the ordinary carrier's liability, and a lower rate with exemption from liability—a company may exempt themselves from all liability except for wilful misconduct: Sutcliffe v. G. W. Ry., 1910, 1 K. B. 478.

Ritual, the order of ministration and ceremonies in the Church of England.

Ritualism. See PUBLIC WORSHIP REGULATION ACT, 1874.

Rivage, or Rivagium, a toll anciently paid to the Crown for the passage of boats or vessels on certain rivers.—Jac. Law Dict.

Riveare, to have the liberty of a river for fishing and fowling.—Ibid.

Rivers Pollution Prevention Acts, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75), and 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 31). See Peckles v. Oswaldtwistle Council, 1897, 1 Q. B. 384, 625; Butterworth v. Yorkshire Rivers Board, 1909, A. C. 45; Brook v. Meltham Council, ib. 438, and see 13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 16, s. 8.

Rixa, a dispute or quarrel.—Civ. Law.

Rixatrix communis, a common scold.—4 Steph. Com.

Road, (1) a way or passage (see HIGHWAYS; WAY); (2) a secure place for the anchoring of vessels.

Road Board. A body established by the Road Improvement Funds Act, 1909 (s. 7), of persons appointed by the Treasury. The Ministry of Transport now exercises its powers and carries out its duties through the Ministry's Roads Department.

Road Fund. A fund established under s. 3 of the Roads Act, 1920, for dealing with moneys applicable to the improvement of roads received under the Act, and also under Part II. of the Development and Road Improvement Funds Act, 1909. The Fund is administered by the Ministry of Transport in accordance with these Acts and regulations made by the Treasury.

Road, Rule of the, the old common law rule, in riding or driving, to keep on the left side (sometimes called the near side) when meeting, and on the right when passing—a departure from which rule is punishable by s. 78 of the Highways Act, 1835, and also by Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations, 1931, S. R. & O. 1931, No. 4. See HIGHWAYS.

Robbery, the unlawful and forcible taking from the person of another, of goods or money to any value, by violence or putting him in fear. See Larceny Act, 1916, ss. 23 and 37, and the Garroters Act, 1863, by which robbery with violence is felony punishable by penal servitude and whipping, if the offender be a male.

Robberdsman, or Robertsman, a bold and stout robber or night thief, so called from Robin Hood, the famous robber, but, perhaps, a corruption of 'robber's-man.'—3 Inst. 197.

Rod, a measure of sixteen feet and a half long, otherwise called a perch.

Rod Knights, certain servitors who held their land by serving their lords on horseback.

Roe, Richard, otherwise Troublesome, the casual ejector and fictitious defendant in ejectment, whose services are no longer invoked. See JOHN DOE, and EJECTMENT.

Rogatio testium, bidding persons present to be witnesses to a nuncupative will.—1 Wms. Exs.

Rogation [fr. rogatio, Lat.], the demand by the consul or tribunes of law, to be passed by the people.—Civ. Law.

Rogation Week [fr. rogando (Deum), Lat., supplicating God], the second week before

Whit Sunday ; thus called from three fasts observed therein, the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, called Rogation days, because of the extraordinary prayers then made for the fruits of the earth, or as a preparation for the devotion of Holy Thursday, or the Ascension of our Lord.

Rogatory Letters, a commission from one judge to another requesting him to examine a witness.

Rogue, a wandering beggar, vagrant, vagabond. As to 'incurrible rogue,' or 'rogue and vagabond,' see VAGRANT.

Rogus, a funeral pile ; a great fire wherein dead bodies were burned ; a pile of wood.—Claus. 5 Hen. 3.

Rôle d'équipage [Fr.], the list of a ship's crew ; a muster-roll.

Roll, a schedule of parchment that may be turned up with the hand in the form of a pipe.—Staudf. P. C. 11. A list, as a burgess roll, a freeman's roll under the Municipal Corporations Act. All pleadings, memorials, and acts of court are entered on rolls, and filed with the proper officers, and then they become records of the Court.

Roll of Court, the court-roll in a manor, wherein the business of the court, the admissions, surrenders, names, rents, and services of the tenants are copied and enrolled. 'Copyhold lands are lands holden by copy of court roll ; that is, the muniments of the title are copies of the roll or book in which an account is kept of the proceedings in the Court of the manor to which the lands belong.'—Williams on Real Property. As to custody, and superintendence, of the Master of the Rolls, see COPYHOLD, and Law of Property Act, 1924, 2nd Sched.

Rolling Stock. By the Railway Rolling Stock Protection Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 50), rolling stock of a railway company, when out on sidings, etc., belonging to private occupiers, is exempted from distress for rent due from the occupiers. The rolling stock is protected from execution by s. 4 of the Railway Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 127), made perpetual by 38 & 39 Vict. c. 31.

Rolls, Master of the. See MASTER OF THE ROLLS.

Rolls Office of the Chancery, an office in Chancery Lane, London, which contained rolls and records of the High Court of Chancery.

This house or office was anciently called Domus Conversorum, as being appointed by King Henry III. for the use of converted Jews, but their irregularities occasioned

King Edward II. to expel them thence, upon which the place was deputed for the custody of the rolls.

Rolls of the Exchequer. There are several in this court relating to the revenue of the country.

Rolls of Parliament, the manuscript registers of the proceedings of our old Parliaments. In these rolls are likewise a great many decisions of difficult points of law which were frequently, in former times, referred to the determination of this supreme court by the judges of both benches, etc.

'Formerly all bills were drawn in the form of petitions which were entered upon the parliament rolls, with the king's answer thereunto subjoined ; not in any settled form of words, but as the circumstances of the case required ; and at the end of each parliament, the judges drew them into the form of a statute, which was entered on the statute rolls.'—1 Bl. Com. 181.

Rolls of the Temple. In the two Temples was a roll called the Calves-head Roll, wherein every bench, barrister, and student, was taxed yearly at so much to the cook and other officers of the houses, in consideration of a dinner of calves-head, provided in Easter term.—Orig. Jurid. 199.

Rolypoly, a form of roulette. See GAMING.

Roman Catholics. Very severe laws, commonly called the penal laws, were passed against Roman Catholics, generally under the name of Papists (see that title), after the Reformation, an Act of Elizabeth, for instance, 13 Eliz. c. 2, punishing with the penalties of a præmunire (see that title) any person bringing into this country any Agnus Dei, cross, picture, etc., from Rome ; an Act of James, 3 Jac. 1, c. 5, penalizing the sale or purchase of Popish primers ; and an Act of William and Mary (11 & 12 Wm. 3, c. 4), punishing any Papist assuming the education of youth with imprisonment for life. Exclusion from Parliament was effected by the requirement of the Declaration against Transubstantiation (see TRANSUBSTANTIATION) from members of either House by 30 Car. 2, s. 2, and disfranchisement by the requirements of the Oath of Supremacy by 7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 27, s. 19 ; while 7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 24, effected (until 1791) exclusion from the profession of barrister, attorney, or solicitor by requiring a declaration against Transubstantiation under 25 Car. 2, c. 2.

Roman Catholic disabilities have now been almost completely removed, the Roman Catholic Relief Acts of 1791 (31 Geo. 3, c. 32), for freedom of worship with unlocked doors, and that of 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), for enfranchisement and qualification for seat in Parliament, being the main factors in the removal, and the Roman Catholic Charities Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 115), subjecting Roman Catholics to the same laws as Protestant dissenters in respect to schools and places for religious worship, education, and charitable purposes.

Diplomatic relations with the 'Sovereign of the Roman States' were allowed by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 108, which, however, prohibited the sovereign of this country from receiving as ambassador accredited by him any priest, Jesuit, or 'member of any other religious order bound in monastic or religious vows.'

The Act of Settlement, however, 12 & 13 Wm. 3, c. 2 (see SETTLEMENT, ACT OF), requires the sovereign to be a Protestant; and the Act of 1829 itself contains a series of enactments directed to the purpose of the 'gradual suppression and final prohibition' of 'Jesuits, and members of other religious orders, communities, or societies of the Church of Rome, bound by religious or monastic vows,' with a saving, however, for any 'religious order, community, or establishment of females bound by religious or monastic vows.' The Roman Catholic Charities Act, 1832 (see s. 4), does not in any way repeal these sections, which provide for the banishment of the persons named therein. In January, 1902, it was sought for the first time (see JESUITS) to enforce the sections. See Anstey's Guide to the Law affecting Roman Catholics (1842) and Lilly and Wallis's Manual of the Law specially affecting Catholics (1893). The authors of the latter work, and also the writer of the article 'Roman Catholic' in the Encyclopædia of the Laws of England, seem to be of the opinion that the Act of 1829 disables the religious orders therein mentioned to hold property in their corporate capacity.

The Act does not, it seems, operate to render void an absolute immediate bequest to individuals ascertained at the death of the testator (Re Smith, 1914, 1 Ch. 937).

As to whether or not a Roman Catholic may be Lord Chancellor, see the statement of Sir J. Coleridge, A.-G. (afterwards Lord Chief Justice of England), in the House of Commons on May 6, 1872. The Act of 1829 merely provides (by s. 12) that nothing in it shall extend to enable 'any person professing the Roman Catholic religion to hold the office of regent,' nor 'to enable any person, otherwise than he is now by law enabled,' to hold the office of Lord Chancellor of Great Britain or Ireland, or of Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, or Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. See also Office and Oath Act, 1867, which permitted the Lord Chancellor of Ireland to be a Roman Catholic. The office was abolished by Part II. of the Irish Free State (Consequential Provisions) Act, 1922 (session 2). See JESUITS.

See also the Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 55), which does not apply to Northern Ireland, and safeguards powers to regulate and control processions and repeals and amends a number of Acts (see Sched., ibid.).

Roman Civil Law. See CIVIL LAW.

Roma-Peditæ, pilgrims who travelled to Rome on foot.—Mat. Paris, anno 1250.

Rome. See ROMAN CATHOLICS and PRÆMUNIRE. 25 Hen. 8, c. 21, ss. 1 and 17, and 1 Eliz. c. 1, s. 2, forbade the payment of Peter-pence to the Pope of Rome.

Rome-scot, or Rome-penny, Peter-pence, which see.—Cowel.

Romilly's Act (52 Geo. 3, c. 101) (the Charities Procedure Act, 1812). As to charity abuses, see CHARITIES.

Romney Marsh, a tract of land, in Kent, governed by certain ancient and equitable laws of sewers, from which commissioners of sewers may receive light and direction.—4 Inst. 276; 3 Steph Com.; and see also the Municipal Corporations Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 18), saving certain rights in respect of Romney Marsh.

Rood, or Holy Rood, holy cross.

Rood of Land, the fourth part of an acre, or 1210 square yards.

Rooks are animals (feræ naturæ), and no action is maintainable for scaring them away from a rookery by discharging guns near it (Hannam v. Mockett, (1824) 2 B. & C. 934). But see FERÆ NATURÆ and the qualified right of property, and therefore of action, ratione impotentie in regard to young birds' nests.

Rope-dancers. Unlicensed booths and stages for rope-dancers and mountebanks are public nuisances, and may, upon indictment, be suppressed, and the keepers of them fined.—1 Hawk. P. C. 75, s. 6.

Ros, a kind of rushes, which some tenants were obliged by their tenure to furnish their lords withal.

Rosland, heathy ground, or ground full of ling; also, watery and moorish land.—See Co. Litt. 5 a.

Roster, a list of persons who are to perform certain legal duties when called upon in their turn. In military affairs it is a table or plan by which the duty of officers is regulated.

Rota, the system by which succession to the functions of a temporary office is regulated among the persons who are to discharge them. See, e.g., Parliamentary Elections Act, 1868, s. 11.

Rother-beasts, oxen, cows, steers, heifers, and suchlike horned animals.—Jac. Law Dict.

Rotulus Wintoniæ (the Roll of Winton), an exact survey of all England, made by Alfred, not unlike that of Domesday; so called because kept at Winchester, among other records of the kingdom; but this roll time has destroyed.—Ingulph. Hist. 516.

Roulette. See GAMING.

Round-robin, a circle divided from the centre, like King Arthur's Round Table, whence its supposed origin. In each compartment is a signature, so that the entire circle, when filled, exhibits a list without priority being given to any name. A common form of round-robin is simply to write the names in a circular form. For an account of perhaps the most famous round-robin on record, see Boswell's Johnson, ed. by Birkbeck Hill, vol. iii. p. 82.

Rout, a disturbance of the peace by persons assembling with an intention to do a thing which, if it be executed, will make them rioters, and actually making a motion towards its execution.—4 Steph. Com.

Roy. See KING.

Roy, Royan, a Hindoo title, given to the principal officer of the Khalsa, or chief treasurer of the exchequer.—Indian.

Royal Arms. There are two statutory provisions relating to the unauthorized use of the Royal Arms, namely, s. 68 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905 (see TRADE MARKS), which is as follows :—

68.—If any person, without the authority of His Majesty, uses in connexion with any trade, business, calling, or profession, the Royal Arms (or arms so closely resembling the same as to be calculated to deceive) in such manner as to be calculated to lead to the belief that he is duly authorized so to use the Royal Arms, or if any person without the authority of His Majesty or of a member of the Royal Family, uses in connexion with any trade, business, calling, or profession any device, emblem, or title in such manner as to be calculated to lead to the belief that he is employed by or supplies goods to His Majesty or such member of the Royal Family, he may, at the suit of any person who is authorized to use such arms or such device, emblem, or title, or is authorized by the Lord Chamberlain to take proceedings in that behalf, be restrained by injunction or interdict from continuing so to use the same: Provided that nothing in this section shall be construed as affecting the right, if any, of the proprietor of a trade mark containing any such arms, device, emblem, or title to continue to use such trade mark.

And s. 90 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (see LETTERS-PATENT), which is as follows :—

90.—(1) The grant of a patent under this Act shall not be deemed to authorize the patentee to use the Royal Arms or to place the Royal Arms on any patented article.

(2) If any person, without the authority of His Majesty, uses in connexion with any business, trade, calling, or profession the Royal Arms (or arms so nearly resembling them as to be calculated to deceive) in such manner as to be calculated to lead to the belief that he is duly authorized to use the Royal Arms, he shall be liable on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts to a fine not exceeding twenty pounds.

Provided that nothing in this section shall be construed as affecting the right, if any, of the proprietor of a trade mark containing such arms to continue to use such trade mark.

The word 'Royal' may (semble) be used in such a way as to negative any suggestion of the enjoyment of royal patronage (Re Royal Worcester, etc., Application, 1909, 1 Ch. 459, per Parker, J.). As to the use of the Prince of Wales's feathers and motto, see Re Imperial Tobacco Co., 1915, 2 Ch. 57.

Royal Assent. The act by which the Crown agrees to a bill which has already passed both Houses is called 'The Royal Assent,' which may be given by the sovereign in person in the House of Lords, the Commons standing at the bar; or by the Commissioners appointed by the Crown, under the Declaratory Act (33 Hen. 8, c. 21), for that special purpose and for the single occasion. The forms observed in both cases do not vary, and are as follows: The Lords being assembled in their own House, the Sovereign or the Commissioners seated, and the Commons at the bar, the titles of the several bills which have passed both Houses are read, and the king's or queen's answer is declared by the Clerk of the Parliaments in Norman-French. To a bill of supply, the assent is given in the following words: 'Le roy (or, la reine) remercie ses loyaux sujets, accepte leur b n volence et ainsi le veut.' To a private bill it is thus declared: 'Soit fait comme il est d sir .' And to public general bills it is given in these terms: 'Le roy (or, la reine) le veut.' Should the sovereign refuse assent, it is in the gentle language of 'Le roy (or, la reine) s'avisera.' As acts of grace and amnesty originate with the Crown, the Clerk, expressing the gratitude of the subject, addresses the throne as follows: 'Les pr l ts, seigneurs, et communs, en ce pr sent parlement assembl s, au nom de tout vos autres sujets remercient très humblement votre majesté et prient à Dieu vous donner en santé bonne vie et longue.' The moment the royal assent has been given, that which was a bill becomes an Act, and instantly has the force and effect of law as from the beginning of that day, unless some time for the commencement of its operation should have been specially appointed (Tomlinson v. Bullock, (1879) 4 Q. B. D. 230).

Queen Elizabeth, at the end of one session, rejected forty-eight bills agreed to by both Houses. The power of rejection was exercised in the year 1692 by William III., who at first refused, but in two years afterwards yielded, assent to the bill for triennial parliaments; and for the last time in 1707, when Queen Anne refused her assent to a Scotch militia bill.—Dod's Parl. Com. 94.

Royal Burghs in Scotland are incorporated by royal charter, giving jurisdiction to the magistrates within certain bounds, and vesting certain privileges in the inhabitants and burgesses. A burgh is called a royal burgh if it hold of the Crown; if it hold of a subject it is termed a burgh of barony.

Royal College of Physicians. See PHYSICIAN.

Royal College of Surgeons. See SURGEON.

Royal Courts of Justice, the statutory name, by Jud. Act, 1925, s. 222, replacing s. 28 of the Jud. (Officers) Act, 1879, of the Law Courts, on the north side of the Strand, between St. Clement Danes Church and Chancery Lane, in which the business of the Supreme Court is transacted. The erection of buildings for bringing together into one place 'all the superior Courts of Law and Equity, the Probate and Divorce Courts and the Court of Admiralty' recommended by a Royal Commission in 1858 was authorized by Parliament in 1865 by the Courts of Justice Building Act and the Courts of Justice Concentration (Site) Act (28 & 29 Vict. cc. 48, 49). The Royal Courts were formally opened by Queen Victoria on the 4th of December, 1882, and opened for business on the 11th of January, 1883, the Judges' Chambers and other offices having been opened for business in January, 1880. Prior to the opening, the Chancery Division of the High Court occupied courts at Lincoln's Inn, and the Queen's Bench and Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division Courts adjoining Westminster Hall.

'Guildhall Sittings' for the transaction of London City vis prius business were also held in the Guildhall, but provision was made by s. 20 of the Courts of Justice Building

Act, 1865, for removing such business to the Royal Courts on request of the City Common Council, which request having been made, the business was removed accordingly, an Order in Council directing in May, 1883, that London causes were to be tried for ever thereafter at the Royal Courts. But in 1891 the Supreme Court of Judicature (London Causes) Act, 1891 (54 Vict. c. 14), directed that, notwithstanding the Act of 1865 and any Order in Council thereunder, sittings may be held in the City of London by judges of the High Court; and two judges commenced to hold such sittings in November, 1891; but such sittings have been discontinued. See COMMERCIAL COURT.

Royal Fish. Whale and sturgeon. These, when either thrown ashore, or caught near the coast, are the property of the King, on account of their superior excellence.—1 Bl. Com. 290. Porpoises are also said to be royal fish; see Hall on the Sea Shore, 2nd ed. p. 80, App. xli. The right to royal fish may be vested in a subject by grant from the Crown or prescription.

Royal Forests. A hunting territory for the King's princely delight and pleasure. Its boundaries are ascertained by record, or prescription; formerly administered by laws and officers belonging to the forest, with special courts and a particular law. These were obsolescent as long since as the end of the sixteenth century. Control and jurisdiction are now vested in the Commissioners of Crown lands. See Crown Lands Acts, 1851 and 1866, and Forestry Acts, 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 58), and 1927 (17 Geo. 5, c. 6); and see Manwood's Forest Laws and Husb. L. E., tit. 'Constit. Law.'

Royal Grants, conveyances of record. They are of two kinds: (1) letters-patent; and (2) letters-close, or writs-close.—1 Steph. Com.

Royal Marriage Act (12 Geo. 3, c. 11), by which no descendant of King George II. may marry without the previous consent of the sovereign, signified under the Great Seal, unless above the age of twenty-five, in which case the marriage may take place after twelve months' notice, unless disapproved by Parliament.

Royal Mines, gold and silver mines: the Crown has a right of pre-emption of any gold or silver found in mines of copper, tin, iron, or lead, by virtue of 1 & 2 W. & M. sess. 1, c. 30, s. 4; 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 6; and 55 Geo. 3, c. 134.

Royal Title, '[George VI.] by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of all the British dominions beyond the seas, King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India.' The words 'British dominions beyond the seas' were added by King Edward VII. in pursuance of the Royal Titles Act, 1901, and the title of Empress of India had been added by Queen Victoria in pursuance of the Royal Titles Act, 1876, to the Royal Titles given under the Union Acts.

Royalty, payment to a patentee by agreement on every article made according to his patent; or to an author by a publisher on every copy of his book sold; or to the owner of minerals for the right of working the same on every ton or other weight raised.

R. S. C., Rules of the Supreme Court. See that title and RULES OF COURT.

Rubric, directions printed in books of law and in prayer-books, so termed because they were originally distinguished by red ink.

Rubric of a Statute, its title, which was anciently printed in red letters. It serves to show the object of the legislature, and thence affords the means of interpreting the body of the Act. Hence the phrase of an argument à rubro ad nigrum.

Rubrics, constitutions of the Church founded upon the Statutes of Uniformity and Public Prayer. viz., 5 & 6 Edw. 6, t. 1; 1 Eliz. c. 2; 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 4.

Rudmas-day [fr. rode, Sax., cross, and mass-day], the feast of the Holy Cross. There are two of these feasts: one on the 3rd of May, the Invention of the Cross; and the other on the 14th of September, called the Holy Rood-day, the Exaltation of the Cross.

Ruffanamah, an agreement.—Indian.

Rules of Court, orders regulating the practice of the Courts; or orders made between parties to an action or suit.

(1) General rules regulating the practice of the Courts, both of Common Law and Equity, have from time to time been made by the Courts in pursuance of the powers of various Acts of Parliament. See as to the Common Law Courts, which promulgated consecutive Rules without any division into Orders, Day's Common Law Procedure Acts; and as to the Court of Chancery, which promulgated Orders subdivided into Rules, Morgan's Chancery Acts and Orders. The scheme of the Chancery Procedure Acts was that the Orders made thereunder should come into force as soon as made, subject to the power of Parliament to annul them afterwards (see, e.g., Chancery Procedure Act, 1858, s. 12), while that of the Common Law Procedure Acts was that Rules made thereunder should not come into force until they had lain before Parliament for three months (see 13 & 14 Vict. c. 16, and Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, s. 223). The present practice (see Judicature Act, 1875, s. 25) follows that of the Chancery Procedure Acts, allowing Rules to come into force as soon as made, but requiring them to be laid before each House of Parliament, an address from which within a limited time may invalidate them; and the Rules Publication Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 66), also provides for the consideration by any public body interested, of draft Rules, and for the consideration by the authority making the Rules of suggestions by any such body.

A large body of Orders subdivided into Rules was appended to the Judicature Act, 1875, s. 17, of which allowed a majority of the judges to alter, annul, or add to them from time to time. The 17th section of the App. Jur. Act, 1876, as amended by s. 19 of the Jud. Act, 1881, delegates this power to a committee, commonly called the 'Rule Committee,' of any five or more of eight judges, to whom have been added two practising barristers and two practising solicitors by the Judicature (Rule Committee) Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 11). The Rules made from time to time under the authority of these Acts are called 'Rules of the Supreme Court.' They were consolidated with many amendments in 1883 by the 'Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883.' Further amendments are made in them as need arises.

By the Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 14, 'Rules of Court' means (when used in relation to any Court), in any Act passed in or after 1890, 'rules made by the authority having for the time being power to make rules or orders regulating the practice and procedure of such Court,' and as regards Scotland, 'includes acts of adjournal and acts of sederunt.'

(2) Rules by Order of Court. At Common Law, rules on the plea side of the Courts were common, being obtained from the master, without motions by counsel; or special, obtained upon motion by counsel.

Those granted upon motion by counsel might be classed under the following heads: 1st, those which were granted upon the motion-paper being merely signed by a counsel without any motion being actually made in Court; 2nd, those which were considered so much as a matter of course, that the grounds of the motion were not particularized by counsel, and where, in some instances, counsel might hand the motion-paper to one of the masters, without making the motion vivi voce ; and, 3rd, those which were granted upon the grounds of the motion being particularized by counsel.

The first class of the above rules were absolute in the first instance ; the second and third were either absolute in the first instance, or rules to show cause, commonly called rules nisi, which were made absolute after service unless good cause shown to the contrary.—2 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 1577 et seq.

By the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. LIII., rr. 2, 3, no rule or order to show cause shall be granted in any action except in the cases in which an application for such rule or order is expressly authorized by the Rules ; and a notice of motion must be given where the motion is not for a rule to show cause or a motion on which, by the old practice, a rule was granted ex parte absolute in the first instance. See, further, MOTION ; NEW TRIAL ; and consult the Annual Practice.

Rules of the Supreme Court, the Rules scheduled to the Judicature Act, 1875, and subsequent Rules amending the same. So called by virtue of the Rules of the Supreme Court, December, 1875. See RULES.

Rules of the Supreme Court (Costs). The Rules respecting costs made by Order in Council of the 12th of August, 1875, repealed and re-enacted with amendments by the Rules of 1883. See A. P., Appx. N.

Ruling Cases, cases having much the same character and effect as Leading Cases (see that title).

Run, to take effect in point of place, as to the king's writ in given localities ; or in point of time, as of the Statute of Limitations.

Runcaria, land full of brambles and briars.—Co. Litt. 5 a.

Runcilus, Runcinus, a load-horse, sumpter-horse, cart-horse.

Rundlet, or Runlet, a measure of wine, oil, etc., containing eighteen gallons and a half.—1 Rich. 3, c. 13.

Running Days. See LAY DAYS.

Runrig Lands. Lands in Scotland where the ridges of a field belong alternately to different proprietors. Anciently this kind of possession was advantageous in giving a united interest to tenants to resist inroads. By Act 1695, c. 23, a division of these lands was authorized, with the exception of lands belonging to corporations.

Run with the Land—Run with the Reversion. A covenant is said to 'run with the land,' either leased or conveyed in fee, when either the liability to perform it, or the right to take advantage of it, passes to the assignee of that land. A covenant is said to 'run with the reversion' to land leased when either the liability to perform it, or the right to take advantage of it, passes to the assignee of that reversion. Consult Spencer's case, (1583) 1 Sm. L. C. 1, where a list of the covenants running with the land and not so running is given ; and see, too, Woodfall, L. & T. ; Dyson v. Forster, 1909, A. C. 98.

The benefit of a covenant made after 1925 running with the land is to be deemed to be made with the covenantee, his successors in title and the persons deriving title under him or them ; and in connection with restrictive covenants, 'successors in title' includes owners and occupiers for the time being of the land intended to be benefited (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 78). Sect. 58 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, is repealed without affecting the operation of the covenants made under that Act.

A corresponding provision is made in regard to the burden of such covenants if made after 1925, and these covenants may relate to some Act relating to the land notwithstanding that the subject-matter is not in existence. In none of these cases of benefit or burden of covenants made after 1925 is it necessary that the successors in title or assigns or other persons should be expressly referred to. In regard to covenants running with the reversion upon conveyance, assignment, or severance, or on ceasing of a lease as to part of the land, see ss. 140, 141 and 142 of the L. P. Act, 1925, replacing and extending 32 Hen. 8, c. 34 ; the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859, s. 3 ; ss. 10 to 12 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 ; and s. 2 of the Conveyancing Act, 1911. Under s. 140 of the Act of 1925, as amended by the L. P. Amendment Act, 1926, where the assignee of part of a reversion to an agricultural holding can give notice to quit in respect of that part, the lessee has the right within one month of the notice to give notice to determine the lease as to the whole of the land demised (see Bebington v. Wildman, 1921, 1 Ch. 559, and COVENANT).

Rupée, a silver coin rated at 2s. for the current, and 2s. 3d. for the Bombay, rupee.

The value, however, fluctuates. And see SIOCCA RUPPEE.

Ruptarii or Ruttarii, soldiers.—Mat. Paris, anno 1199.

Ruptura, arable land, or ground broke up.

Rural Authority. Under the Public Health Act, 1936, s. 1, means the council of a rural district, provided that where a direction such as is mentioned in the Local Government Act, 1933, s. 42 (2) is in force; a reference to a rural authority in the P. H. Act shall be construed as a reference to the council temporarily administering the affairs of the district. So far as a rural district council is a council of a county district, it is an authority invested with the duty of carrying the P. H. Act into execution as provided by the Act without prejudice to the exercise by a parish council of any powers conferred upon such councils. Under s. 12, ibid., rural districts may constitute special purpose areas for charging exclusively sewage, water, or drainage expenses, and see s. 308, ibid., as to such expenses. Sect. 13 enables the Minister of Health to invest any rural district or any contributory place therein with urban powers. See WATCHING AND LIGHTING.

Rural Deanery, the circuit of an archdeacon's and rural dean's jurisdictions. Every rural deanery is divided into parishes.

Rural Deans, very ancient officers of the Church (almost grown out of use, until, about the middle of the last century, they were generally revived), whose deaneries are an ecclesiastical division of the diocese or archdeaconry. They are deputies of the bishop, planted all round his diocese, to inspect the conduct of the parochial clergy, to inquire into and report dilapidations, and to examine candidates for confirmation, armed in minuter matters with an inferior degree of judicial and coercive authority.

Rural District Council. The council of an administrative area, such as existed at the passing of the Local Government Act, 1933, forming a county district part of an administrative county under that Act (see s. 1, ibid.), and a local authority under that Act (s. 305). See RURAL AUTHORITY.

Rural Sanitary District. Under the public Health Act, 1875, the area of any union (see that title) not coincident in area with an urban sanitary district (see that title), nor wholly included in an urban sanitary district; the guardians of the union formed the rural authority. See now RURAL AUTHORITY.

Rustici, churls, clowns, or inferior country tenants, who held cottages and lands by the services of ploughing, and other labours of agriculture, for the lord. The land of such ignoble tenure was called by the Saxons gafalland, as afterwards socage tenure, and was sometimes distinguished by the name of terra rusticorum.—Paroch. Antiq. 136.

Ruta, things extracted from land, as sand, chalk, coal, and other such matters.—Civ. Law.

Rutland, Statute of, 12 Edw. 1.

Ryot, a peasant, subject, tenant of house or land.—Indian.

S.

S. P., sine prole, without issue; d.s.p. means 'demisit sine prole,' i.e. 'died without issue.'

Sabbatum, the Sabbath; also peace.—Domesday. See SUNDAY.

Sabbulonarium, a gravel pit, or liberty to dig gravel and sand; money paid for the same.

Sable, the heraldic term for black. It is called Saturn by those who blazon by planets, and Diamond by those who use the names of jewels. Engravers commonly represent it by numerous perpendicular and horizontal lines crossing each other.

Sac, the privilege enjoyed by a lord of a manor of holding courts, trying causes, and imposing fines.

Saca, cause, sake.

Sacaburth, Sacabere, Sakabere, he that is robbed, or by theft deprived of his money or goods, and puts in surety to prosecute the felon with fresh suits.—Bract., l. 3, c. 32. The Scots term it sikerborgh (that is, securum plegium).—Spelm.

Sacculari [Lat.] cut-purses.

Saccus cum brochia, a service or tenure of finding a sack and a broach (pitcher) to the sovereign for the use of the army.—Bract. l. 2, c. 16.

Sacquer, an ancient officer, whose business was to load and unload vessels laden with salt, corn, or fish, to prevent the ship's crew defrauding the merchant by false tale, cheating him of his merchandise.—Mar. Law.

Sacrament. In the Church of England there are two sacraments only—Baptism and the Supper of the Lord; Confirmation, Penance, Orders, Matrimony, and Extreme Unction are not recognized as sacraments (Art. XXV.). The term 'Sacrament' is commonly used to mean the Holy Communion. Reviling the Sacrament is punishable by fine and imprisonment (1 Edw. 6, c. 1), and administration of the Sacrament in both kinds is enjoined by s. 7 of the same Act, 'excepte necessitie otherwise require,' and the same section enacts that 'the minister shall not without lawful cause deny the same.' In the Roman Catholic Church the cup is not administered to the laity.

For a clergyman to refuse without lawful cause to administer the Sacrament to a parishioner is an offence against the laws ecclesiastical, for which he may be proceeded against under the Church Discipline Act (Jenkins v. Cook, (1876) 1 P. D. 80). The Holy Communion cannot be refused to a person because he has married his deceased wife's sister (Thompson v. Dibdin, 1912, A. C. 533); and see Canon 27 and the ante-Communion Rubrics in the Prayer Book. The reservation of the Sacrament is unlawful (Oxford (Bishop of) v. Henly, 1907 P. 88).

Sacramentum, an oath. As to the sacramenti actio of the Civil Law, see Sand. Just., and Cum. C. L. 313.

Sacramentum si fatuum fuerit, licet falsum, tamen non committit perjurium. 2 Inst. 167.—(A foolish oath, though false, makes not perjury.)

Sacrilege, larceny from a church. By s. 24, Larceny Act, 1916, breaking and entering any church, chapel, meeting-house, or other place of Divine worship and committing any felony therein, or being therein and committing any felony therein, and breaking out of the same, is felony punishable by penal servitude or imprisonment. The offence was for a long time capital, the last execution having taken place in 1819.

Also the alienation to laymen of property given to pious uses.—Par. Ant. 390.

Sacristan, a sexton, anciently called sagereson or sagiston; the keeper of things belonging to Divine worship.

Sadberge, a denomination of part of the county palatine of Durham.—Camd. Brit.

Sæmend, an umpire, arbitrator.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Sævittia [Lat.], cruelty. See CRUELTY.

Safe-conduct, (1) convoy; guard through an enemy's country; (2) a document allowing such a journey. It is a prerogative of the Crown to grant safe-conducts.

Safe-guard, a protection of the Crown to one who is a stranger, that fears violence from some of its subjects, for seeking his right by course of law.—Reg. Brev. 26.

Safe-pledge, a surety appointed for one's appearance at a day assigned.—Bract. l. 4.

Sagaman, a tale-teller; secret accuser.

Sagibaro, Sachbaro, a judge.—Leg. Inæ., c. vi.

Sailing Instructions, written or printed directions delivered by the commanding officer of a convoy to the several masters of the ships under his care, by which they are enabled to understand and answer his signals, to know the place of rendezvous appointed by the fleet in case of dispersion by storm, by an enemy, or otherwise. Without sailing instructions no vessel can have the protection and benefit of convoy.—Mar. Ins.; Anderson v. Pücher, (1800) 2 Bos. & P. 164.

Saint Martin-le-Grand, Court of. A writ of error formerly lay from the sheriff's courts in the City of London to the court of hustings, before the mayor, recorder, and sheriffs; and thence to justices appointed by the royal commission, who used to sit in the church of St. Martin-le-Grand; and from the judgment of those justices a writ of error lay immediately to the House of Lords.—Fitz. N. B. 32.

Saisie-arret [Fr.], an attachment of property in the possession of a third person.

Saladine Tenth, a tax imposed in England and France, in 1188, by Pope Innocent III., to raise a fund for the crusade undertaken by Richard I. of England and Philip Augustus of France against Saladin, Sultan of Egypt, then going to besiege Jerusalem. By this tax every person who did not enter himself a crusader was obliged to pay a tenth of his yearly revenue and of the value of all his movables, except his wearing apparel, books, and arms. The Carthusians, Bernardines, and some other religious persons were exempt. Gibbon remarks that when the necessity for this tax no longer existed, the Church still clung to it as too lucrative to be abandoned, and thus arose the tithing of ecclesiastical benefices for the Pope or other sovereigns; and see the preamble to 23 Hen. 8, c. 20, wherein it is recited that the Court of Rome exacted great sums of money under the title of annates or first-fruits, which were first suffered to be taken within the realm 'for thonlye defence of Cristen people ayenst thinfideles.'—Encyc. Londin.

Salary, a recompense or consideration generally periodically made to a person for his service in another person's business; also wages, stipend, or annual allowance. See RECEIPT.

The ancients derive the word from sal, salt (Plin. H. N. xxxi. 42)—the most necessary thing to support human life being thus mentioned as a representative of all others.

Sale. Blackstone (2 Com. 446) defines it as 'a transmutation of property from one man to another in consideration of some price,' and the Sale of Goods Act (see below) defines a contract of sale of goods as 'a contract whereby the seller transfers or agrees to transfer the property in goods to the buyer for a money consideration called the price.'

As to sales of land, see ABSTRACT; CONDITIONS OF SALE; CONTRACT FOR SALE OF LAND; ESTATE CONTRACT; LAND CHARGES; PRIORITY NOTICE; and Williams or Dart on Vendors and Purchasers; and as to sale of goods, see Benjamin on Sales and Sale of Goods Act.

All causes and matters for the specific performance of contracts between vendors and purchasers of real estates are assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice, as are also all causes and matters for the partition or sale of real estates (Jud. Act, 1925, s. 56 (1) (b)).

Sale, Bill of. See BILL OF SALE.

Sale by the Court. It constantly happens that in the course of an action in the Chancery Division a sale of property becomes necessary, as, for instance, in administration suits, also, under Admin. of Estates Act, 1925, s. 38, or actions to enforce mortgages. After an order has been made for sale, the further proceedings take place before the Master in Chambers. An estate, when sold by the Court, is usually sold by public auction, but a private advantageous offer may be accepted at once, without going to an auction. For the procedure on sales by the Court, see R. S. C. Ord. LI., and consult Dart's V. & P.

Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), codifying the law of the sale of goods, in the same fashion as the law of bills of exchange, promissory notes, and cheques was codified (see CODE) by the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, and the law of partnership by the Partnership Act, 1890.

The parts of the Act are :—

I. Formation of the Contract, in which it is provided, amongst other things, that an infant or person by mental incapacity or drunkenness incompetent to contract must pay a reasonable price for 'necessaries' sold and delivered to him; that (re-enacting a part of the Statute of Frauds) a contract for the sale of goods of the value of 10*l.* or more is not enforceable unless the buyer accept and receive part, or give something in earnest to bind the contract, or 'unless some note or memorandum in writing of the contract be made and signed by the party to be charged or his agent in that behalf'; that a contract for the sale of specific goods which have perished without the knowledge of the seller is void; and full provision is made for conditions and warranties, and for sale by sample.

II. Effects of the Contract, in which, amongst other things, are dealt with the transfer of property as between seller and buyer (five rules being laid down for ascertaining the time when the property passes), the transfer of risk, the transfer of title, and the effect of sale in 'market overt' and of the conviction for larceny on the property in stolen goods.

III. Performance of the Contract, in which, amongst other things, are dealt with the rules as to time and place of delivery, the effect of delivery of short or excessive quantity, the rules as to delivery by instalments and as to delivery to a carrier, the right of the buyer to examine goods, and the liability of the buyer for not taking delivery.

IV. Right of Unpaid Seller, in which are dealt with, amongst other things, the right of lien or right to retain the goods, and the right to stop in transition if the buyer becomes insolvent, notwithstanding any sale by the buyer.

V. Actions for Breach of Contract, in which, amongst other things, are dealt with the action of the seller for price and the action for non-acceptance, and the action by the buyer for non-delivery, specific performance, or breach of warranty.

VI. Supplementary, in which, amongst other things, it is laid down that 'what is a reasonable time is a question of fact'; rules as to sale by auction are enumerated, as that, 'where a sale is not notified to be subject to a right to bid on behalf of the seller, he may not bid himself or employ any person to bid'; savings for bankruptcy rules, common law rules, bills of sale, mortgages, and landlord's right of hypothec in Scotland are contained, and twenty-three definitions are given.

Definitions.—These are provided by s. 62. The most important definitions are that of 'goods,' which 'includes all chattels personal' (and therefore all animals) 'other than things in action and money, and in Scotland all corporeal movables except money,' also 'emblems, industrial growing crops, and things attached to or forming part of the land which are agreed to be severed before sale or under the contract of sale'; and that of 'warranty,' which as regards England and Ireland 'means an agreement with reference to goods which are the subject of a contract for sale, but collateral to the main purpose of such contract, the breach of which gives rise to a claim for damages, but not to a right to reject the goods and treat the contract as repudiated,' it being added that, 'as regards Scotland, a breach of warranty shall be deemed to be a failure to perform a material part of the contract.' And see SALE OR RETURN.

Sale Notes. See BOUGHT AND SOLD NOTES.

Sale of Settled Estates. See SETTLED LAND.

Sale or Return. By s. 18, Rule 4, of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, supra :—

When goods are delivered to the buyer on approval or 'on sale or return' or other similar terms [e.g., on trial: Elphick v. Barnes, (1880) 5 C. P. D. at p. 326] the property therein passes to the buyer :—

(a) When he signifies his approval or acceptance to the seller or does any other act adopting the transaction :

As to the meaning of adopting the transaction, see London Jewellers Ltd. v. Attenborough, 1934, 2 K. B. 206.

(b) If he does not signify his approval or acceptance to the seller but retains the goods without giving notice of rejection, then, if a time has been fixed for the return of the goods, on the expiration of such time, and, if no time has been fixed, on the expiration of a reasonable time. What is a reasonable time is a question of fact.

Salic, or Salique [lex salica, Lat.], an ancient and fundamental law of the kingdom of France, usually supposed to have been made by Pharamond, or at least by Clovis, in virtue of which males only are to reign.

It is a popular error to suppose that the Salic law was established purely on account of the succession of the Crown, since it extended to private persons as much as to the royal family.

The Salic law had not in view a preference of one sex to the other, much less had it a regard to the perpetuity of a family, a name, or the succession of land. It was purely a law of economy which gave the house, and the land dependent on the house, to the males who should dwell in it, and to whom it consequently was of more service.

In proof of this, the title of allodial lands of the Salic law may be thus stated :—

(1) If a man die without issue, his father or mother shall succeed him.

(2) If he have neither father nor mother, his brother or sister.

(3) If he have neither brother nor sister, the sister of his mother.

(4) If his mother have no sister, the sister of his father.

(5) If his father have no sister, the nearest relation by the male.

(6) No part of the Salic land shall pass to the females, but it shall belong to the males ; the male children shall succeed their father. —Encyc. Londin. ; preferring males but not excluding females in default of male successors ; see Hallam's Mid. Ages, note 3 to c. 2, p. 278.

Salmon Fishery. See the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1923, and the Amendment Act of 1929, which consolidated prior legislation, and FISHERY.

Salt Duty in London, a custom in the City of London called grange, formerly payable to the Lord Mayor, etc., for salt brought to the port of London, being the twentieth part.

Salt Silver, one penny paid at the feast day of St. Martin, by the tenants of some manors, as a commutation for the service of carrying their lord's salt from market to his larder. — Paroch. Antiq. 496.

Salus populi est suprema lex. 11 Rep. 139. —(The safety of the people is the supreme law.) See Broom's Leg. Max. Thus a condition in a will divesting property in the event of a beneficiary entering the naval or military service of the country is absolutely void (Re Beard, 1908, 1 Ch. 383).

Salute, a coin made by Henry V., after his conquests in France, whereon the arms of England and France were stamped and quartered. — Stow's Chron. 589.

Salvage, allowance or compensation made by maritime law to those by whose exertions ships or goods have been saved from the dangers of the seas, fire, pirates, or enemies.

This was allowed by the laws of Rhodes, Oleron, and Wisby, and is also allowed by all modern maritime states ; the person who saves goods from loss or imminent peril has a lien upon them, and may retain them till payment of salvage. In this, however, the maritime law differs from the Common Law. No doctrine similar to 'salvage' applies to things lost upon land, nor to anything except ships or goods in peril at sea (Falcke v. Scottish Imperial Insurance Co., (1886) 34 Ch. D. p. 248, per Bowen, L.J.).

If the salvage be performed at sea, or on land (Judic. Act, 1925, s. 22), the Court of Admiralty has jurisdiction, and fixes the sum to be paid, adjusts the proportions, and takes care of the property pending the suit ; or, if necessary, directs a sale and divides the proceeds between the salvors and the proprietors. In fixing the rate of salvage, the Court has regard not only to the labour and perils of the salvors, but also to the situation in which they stand to the property saved, to the promptitude and alacrity manifested by them, and the value of the ship and cargo, and the danger from which they were rescued. In some cases as much as half of the property saved has been allowed as salvage; in others only a tenth.

The crew of a ship are not entitled to salvage or any unusual remuneration for extraordinary efforts they have made in saving her, it being their duty as well as interest to contribute their utmost upon such occasions, the whole of their possible service being pledged to the master and owners. Neither are passengers entitled to anything for the ordinary assistance they may have afforded a vessel in distress. But a passenger is not bound to remain on board a ship in danger, if he can leave her; and if he performs any extraordinary service, he is entitled to a proportionable recompense. Consult Kennedy on Salvage, Abbott on Shipping, Maude and Pollock on Shipping, MacLachlan on Shipping; and see Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60) (substituted for Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104)), ss. 544-565, Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Shipping.' By s. 510 (2) of the Act of 1894, 'salvage' in that Act 'includes all expenses properly incurred by the salvor in the performance of the salvage services.' See also the Merchant Shipping (Safety and Load Line Conventions) Act, 1932; and SUE AND LABOUR CLAUSE.

Salvage-loss, the difference between the amount of salvage, after deducting the charges, and the original value of the property.

Salvo [salvo jure, Lat.], without prejudice to.

Salvor, a person who renders assistance to a ship or vessel in distress, whereby he becomes entitled to a reward. See SALVAGE.

Sample, a small quantity of a commodity exhibited at public or private sales as a specimen. Where goods are warehoused, certain small specified quantities may, by the regulations of the Custom House, be taken out as samples without payment of duty.

On a sale of goods by sample, conditions are implied that the bulk shall correspond with the sample, that the buyer shall have a reasonable opportunity of comparing the bulk with the sample, and that the goods shall be freed from any defect, rendering them unmerchantable, which would not be apparent on reasonable examination of the sample.—Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 15.

As to samples for the purpose of analysis, see Food and Drugs (Adulteration) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 31), and ADULTERATION.

Sanatorium Benefit. See NATIONAL INSURANCE ACT.

Sancta, reliques of saints, upon which oaths were made.

Sanction of a Law, the provision for enforcing or promoting its observance. 'The evil which will probably be incurred in case a command be disobeyed, or (to use an equivalent expression) in case a duty be broken, is frequently called a sanction, or an enforcement of obedience. Or (varying the phrase) the command of the duty is said to be sanctioned or enforced by the chance of incurring the evil' (Austin's Jurisprudence, 3rd ed. pp. 91, 92).

Sanctuary, privilege of, existed in England from a period commencing soon after the conversion of the Saxons to Christianity. Its effect was that a person accused of any crime except treason or sacrilege might by flying to any church or churchyard, or even to certain other places in Westminster, Wells, Norwich, or York, or in London to Whitefriars or the Savoy, within forty days, on confession and taking oath of abjuration of the realm (see ABJURATION), escape to a foreign country, under the disability of not being able to return without the royal licence. If arrested during the forty days, he might put in the plea of Sanctuary. The privilege extended to civil as well as criminal process, but was attended by attainder of blood and forfeiture of goods.

Sanctuary and abjuration were abolished in 1625 by 21 Jac. 1, c. 21, after having been restricted by 26 Hen. 8, c. 13, 27 Hen. 8, c. 19, and 39 Hen. 8, c. 12.

Sanctus Bell, a bell tolled in the Communion Service at the moment of the elevation of the sacred elements. The rite is illegal in the Church of England (Re St. John the Evangelist, 1909, P. 6).

Sand-gavel, a payment due to the lord of the manor of Rodley, in the county of Gloucester, for liberty granted to the tenants to dig sand for their common use.—Cowel.

Sand-grouse are protected by the Sand-grouse Protection Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 55), as continued by the Expiring Laws Continuance Acts, in order that they may, if possible, become acclimatized.

Sane Memory, perfect and sound mind and memory to do any lawful act, etc.

Sang, or Sane [Old Fr.], blood.

Sanguine or Murrey, blood-colour, called in the arms of princes Dragon's tail, and in those of lords Sardonys. It is a tincture of very unfrequent occurrence, and not recognized by some writers. In engraving it is denoted by numerous lines in saltire.—Heraldic Term.

Sanguinem emere, a redemption by villeins, of their blood or tenure, in order to become freemen.

Sanguis, the right or power which the chief lord of the fee had to judge and determine cases where blood was shed.—Dugd. Mon., tom. i. 1021.

Sanitary Acts, enactments protecting the public health by provisions for the inspection and removal of nuisances, etc.; especially those so called in, and repealed by, Public Health Act, 1875 (see Sched. V.). See PUBLIC HEALTH, and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Public Health.'

Sanitary Authority. The name, under the Public Health Acts prior to the P. H. Act, 1936, of the authorities for the purposes of those Acts. Under the Act of 1936 they are (i.) in a county borough, the council of the borough, (ii.) in an administrative county, as respects certain matters, the county council, and as respects all other matters, the councils of county districts without prejudice to the exercise by a parish council of any powers conferred on such councils, and 'local' authority means the council of a borough, urban district or rural district. 'Urban' or 'rural' authority means the respective council (see RURAL AUTHORITY), 'district' in relation to the local authority of a borough means the borough, and 'parish' in relation to a common parish council acting for two or more grouped parishes means those parishes. As to Port Health Authorities, see QUARANTINE.

Sans ceo que [Nor.-Fr.] (without this). See ABSQUE HOC.

Sans frais (without expense). See RETOUR SANS PROTÊT.

Sans nombre, Common, a common in gross which is absolutely unlimited; a common without stint. As to common in gross, see Williams on Rights of Common.

Sans recours [Fr.] (without recourse to me). A bill of exchange may be so marked by the endorser or any other party (see Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 16) apparently absolving him from liability as such party under the bill.

Saol [fr. sagol, Sax., a staff], a tipstaff or serjeant-at-arms.

Sareultura una, a tenant's service of one year's weeding for his lord.—Paroch. Antiq. 403.

Sardin-time, the time or seasons when husbandmen weed their corn.

Sarkellus, an unlawful net or engine for destroying fish.

Sart, a piece of woodland turned into arable. See ASSART.

Sassons, a corruption of Saxons: a name of contempt formerly given to the English, while they affected to be called Angles.

Satisdare, to guarantee the obligation of a principal.—Civ. Law.

Satisfaction, satisfaction; suretyship.—Civ. Law.

Satisfaction, legal compensation; the recompense for an injury done, or the payment of money due and owing. See ACCORD.

The doctrine of satisfaction of legacies, portions, and debts means the gift of a thing with the intention, either expressed or implied, that it is to be taken either wholly or partly in extinguishment of some prior claim or demand. Of course, it is open to a donor expressly to provide that his subsequent gift shall be a satisfaction of a prior demand, so as to prevent such donee from claiming both. With regard to implied or presumable satisfactions, they have been divided into the three following classes:—

(1) The satisfaction of legacies by portions, otherwise called the ademption of legacies. Upon this subject Lord Eldon laid down in Ex parte Pye, (1811) 18 Ves. 140; 2 W. & T. L. C., that 'where a parent (or person in loco parentis) gives a legacy to a child, not stating the purpose with reference to which he gives it, the Court understands him as giving a portion; and by a sort of artificial rule—upon an artificial notion, and a sort of feeling of what is called a leaning against double portions—if the father (or quasi parent) afterwards advance a portion on the marriage, or preferment in life, of that child, though of less amount, it is a satisfaction of the whole, or in part'; i.e., if the portion be equal to or greater than the legacy, it operates as a total ademption of such legacy; but if it be of a lesser amount than the legacy, such portion will then only adeem the legacy pro tanto.

(2) The satisfaction of a portion by a legacy. The rule is, that wherever a legacy given by a parent, or a person standing in loco parentis, is as great as, or greater than, a portion or provision previously secured to the legatee upon marriage or otherwise, then, from the already quoted inclination of equity against double portions, a presumption arises that the legacy was intended by the testator as a complete satisfaction. When the legacy is not so great as the portion or provision, it is then only a satisfaction pro tanto.—Hinchcliffe v. Hinchcliffe, (1797) 3 Ves. 516. The bequest of a whole or part of a residue will, according to its amount, be presumed either a satisfaction of a portion in full or pro tanto.

(3) The satisfaction of a debt by a legacy. Subject to any expression or indication in the will to the contrary, if a debtor bequeath to his creditor a sum of money as great as, or greater than, the debt, without taking any notice at all of the debt, this shall be deemed a satisfaction of the debt, so that the creditor cannot have the debt and also the legacy—a doctrine founded upon the maxim Debitor non presumitur donare.

Satisfaction on the Roll, Entry of. As soon as a judgment is satisfied, by payment, levy, or otherwise, the defendant is entitled to have satisfaction entered upon the roll.—1 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 721 et seq., and see QUIETUS.

Satisfied Terms Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 112). See OUTSTANDING TERMS.

Saturday's Stop, a space of time from evening on Saturday till sun-rising on Monday, in which it was not lawful to take salmon in Scotland and the northern parts of England.

Saukefin, the determination of the lineal race; a descent of kindred.—Brit. c. 119.

Saver-de-fault, to excuse.—Termes de la Ley.

Savigny, Friedrich Karl von, 1779-1861, German professor and jurist of great eminence, author of Law of Obligations, Right of Possession, etc.

Savings Banks, institutions for the safe custody and increase of the small savings of the poor. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Savings Banks.' They are: (1) Trustee; (2) Post Office; (3) Military; (4) Statutory; (5) Uncontrolled.

(1) Trustee Savings Banks are regulated by a long series of Acts (the Trustee Savings Banks Acts, 1861 to 1934), which provide that they must not be described in a manner which implies that the Government is responsible to depositors, that the money received must be paid to the Bank of England or Ireland and carried to an account kept in the names of the National Debt Commissioners, and that annual accounts must be sent to the Commissioners. An 'Inspection Committee,' established under the Savings Bank Act, 1891, has extensive powers of supervision for the purpose of detecting any breaches of the Acts or rules regulating a bank. Deposits by any depositor in more than one Trustee Savings Bank is prohibited, and the Treasury have power to limit the amount from one person in the year.

(2) Post Office Savings Banks (which have the direct security of Government) are established under the Post Office Savings Bank Act, 1861, which enacts that the Postmaster-General, with the consent of the Treasury Commissioners, may direct such of his officers as he shall see fit to receive deposits for remittance to the principal office, and repay the same under such regulations as may be prescribed (s. 1). Every such deposit (which may not be of less amount than one shilling, nor of any sum not a multiple thereof) is to be entered in the depositor's book, attested by the receiving officer and by the dated stamp of his office, and the amount received is to be reported on the same day to the Postmaster-General.

For the power of the Public Trustee in opening accounts, see Post Office Savings Bank (Public Trustee) Act, 1908.

(3) Military Savings Banks are constituted under 22 & 23 Vict. c. 20, repealing former Acts. The Naval Savings Bank Act, 1869, established similar banks for the use of the Royal Navy and Marines. The Military Savings Bank Act has been extended to the Air Force since 1918.

(4) There are also various Savings Banks established for the use of special classes of depositors which are regulated by Act of Parliament, e.g., the Savings Bank for the Merchant Service: see s. 148, Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.

(5) Uncontrolled Savings Banks, which are not subject to the statutory control which gives security to the other four classes. Many of these institutions are quite solvent and well managed, though cases of failure of 'share-out' clubs and similar Savings Bank institutions are frequent owing to want of competent supervision by depositors who are chiefly of the working classes, or poor people.

Savour, to partake of the nature of; to bear affinity to. Money in any way connected with land, e.g., money secured by mortgage of real or leasehold property, or a legacy charged on land, was said to 'savour of the realty,' and prior to the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891, could not be bequeathed to a charity.

Savoy, one of the old privileged places, or sanctuaries. See SANCTUARY.

Saxon-lage, the law of the West Saxons.

Sayer, that which moves: variable imposts distinct from land, rent, or revenues, consisting of customs, tolls, licences, duties on goods; also taxes on houses, shops, bazaars, etc.—Indian.

Scablin, a word used for wardens at Lynn, Norfolk.—Norfolk Chart. Hen. VIII.

Scaccarium, a chequered cloth resembling a chess-board which covered the table in the Exchequer, and on which, when certain of the king's accounts were made up, the sums were marked and scored with counters. Hence the Court of Exchequer or curia scaccarii obtained its name.—3 Bl. Com. 44.

Scalam [fr. ad scalam, Lat., at the scale], the old way of paying money into the Exchequer.

Scale of Costs. By Rules made by Order in Council, dated the 12th August, 1875, a new scale of costs for the Supreme Court was provided, and these Rules were re-enacted in 1883. There is a higher and a lower scale, applicable respectively to the matters specified in the Rules; but costs on the higher scale 'may be allowed . . . if on special grounds arising out of the nature and importance or the difficulty or urgency of the case, the Court or a judge shall . . . so order' (Ord. LXV., r. 9). Scales of costs are also provided by the County Court Rules: the respective scales are applicable according to the amount recovered or in dispute, or the nature of the proceedings. See Costs.

Scandal, a report or rumour, or an action whereby one is affronted in public.

Scandal, in pleadings, is injurious, by making the records of the Court the means of perpetuating libellous and malignant slanders; and the Court, in aid of the public morals, is bound to interfere to suppress such indecencies.

It is provided by R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XIX., r. 27, that scandalous matter may be ordered to be struck out from any pleading, and by Ord. XXXVIII., r. 11, from affidavits.

Scandalum magnatum, words spoken in derogation of a peer or judge, or other great officer, both actionable and punishable under 2 Ric. 2, st. 1, c. 5, and also under 3 Edw. 1, c. 34; repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1887.

Scavage, Schevage, Schewage, or Shewage, a toll or custom, exacted by mayors, sheriffs, etc., of merchant strangers, for wares showed or offered for sale within their liberties. Prohibited by 19 Hen. 7, c. 7.

Scavaldus, the officer who collected the scavage money.

Seeat, a small coin among the Saxons equal to four farthings.

Sceppa salis, an ancient measure of salt, the quantity of which is now not known.

Schaffa, a sheaf.

Schar-penny, Scharn-penny, or Schorn-penny, a small duty or compensation.

Schedule, a small scroll; a writing additional or appendant, as a list of fixtures in a lease or details of any matter contained in the body of a deed, document, or of enactments repealed and other supplementary matter in an Act of Parliament, e.g., the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, which has twenty-two schedules; an inventory.

Schetes, usury.

Schilla, a little bell used in monasteries.

Schireman, a sheriff; the ancient name for an earl.

Schirrens-geld [fr. shiregeld, Sax.], a tax paid to sheriffs for keeping the shire or county court.

Schism Bill, the name of an Act passed in the reign of Queen Anne, which restrained Protestant dissenters from educating their own children, and forbade all tutors and schoolmasters to be present at any conventicle or dissenting place of worship. The Queen died on the day when this Act was to have taken effect (August 1, 1714), and it was repealed in the fifth year of Geo. I.

School. See EDUCATION; PUBLIC SCHOOLS; REFORMATORY SCHOOLS; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Education.'

School Attendance Committee, a committee appointed annually (in 'school districts' not within the jurisdiction of a 'school board') for the purpose of enforcing the Elementary Education Act, 1876, by proceeding against parents who neglected to send their children to a public elementary school. The duties of this Committee were transferred to the local education authorities by the Education Act, 1902. This Act was repealed by the Education Act, 1921, but the responsibilities of the local education authorities in this respect were confirmed (s. 43).

School Board, a body corporate of persons elected triennially, for the purpose of managing 'public elementary schools' within their respective districts (Elementary Education Acts, 1870 and 1873). School Boards were abolished by the Education Act, 1902, their powers and duties being transferred to the local education authorities; this provision has been re-enacted by the Education Act, 1921.

School, Certified Efficient. By s. 170 (2) of the Act of 1921, a 'certified efficient school' means a public elementary school, a school certified by the Board of Education as suitable for blind, deaf, defective or epileptic children, a certified workhouse school, a Scottish public or State-aided elementary school, a national school in (Northern) Ireland, and any elementary school which is not conducted for private profit and is open to inspection and requires the like attendance from scholars as a public elementary school, and keeps certain registers of attendances and is certified by the Board of Education as efficient.

School District, a municipal borough ; a parish ; the metropolis.—Elementary Education Act, 1870, s. 4 and Sched. I. (repealed). School districts were abolished by the Act of 1902, the areas dealt with by the local education authorities being substituted. See now Part I. of the Act of 1921.

School, Elementary. By s. 170 (1), a school or department of a school at which elementary education is the principal part of the education given, and does not include any school or department of a school at which the ordinary payments from each scholar exceed ninepence per week, or any evening school under the Board of Education, or courses of advanced instruction under the Act, or any continuation school.

The Education Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 41), provides that the compulsory school age be raised to fifteen ; enables local educational authorities to make grants to non-provided schools in certain cases ; and makes provision with respect to religious instruction in non-provided schools, when the parents desire the children to receive such religious instruction.

Schools of Anatomy, regulated by 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 75, and 34 Vict. c. 16.

The local education authority will be liable for injury to a scholar caused by negligence (Ching v. Surrey County Council, 1910, 1 K. B. 736—defective playground ; Morris v. Carnarvon County Council, 1910, 1 K. B. 840—dangerous premises). Consult Maclean on Schools.

Schoolmaster. To an action of trespass for an assault and battery the defendant pleaded that he was the headmaster of a school or college, of which the plaintiff was a pupil, and that the plaintiff combined with other pupils for purposes subversive of the discipline of the school, and the plea was held good : see Fitzgerald v. Northote, (1865) 4 F. & F. 656. As to the extent of the powers of a schoolmaster in this respect, see Cleary v. Booth, 1893, 1 Q. B. 465. As to the power of an assistant teacher in a public elementary school to administer corporal punishment, see Mansell v. Griffin, 1908, 1 K. B. 160, 947. As to the dismissal of a schoolmaster or mistress of a public elementary school, see Smith v. Macnally, 1912, 1 Ch. 816 ; Meyers v. Humell, 1912, 2 Ch. 256 ; Mitchell v. East Sussex C. C., (1914) 109 L. T. 778 ; Price v. Rhondda U. D. C., 1923, 2 Ch. 372.

Science and Art Department. Constituted by charter. See also 38 & 39 Vict. c. 68.

Scienter [Lat.] (knowingly, wilfully). In an action of deceit, the scienter must be averred and proved. In case of injury to cattle and sheep by dogs, the proof of scienter of ferociousness, necessary at Common Law (see Cox v. Burbridge, (1863) 13 C. B. N. S. 430), is dispensed with by the Dogs Act, 1906, as amended by the Dogs Amendment Act, 1928. See Dog. In the case of animals naturally dangerous, it is immaterial whether the owner knew the individual beast to be mischievous. See ANIMALS.

Scythman, a pirate or thief.

Scilicet [Lat., abbrev. scil., or sc., i.e., scire licet] (that is to say, to wit).

This is not a direct and separate clause, nor a direct and entire clause, in a conveyance, but intermedia ; neither is it a substantive clause of itself, but it is rather to usher in the sentence of another, and to particularize that which was too general before, or distribute that which was too gross, or explain that which was doubtful ; and it must neither increase nor diminish the premises nor habendum, for it gives nothing of itself ; but it may make a restriction where the precedent words are not so very express but that they may be restrained.—Hob. 171.

Scintilla juris et tituli [Lat.] (a spark of law and title).

A possibility of seisin, which was supposed to exist in the grantee to uses, when all actual seisin was taken from him by the operation of the statute, upon a limitation of springing uses and the creation of contingent ones. 'If land be given to A. and his heirs, to the use of B. and his heirs until the marriage of C., and then to the use of C. and his heirs, here B. immediately becomes tenant in fee by force of the statute ; and to give him this estate the whole seisin of A. is exhausted ; now the marriage takes effect, and who is seized to the use of C. ?' (Burt. Comp., 6th ed. p. 59).

This doctrine of scintilla juris, the knowledge of the exact character of which appears to be rendered unnecessary by s. 7 of the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1860

(now repealed by the Law of Property Act, 1925, 7th Sched.), has been warmly contested. Lord Coke admitted it (Chudleigh's case, 1 Co., p. 121 a), so did Mr. Booth (see his opinion at the end of Sheppard's Touchstone), Mr. Sanders (1 Uses and Trusts, c. 2, s. 2, pp. 107 et seq.), and Mr. Burton (Comp., p. 59, 6th ed.); but Lord Bacon On Uses, p. 47), Mr. Fearne (Cont. Rem., p. 300), Lord St. Leonards (1 Powers, c. 1, s. 3, and note 10 to Gilb. Uses, p. 296), and Mr. Preston (1 Prest. Est., p. 170), and 1 Hayes' Conv., p. 61) opposed it; and Lord St. Leonards contends that the doctrine never received a regular judicial decision.

Scire facias [Lat.] (that you cause to know), a judicial writ, founded upon some record, and requiring the person against whom it is brought to show cause why the party bringing it should not have advantage of such record.

The writ, though not abolished, is now out of use except in Crown Practice on the Revenue side of the King's Bench Division for recovery of Crown debts and also for rescinding Crown grants and charters, etc. Scire facias on recognizances and to repeal letters patent have been abolished: see as to patents, Patents and Designs Act, 1907. Formerly the issue of the writ was considered in some cases as an original proceeding; in others, interlocutory, and in the nature of process. Consult Hals. L. E., tit. 'Crown Practice.'

A scire facias was formerly resorted to in Chancery suits, when they became abated; but this mode became superseded in practice by the order of revivor, which see.

Scire facias for the Crown. The summary proceeding by extent is only resorted to when a Crown debtor is insolvent, or there is good ground for supposing that the debt may be lost by delay. In ordinary cases where a debt or duty appears by record to be owing to the Crown, the process for the Crown is a writ of sci. fa. quare executionem non; but should the defendant become insolvent pending this writ, the Crown may abandon the proceeding and resort to an extent. Consult Robertson on the Crown.

Scire feci, the sheriff's return on a scire facias, that he has caused notice to be given to the party against whom the writ was issued.

Scirewyte, the annual tax or prestation paid to the sheriff for holding the assizes or county courts.—Paroch. Antiq. 573.

Scite, or Site [fr. situs, Lat.], the setting or standing on any place; the seat or situation of a capital messuage, or the ground whereon it stands.

SCTM., a common mode of writing Scitum, a decree of the Roman people.

Scold [communis rixatrix, Lat.], a troublesome and angry woman who, by brawling and wrangling amongst her neighbours, breaks the public peace, increases discord, and becomes a public nuisance to the neighbourhood.—4 Steph. Com. See CASTIGATORY.

Scooce, a mulct or fine.

Scot. A fee payable under the Saxon kings for church services, in the name of Church Scot, light Scot, soul Scot (burials), and Rome Scot. See Halsb. Laws of England, tit. 'Eccles. Law.'

Scot and Lot [fr. sceat, Sax., part, and lot], a customary contribution laid upon all subjects according to their ability. Whoever were assessed to any contribution, though not by equal portions, were said to pay scot and lot.

Scot and Lot Voters, voters in certain boroughs entitled before the Reform Act of 1832 to the franchise in virtue of their paying this contribution; the rights of those living in 1832 were reserved by that Act.

Scotal, or Scotale, an extortionate practice by officers of the forest who kept ale-houses, and compelled the people to drink at their houses for fear of their displeasure. Prohibited by the Charter of the Forest, c. 7.

Scotland and Ireland. As to service of writ, by leave of judge, upon a defendant resident in Scotland or Ireland, see R. S. C. Ord. XI., rr. 1 (e), 2 and 2A; Williams v. Cartwright, 1895, 1 Q. B. 142. Process for compelling the attendance of witnesses from Scotland or Ireland before English Courts and vice versa may be issued under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 34. Appeals from courts in Scotland and Northern Ireland are heard by the House of Lords under s. 3 of the App. Jur. Act, 1876: see also Irish Free State (Consequential Provisions) Act, 1922 (Session 2), Sched. I., 6 (3); but appeals from the Supreme Court of the Irish Free State are to the Privy Council (see Irish Free State Constitution Act, 1922 (Session 2), Sched. I., art. 66).

The removal of Scottish and Irish poor from England to Scotland or Ireland is regulated by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 117, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 33 (Scotland); 24 & 25 Vict. c. 76 (Ireland); 25 & 26 Vict. c. 113, and 26 & 27 Vict. c. 89 (Ireland); but irremovability to Ireland is acquired by five years' continuous residence in England, under the Poor Removal Act, 1900.

Acts of Parliament passed since the Unions bind Scotland or Ireland unless they be expressly or impliedly (see Westminster Fire Office v. Glasgow Provident Investment Society, (1888) 13 App. Cas. at p. 716) limited to England, Ireland, or Scotland only. As to the present position of Northern Ireland and the Irish Free State, see IRELAND.

Scotland.—The Union with Scotland Act, 1706, is 6 Anne, c. 11, or 5 Anne, c. 8, and may be found in Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Union Acts,' and in the Revised Statutes. This Act confirms twenty-five Articles of Union, gives Scotland sixteen Representative Peers (to be elected for life by the whole body) in the House of Lords (see SCOTS PEERS), and forty-five Representative Members in the House of Commons.

A Secretary for Scotland, now a Secretary of State (q.v.), was established, by the Secretary for Scotland Act, 1904, and the Statute Law Revision (Scotland) Act, 1906, has expressly repealed very numerous Acts which had long ceased to have any operation.

Scots, assessments by commissioners of sewers. See SCOT AND LOT VOTERS.

Scots, derived from or pertaining to Scotland. The term 'Scots' is universal in Scotland itself, and the term 'Scotch' is incorrect.

Scots Judgments. See INFERIOR COURTS, and JUDGMENT.

'It is desirable that the decisions in the Scottish Court and in the Courts of this country should, if possible, be uniform': per Farwell, L.J., in Chislett v. Macbeth & Co., 1909, 2 K. B. at p. 815, approved per Lord Shaw (ib., 1910, A. C. at p. 224).

Scots Law is mainly derived from the Civil Law, and differs in many points from the English, as by assuring a man's widow and children two-thirds of his personal property (see LEGITIM), and by the legitimization of children born before marriage (see LEGITIMATION).

Scots Peers, peers of the kingdom of Scotland; of these, sixteen are elected by the rest and represent the whole body. They are elected for one Parliament only. See the Union with Scotland Act, 1706 (6 Anne, c. 11), sometimes numbered 23, amended by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 52; 14 & 15 Vict. c. 87; and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 35.

Scottare, to pay scot, tax, or customary dues.

Scrip, a certificate or schedule; also evidence of the right to obtain shares or debentures in a limited company, sometimes called 'scrip-certificate,' generally part paid and exchangeable for the certificate of share or the debenture upon payment in full. Scrip to bearer appears to be negotiable and to pass by delivery: see Goodwin v. Roberts, (1875) L. R. 10 Ex. 337; 1 App. Cas. 476; Rumball v. Metropolitan Bank, (1877) 2 Q. B. D. 194.

Script, a writing; the original or principal document.

Scripture. The canonical books of the Old and New Testaments. See Articles of Religion. Art. VI. All profane scoffing of the Holy Scripture, or exposing any part thereof to contempt and ridicule, is punishable by fine and imprisonment (Roscoe on Criminal Evidence, 8th ed. p. 666); and by 9 & 10 Wm. 3, c. 32, a conviction of a person educated in the Christian religion of having by writing or advised speaking denied the Divine authority of Scripture entails deprivation of all offices ecclesiastical, civil, or military. See CHRISTIANITY. Consult Odgers on Libel, 5th ed. p. 485.

Scrivener [fr. scrivano, Ital.; escriuvin, Fr.], or Money Scrivener, a professional man whose business of receiving men's money and investing it for them when he should find a proper opportunity, being trusted as a banker in the meantime, died out about the middle of the eighteenth century. He was subjected to the law of bankruptcy by 21 Jac. 1, c. 19 (repealed by 6 Geo. 4, c. 16), where, and also in Sched. I. of the repealed Bankruptcy Act, 1869, he is defined as 'using the trade or profession of a scrivener, receiving other men's monies or estates into his trust or custody.' See Adams v. Malkin, (1814) 3 Camp. 539, where the question whether an attorney could be made bankrupt as a scrivener was decided in the negative, and Boswell's Life of Johnson, where it is related that one Jack Ellis, a contemporary of Dr. Johnson, and mentioned by him with great respect, was the last of the scriveners. By s. 13 of the Public Notaries Act, 1801, no person can become a notary within the limits of the jurisdiction of the Incorporated Company of Scriveners of London, unless a freeman. See NOTARY.

Seroll, a mark which supplies the place of a seal.

Seroop's Inn, an obsolete law society, also called Serjeant's Place, opposite to St. Andrew's Church, Holborn, London.

Scrutiny. An examination into the validity of votes recorded for a candidate at an election.

Sculpture, in the Copyright Act, 1911, is included in the term 'artistic work' (s. 35); see COPYRIGHT.

Seutage, a tax or contribution raised by those that held lands by knight's service in commutation of such service towards furnishing the king's army, at the rate of one, two, or three marks for every knight's fee (obsolete long before 12 Car. 2, c. 24, which abolished the military tenure.—Steph. Com., ii., Ch. on 'Tenures.' See ESCUAGE.

Seutagio habendo, a writ that anciently lay against tenants by knight's service to serve in the wars, or send sufficient persons, or pay a certain sum.—Fitz. N. B. 83.

Seute, an ancient French gold coin of the value of 3s. 4d.

Scutella, a scuttle; anything of a flat or broad shape like a shield.

Scutella eleemosynaria, an alms-basket.

Scutum armorum, a shield or coat of arms.

Scyldwit, a mulct for any fault.

Scyra, a fine imposed upon such as neglected to attend the scyre-gemot courts, which all tenants were bound to do.

Scyre-gemot, or Seiremot, a court held by the Saxons twice every year, by the bishop of the diocese and the ealdorman in shires that had ealdormen; and by the bishop and the sheriff where the counties were committed to the sheriff, etc., wherein both the ecclesiastical and temporal laws were given in charge to the county.—Seld. Titles of Hon.

Sea. See FOUR SEAS. The main or high seas are part of the realm of England, for thereon the Courts of Admiralty have jurisdiction, but they are not subject to the Common Law. The main sea begins at the low-water mark, but between the high-water mark and the low-water mark, where the sea ebbs and flows, the Common Law and Admiralty have, divisum imperium, an alternate jurisdiction, the one upon the water when it is full sea, the other upon the land when it is an ebb. See FORESHORE.

The jurisdiction of the Admiralty within three miles of the low-water mark will be found elaborately discussed in Reg. v. Keyn, (1876) 2 Ex. D. 63. In that case it was held by a majority of seven judges to six that the Central Criminal Court had no jurisdiction to try for manslaughter the foreign captain of a foreign ship—the Franconia—which, in passing within three miles of the British shore, ran into a British ship and sank her; but this state of the law was soon afterwards altered by the Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 73). Section 2 of that Act enacts that any offence committed by a person, whether a British subject or not, within one marine league of the coast, 'although it may have been committed on board or by means of a foreign ship,' is an offence within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty. As to jurisdiction of English Quarter Sessions to try a case of larceny alleged to have been committed in Scottish waters, see R. v. Devon Justices, 1924, 1 K. B. 503. See TERRITORIAL WATERS.

Sea greens, grounds overflowed by the sea in spring-tides.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Sea-laws, laws relating to the sea, as the laws of Oleron, etc.

Sea-letter, or Sea-brief, a document expected to be found on board of every neutral ship. It specifies the nature and quantity of the cargo, the place whence it comes, and its destination. See Arnould on Mar. Ins.

Sea Marks. See BEACON.

Seal, wax or wafer with an impression. By the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 73, deeds executed after 1925 must be signed or marked (by illiterates or blind persons), as well as sealed. As to the forgery of seals and dies, see Forgery Act, 1913, s. 5; and for the definition of 'seal,' see s. 18.

By R. S. C. Ord. LXI., r. 7, the seal of the central office is sufficient to authorize as evidence office copies, or certificates and other documents issued from the central office of the Supreme Court. As to the seal of district registrars, see Judic. Act, 1925, s. 9, and see CORPORATION.

Seal Day, motion-day in the Court of Chancery, so called because every motion had to be stamped with the seal, which did not lie in court in the ordinary sittings out of term, and was therefore specially brought in on days when motions were taken, hence called Seal-days. Accordingly 'the Seal is closed' meant that motions were over for that day. See GREAT SEAL; PRIVY SEAL.

Sealer [fr. sigillator, Lat.], an officer in Chancery who sealed writs and instruments. The offices of sealer and deputy-sealer are abolished by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 23.

Seal Fisheries. The Seal Fishery Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 18), was passed to enable a close time to be established by Order in Council for the seal fishery in the seas adjacent to the eastern coasts of Greenland. The area to which the Act applies is specified in a schedule to the Act. See also the Seal Fisheries (North Pacific) Acts, 1895 and 1912, and the Grey Seals Protection Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 23), establishing a close season from 1st September to 31st December for grey seals in England and Scotland.

Seal-paper, a document formerly issued by the Lord Chancellor, previously to the commencement of the sittings, detailing the business to be done for each day in his court, and in the courts of the Lords Justices and Vice-Chancellors. The Master of the Rolls in like manner issued a seal-paper in respect of the business to be heard before him.—Smith's Ch. Pr. 9.

Seamen, persons engaged in navigating ships, barges, etc., upon the high seas. Those employed for this purpose upon rivers, lakes, or canals are denominated watermen.

The Merchant Shipping Acts, 1894 and 1906 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60, and 6 Edw. 7, c. 48), contain numerous and elaborate provisions. In Part II. of the Act of 1894 there are regulations as to engagement and discharge of seamen, and payment of their wages. The Act also (s. 168) gives power to a court to rescind a contract between owner or master, and seaman or apprentice, where a proceeding is instituted in the court in relation to a dispute between them, protects (ss. 212-219) seamen from imposition, and (ss. 198-210) protects them in the matter of provisions, health, and accommodation. As to seamen's allotment notes, see Merchant Shipping (Seamen's Allotment) Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 8). Part III. of the Act of 1906 deals with seamen's food, and Part IV. contains provisions for the relief and repatriation of distressed seamen.

Seamen are not within the Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 42), but a rigger is (Chislett v. Macbeth & Co., 1910, A. C. 220). Seamen, however, are provided for in s. 35 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 84), and as to the mode of estimating their earnings for the purpose of that Act, see Rosengvist v. Bowring, 1908, 2 K. B. 108. As to the position of seamen under the National Health Insurance Act, 1936, see ss. 135-138, which makes special provision in relation to them, and NATIONAL INSURANCE.

See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Shipping,' and as to seamen in the Royal Navy, see Naval Discipline Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 109), and other Acts, and tit. NAVY.

Searcher, an officer of the customs, whose business it is to examine ships outward bound, in order to ascertain if they have any prohibited or unaccustomed goods on board, etc.

Searches, an essential feature in the acquisition of land since registration under the Land Charges Act, 1925, in the land or local registries of any incumbrance which is required to be registered under that Act is notice (q.v.) to the purchaser and all persons connected with the land affected (see s. 198, Law of Property Act, 1925, and see LAND CHARGES). Searches are necessary, not only in the Land Registry, but at the office of the local authority for local land charges. Searches may be made personally in each of the registers under the Land Charges Act, 1925, but the usual practice is to apply for and obtain an official certificate of search at the Land Registry, which covers all the registers there, viz.: (1) pending actions or lis pendens; (2) writs and orders affecting land, such as writs of execution or orders appointing a receiver, bankruptcy petitions and receiving orders; (3) deeds of arrangement; and (4) land charges under s. 10 of the L. C. Act, 1925 (see those titles). The certificate is good against any charge registered between its date and completion of purchase if the purchase is completed within two days (L. P. (Amendment) Act, 1926, s. 4; see also PRIORITY NOTICE). At the Land Registry the application for search must be made in the separate and respective names of each beneficial or estate owner affected during the period required for registration. For local land charges, on the other hand, registration is made against the land affected and the danger of an accidental omission of the name of an interim owner or incumbrancer is avoided. For departmental reasons against this practice at the Land Registry, see an article by the Chief Land Registrar in 1931, Sol. Jo. 769. Searches against land registered under the Land Registration Act, 1925, are not necessary as a rule, the subject-matter being entered on the register (but see REGISTRATION) except for the local land charges, which are not covered by this Act. Searches against companies for mortgages or charges for securing money may be made at Somerset House under the Companies Act, 1929, s. 79, and see Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 10 (5), but the Somerset House Register does not effectively protect registered land (see REGISTRATION OF TITLE). As to searches at the Yorkshire and Middlesex Deeds Registries, see Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 11, and see, generally, a valuable dissertation on the subject in Part III., ch. I., Wolst. and Ch. Conveyancing Statutes. See also Land Charges Rules, 1925; S. R. & O., 1925, No. 1096 L.29; and 1926, 737/L.20; also, the Land Registration Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 26), closing the Middlesex Deeds Registry and enacting that no search shall be made therein except by the Chief Land Registrar and his officers; and NOTICE. In the proper cases, searches should also be made at the Central Office for deeds enrolled there, or the Record Office if not kept at the Central Office, such as disentailing deeds, etc. Searches in the general sense of the word does not absolve the party from making the usual prudent inquiries as to tenancies, over-riding interests (q.v.) in regard to registered land, etc., or inspections before purchase, or for tithe annuities. See TITHE.

Search Warrant, an authority requiring the officer to whom it is addressed to search a house, or other place therein specified, for stolen property therein reasonably suspected to be.—Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 103. See Jones v. German, 1897, 1 Q. B. 374.

Sea-reeve, an officer in maritime towns and places who takes care of the maritime rights of the lord of the manor, watches the shore, and collects the wreck.

Sea Rovers, pirates and robbers at sea.

Seas, Beyond, (1) at Common Law, not being in Great Britain; (2) by statute (19 & 20 Vict. c. 97), s. 12, as to the operation of certain Statutes of Limitation, not being in Great Britain, or Ireland, or the Channel Islands, or Isle of Man. See LIMITATION.

Seashore, the space of land between high- and low-water mark. It belongs to the Crown, or, by grant from the Crown, to the lord of the manor or other grantee of the Crown, and the public have no right over it for bathing.—Blundell v. Catterall, (1821) 5 B. & Ald. 268, diss. Best, J., but followed with approval by the Court of Appeal in Brinckman v. Matley, 1904, 2 Ch. 313. Consult Hall on the Seashore. See FORESHORE.

Seaworthy, a term applied to a ship, indicating that she is, in every respect, fit for her voyage. It is provided in all charter-parties that the vessel chartered shall be tight, staunch, and strong, well appraised, furnished with an adequate number of mariners, sufficient tackle, provisions, etc. If the ship be insufficient in any of these particulars, the owners, though ignorant of the circumstance, will be liable for whatever damage may in consequence be done to the goods of the merchant, and if any insurance have been effected upon her it will be void. In a voyage policy a warranty of seaworthiness is implied, but not in a time policy: see Dudgeon v. Pembroke, (1877) 2 App. Cas. 284. But see Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, 1924, s. 2 and Sched., Art. III. 1 and Art. IV. 2, and Merchant and Shipping Act, 1894, ss. 457, 459.

Seck [fr. siccus (Lat.), dry or barren]. Rent-seck is a rent-charge without a clause of distress. 'Rent seche idem est quod redditus siccus; for that no distress is incident unto it' (Co. Litt. 144 a); see now Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 44, reproducing Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 44; Conveyancing Act, 1911, s. 6. See RENT.

Secondary, an officer who is next to the chief officer.—2 Lilly, Abr. 506. Also, an officer of the Corporation of London, before whom inquiries to assess damages are held, as before sheriffs in counties. See INQUIRY.

Secondary Conveyances, those which presuppose some other conveyance precedent, and only serve to confirm, alter, retain, restore, or transfer the interest granted by the original conveyance. They are otherwise called derivative, and are:—(α) Releases; (β) Confirmations; (γ) Surrenders; (δ) Assignments; and (ε) Defeasances.

Secondary Evidence, that species of proof which is admitted on the loss of primary evidence. There are no degrees of this evidence; for example, if a letter be lost it may be as good to recite it from memory as to produce a copy. It is the province of the judge to decide whether a document produced be original or not, and until he decides it is not, no secondary evidence can be put in. See NOTICE TO ADMIT; NOTICE TO PRODUCE; HEARSAY.

Secondary Use, a use limited to take effect in derogation of a preceding estate; otherwise called a shifting use, as a conveyance to the use of A. and his heirs, with a proviso that when B. returns from India, then to the use of C. and his heirs.—Steph. Com. Vol. II., 'Present and Future Interests.'

Second Deliverance, Writ of, a judicial writ that lies, after a nonsuit of the plaintiff in replevin, and a retorno habendo of the cattle replevied, adjudged to him that distrained them, commanding the sheriff to replevy the same cattle again, upon security given by the plaintiff in the replevin for the re-delivery of them if the distress be justified. It is a second writ of replevin, and is practically obsolete.—Fitz. N. B. 68.

Second Distress. A landlord has a power at common law to make a second distress for the same rent (Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant), but a second distress for the same rent is not to be made if there was enough which might have been taken on a first distress (Hutchins v. Chambers, (1758) 1 Burr. 579).

Second Surchage, Writ of. If after admeasurement of common, upon a writ of admeasurement of pasture, the same defendant surcharged the common again, the plaintiff might have had this writ of second surcharge de secundâ superoneratione, which is given by Stat. West. 2, 13 Edw. 1, c. 8, rep.

Seconds, assistants at a duel. If either of the principals is killed, his adversary, and also the seconds, are all guilty of murder.

Secret. A solicitor, and it is presumed also a barrister, is bound by law not to disclose his client's secrets, and the same rule does not appear to apply as between medical men and their patients (see as to this Chitty on Contracts, and Kitson v. Playfair, Times, 28th March, 1896). As to privileged communications, however, the privilege is that of the client, not of the solicitor. The clerk of a professional or business man is under an implied contract not to disclose professional or trade secrets which he has learned in the course of his employment (Merryweather v. Moore, 1892, 2 Ch. 518; Amber Size and Chemical Co., Ltd. v. Menzel, 1913, 2 Ch. 239).

As to official secrets, see that title; and as to secrets of the confessional, see CONFESSION.

As to secret commission, corruptly taken by an agent from the party with whom he is employed by his principal to transact business for such principal, see COMMISSION; CORRUPT PRACTICES.

Secretaries of State. There are eight principal Secretaries of State, one for the Home Department, another for Foreign Affairs, a third for the Colonies, a fourth for War (26 & 27 Vict. c. 12), a fifth for India (21 & 22 Vict. c. 106), a sixth for Air (7 & 8 Geo. c. 5, 51, s. 8), a seventh for the Dominion affairs (1925), and, eighth, for Scotland, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 18). The Secretaries of State have co-extensive authority, that is to say, any one of them can legally execute the duties of all, although separate spheres of action are for convenience assigned to them. They have under their management the most considerable affairs of the nation, and are obliged to attend on the sovereign when required.

Formerly the administration of colonial and military affairs was combined and the duty discharged by a 'Secretary-at-War,' who was not a Secretary of State.

Secretary, one entrusted with the management of business; one who writes for another; the head of a Government department; an officer of a company, or club, etc.

Secretary of a Registered Company, is an officer of the company (McKay's case, (1876) 2 Ch. D. 1), and as such liable for misfeasance under s. 276 (ibid.). He is entitled to preferential payment on account of salary in a winding-up (s. 264; Cairney v. Back, 1906, 2 K. B. 746).

Secretary of Degrees and Injunctions, an officer of Chancery. The office was abolished by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 23.

Secta [fr. sequendo, Lat.], suit; anciently the witnesses or followers of a plaintiff.

Secta ad curlam, a writ that lay against him who refused to perform his suit either to the County Court or the Court-baron.

Secta ad furnum, suit to a public oven, or bakehouse. Abolished.

Secta ad justiciam faciendam, a service which a man is bound to perform by his fee.—Bract.

Secta ad molendinum, a writ that lay where a man, by usage, had ground his corn at the mill of a certain person, and afterwards went to another mill with his corn, thereby withdrawing his suit to the former.—Fitz. N. B. 123. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 36.

Secta ad torrale, suit to a kiln or malt-house. Abolished.

Secta curlæ, suit and service done by tenants at the lord's court.—Cowel.

Secta facienda per illam quæ habet encliam partem, a writ to compel the heir, who has the elder's part of the co-heirs, to perform suit and services for all the coparceners.—Reg. Brev. 177.

Secta non faciendis, a writ for a woman, who, for her dower, ought not to perform suit of court.—Reg. Brev. 174.

Secta quæ scripto militur a scripto variari non debet. Jenk. Cent. 65.—(A suit which is based upon a writing ought not to vary from the writing.)

Secta regalls, a suit or service by which all persons were bound twice a year to attend the sheriff's tourn.

Secta unica tantum facienda pro pluribus hæreditatibus, a writ for an heir who was distrained by the lord to do more suits than one, that he should be allowed to do one suit only in respect of the land of divers heirs descended to him.

Sectares, bidders at an auction.—Civ. Law.

Sectatores, suitors of court who, amongst the Saxons, gave their judgment or verdict in civil suits upon the matter of fact and law.—1 Reeve's Hist. Eng. Law, 22.

Secular, not spiritual; relating to affairs of the present world (in seculo).

Secular Clergy, parochial clergy who performed their ministry in seculo, and were contradistinguished from the regular clergy, who lived in monasteries, by rules (regulæ).

Secunda superoneratione pasturæ. See SECOND SURCHARGE, WRIT OF.

Secundum statum. See APPEARANCE, SEC. STAT.

Secundum subjectam materiam (with reference to the subject-matter). The meaning of a word or phrase is often governed by the context.

Securitatem Invenlendi, etc., an ancient writ, lying for the sovereign, against any of his subjects, to stay them from going out of the kingdom to foreign parts; the ground whereof is, that every man is bound to serve and defend the Commonwealth as the Crown shall think fit.—Fitz. N. B. 115.

Securitatis pacis, a writ that lay for one who was threatened with death or bodily harm by another, against him who so threatened.—Reg. Brev. 88.

Security for Costs. In certain cases a plaintiff, before proceeding with his action, may be required to give security for the costs of it. The principal cases in which security may be required are the following: (1) Where the plaintiff is resident abroad, but if he resides in Scotland or Northern Ireland security will not be required: aliter, in the Irish Free State (Wakely v. Triumph Cycle Co., 40 T. L. R. 15 (C. A.)); (2) where he misdescribes his residence, or is keeping out of the way; (3) where he is only a nominal plaintiff and is insolvent; (4) where he is a privileged person, e.g., an ambassador's servant; (5) where the plaintiff is a limited company (Companies Act, 1929, s. 371). But security cannot be required from a plaintiff on the mere ground of poverty or insolvency; or from a defendant, unless by reason of a counterclaim he is really in the position of a plaintiff; or from a person compelled to litigate. Security for costs may extend as well to past as future costs.

The Rules under the Judicature Acts make no change with reference to the subject of security for costs, and R. S. C. Ord. LXV., rr. 6, 6A and 6B, provides as follows:—

6. In any cause or matter in which security for costs is required the security shall be of such an amount, and be given at such times, and in such manner and form, as the Court or a Judge shall direct.

6A. A plaintiff ordinarily resident out of the jurisdiction may be ordered to give security for costs, though he may be temporarily resident within the jurisdiction.

6B. In actions brought by persons resident out of the jurisdiction where the plaintiff's claim is founded on a judgment or order or on a bill of exchange or other negotiable instrument, the power to require the plaintiff to give security for costs shall be in the discretion of the Court or Judge.

As to security for the costs of an appeal, see Ord. LVIII., r. 15.—Consult Morgan and Wurtzburg on Costs.

Security for Good Behaviour or Abearance. See KEEPING THE PEACE.

Security for Keeping the Peace. See PEACE; PEACE, BREACH OF.

Secus [Lat.], contrariwise.

Se defendendo, Homicide, excusable manslaughter in defence of one's own life, when attacked and put in jeopardy.—4 Steph. Com.

Sede plenâ, when a bishop's see is not vacant.

Sederunt, Acts of, ordinances of the Court of Session in Scotland, made originally under authority of the statute 1540, c. 93, and later enabling Acts, which may be said to be equivalent to the Regulæ Generales of the English Courts. Generally speaking, Acts of Sederunt regulate procedure in Scots litigation, terms of membership of legal Societies, etc. A quorum of nine judges is necessary.—48 Geo. 3, c. 151, s. 11.

Sedition, an offence against the Crown and government, not capital, and not amounting to treason. It cannot be tried at Quarter Sessions. See the Unlawful Assemblies Act, 1799 (39 Geo. 3, c. 79); the Seditious Meetings Act, 1817 (57 Geo. 3, c. 19), jointly called the 'Corresponding Societies Acts,' and much resembling one another. Registered friendly societies are exempted by s. 32 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 25), if transacting no business not relating to the objects of the societies; and the Criminal Libel Act, 1819 (60 Geo. 3 & 1 Geo. 4, c. 8). By the Act of 1817, s. 23, which has no parallel in the Act of 1799, political meetings of more than fifty persons within one mile of Westminster Hall, except for parliamentary election purposes, are declared unlawful on any day on which Parliament is sitting. By s. 25 of the Act of 1817, and s. 2 of the Act of 1799, every society or club, the members of which subscribe to any test or declaration not required or authorized by law, is declared to be an illegal society, and by s. 2 of the Act of 1799 the same character is impressed on:—

society at large, or which shall have any committee or select body so chosen or appointed that the members constituting the same shall not be known by the society at large to be members of such committee or select body, or which shall have any president, treasurer, secretary, delegate, or other officer so chosen or appointed that the election of such persons to such offices shall not be known to the society at large, or of which the names of all the members and of all committees or select bodies of members, and all presidents, treasurers, secretaries, delegates, and other officers shall not be entered in a book or books to be kept for that purpose, and to be open to the inspection of all the members of such society: and every society which shall be composed of different divisions or branches, or of different parts acting in any manner separately or distinct from each other, or of which any part shall have any separate or distinct president, secretary, treasurer, delegate, or other officer, elected or appointed by or for such part, or to act as an officer for such part.

On verdict or judgment by default against any person for composing, printing, or publishing any seditious libel 'tending to bring into hatred or contempt' the person of the sovereign 'or the Government and constitution of the United Kingdom as by law established or either House of Parliament,' or to excite the public 'to attempt the alteration of any matter in Church or State as by law established, otherwise than by lawful means,' the Court may make an order for the seizure of all copies of the libel, etc. See also Fire Arms Act, 1920, s. 16, amending the Unlawful Drilling Act, 1819 (60 Geo. 3 & 1 Geo. 4, c. 1), prohibiting any meeting for purposes of drill without authority of the Crown or a Secretary of State or deputed officer, and see the Public Order Act, 1936. Consult Odgers on Libel, 5th ed. p. 516.

Seducing to Leave Service, an injury for which a master may have an action on the case. See LABOURERS, STATUTE OF.

Seduction. The inducing a girl or woman to part with her virtue for the first time (R. v. Moon, 1910, 1 K. B. 818). An action of seduction may be brought by a parent or person standing in loco parentis for enticing away or debauching of the girl, per quod servitium amisit, but no express contract of service need be proved; see Evans v. Walton, (1867) L. R. 2 C. P. 615. There must be a legal right or interest by the plaintiff in the services of the woman who has been seduced (Whitbourne v. Williams, 1901, 2 K. B. 722). A master also, not standing in the relation of a parent, may maintain this action for debauching his servant. The woman herself has no right of action. In ascertaining the amount of damages, the jury should regard not merely the injury sustained by the loss of service, but also the wounded feeling of the parent or person standing in loco parentis.

The Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 41), expressly excepts actions for seduction, so that the old common law maxim applies, and the action does not subsist after death.

See [fr. sedes, Lat.], the diocese of a bishop.

Seeds Adulteration Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 112), amended as to meaning of 'dyeing' by the Adulteration of Seeds Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 17) (passed in consequence of Francis v. Maas, (1878) 3 Q. B. D. 341, where it was held no offence to make old seeds look like new). As thus amended the Act penalizes up to 5*l.* killing or dyeing seeds, the term 'to dye seeds' meaning 'to apply to seeds any process of colouring, dyeing, or sulphur smoking.' See also Seeds Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 54), requiring delivery to the purchaser of particulars specifying (inter alia) that the seeds sold have been tested as required by the Act.

Seignior, or Seigneur, a lord of a fee or manor.

Seignior in Gross, a lord without a manor, simply enjoying superiority and services.

Seigniorage, a royalty or prerogative of the Crown, whereby an allowance of gold and silver, brought in the mass to be exchanged for coin, is claimed.

Seigniorly, a manor or lordship.

Selsed. See TENURE.

Seisin, possession. The word is now confined to the possession of an estate of freehold.

There is a seisin in deed, as when an actual possession is taken; or in law, where lands descend, and one has not actually entered upon them. Seisin of the freehold may be defined to be the possession of such an estate in land as was anciently thought worthy to be held by a free man (Williams on Seisin, p. 2). See Leach v. Jay, (1878) 9 Ch. D. 42; Copestake v. Hoper, 1908, 2 Ch. 10; Thackray v. Norman, 1914, W. N. 303; and consult Williams on Seisin; Co. Litt. 266 b and 330 b (notes).

See also addenda, REGISTER OF SASEINES.

Seisin, Livery of, formal delivery of possession, called by the Feudists investiture of a fee or feudal estate. Applicable to corporeal hereditaments while incorporeal hereditaments such as a remainder or easement were conveyed by writing under seal. After the Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict.

c. 106), s. 2, all corporeal hereditaments might be conveyed by deed, and now by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 25, conveyance by livery of seisin has been abolished. See FEOFFMENT.

Seisina facit stipitem. Before the Inheritance Act, 1833, the old rule of intestate succession to real estate was that descent must be traced from the person last seised, i.e., in possession. (Seisin makes the heir.) But see now the Inheritance Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 106), which enacted that descent should be traced from the last purchaser, i.e., the last person entitled who did not inherit (see PURCHASE), and the rule is still applicable in 'ascertaining the heir' under equitable limitations provided for by ss. 130, 131 and 132 of the Law of Property Act, and s. 51 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, and Williams on Seisin, pp. 51 et seq.

Seisina habenda, etc., a writ for delivery of seisin to the lord of lands and tenements, after the sovereign, in right of his prerogative, had had the year, day, and waste on a felony committed, etc.—Reg. Brev. 165.

Sel, denotes the bigness of a thing to which it is added, as Selwood, a big wood.

Selda [fr. selde, Sax., a seat], a shop, shed, or stall in a market; a wood of willows or willows; also a saw-pit.—Co. Litt. 4.

Select Vestry. A vestry consisting of not less than twelve nor more than 120 householders, elected in parishes adopting the Vestries Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 60) (Hobhouse's Act), repealed, except s. 39, as to charity estates, so far as it relates to parish meetings in rural parishes, by the Local Government Act, 1894.

Selecti Iudices, Roman judges returned by the prætor, drawn by lot, and subject to be challenged and sworn like our juries.—3 Bl. Com. 366.

Self-defence. Both the life and limbs of a man are of such high value, in the estimation of the law of England, that it pardons even homicide, if committed se defendendo, or in order to preserve them. See DEFENCE; HOMICIDE.

Self-murder. See FELO DE SE.

Sellon of Land [fr. sillon], a ridge of ground rising between two furrows, containing no certain quantity, but sometimes more and sometimes less.—Termes de la Ley.

Semble [abbrev. semb. or sem., Fr.] (it seems). Used in reports to show that a point is not decided directly, but may be inferred from the decision.

Semestria, the collected decisions of the emperors in their councils.—Civ. Law.

Seminaufragium, half shipwreck, as where goods are cast overboard in a storm; also, where a ship has been so much damaged that her repair costs more than her worth. See CONSTRUCTIVE TOTAL LOSS.

Semi-plena probatio, a semi-proof: the testimony of one person, upon which the civilians would not allow any sentence to be founded. See UNUS NULLUS RULE.

Semper in obscuris quod minimum est sequimur. D. 50, 17, 9.—(In obscure constructions we always adopt that which is least obscure.)

Semper præsumitur pro legitimatione puerorum; et filiatio non potest probari. Co. Litt. 126 a.—(The presumption is always in favour of the legitimacy of children; and filiation cannot be proved.)

Semper præsumitur pro matrimonio.—(The presumption is always in favour of the validity of a marriage.) See MARRIAGE.

Semper præsumitur pro negante.—(The presumption is always in favour of the negative.) On an equal division of votes in the House of Lords the question passes in the negative (see Reg. v. Millis, (1844) 10 Cl. & F. 634; Paquin v. Beauclerk (formerly Holden), 1906, A. C. 148); and if any Court be equally divided (as was the Court of Queen's Bench in Reg. v. Archbishop of Canterbury, (1848) 11 Q. B. 483, on the question whether the opposition to the confirmation of a bishop is merely formal or not) things remain as they were before the Court was applied to; e.g., a rule for a mandamus is discharged.

Sen, justice.—Co. Litt. 61 a.

Senage, money paid for synodals.

Senators of the College of Justice. The judges of the Court of Session in Scotland are Senators of the College of Justice.—Act of 1540, c. 93.

Senatus consulta, abr. S.C. (ordinances of the senate), public Acts among the Romans, which regarded the whole community.—Sand. Just.

Senatus decreta (decisions of the senate), private Acts, which concerned particular persons or personal matters.—Civ. Law.

Seneschal [sein, Ger., a house; and schale, an office], a steward; also one who has the dispensing of justice.—Co. Litt. 61 a; Kitch. 13; Cooke's Jurisp. 102.

Seneschalle et mareshalle quod non tenent placita de libero tenemento, a writ addressed to the steward and marshal of England, inhibiting them from taking cognizance of an action in their court that concerns freehold.

—Reg. Brev. 185. Abolished.

Seneucla, widowhood.

Seneys-days, play-days, or times of pleasure and diversion.

Sense (of words). See SECUNDUM SUBJECTAM MATERIAM.

Sensu honesto, to interpret words sensu honesto is to take them so as not to impute impropriety to the persons concerned.

Sentence of a Court, a definite judgment pronounced in a criminal proceeding. In the case of indictable offences (except murder, on conviction of which the Court is bound to pronounce sentence of death, by s. 2 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (but see next title), and treason) the extent of the sentence is within a given maximum left to the discretion of the Court, such few maximum sentences as previously were enjoined having been abolished by the Penal Servitude Act, 1891. In passing sentence reference should not be made to the unexpired portion of any former sentence, as this has to be served by virtue of s. 9 of the Penal Servitude Act, 1864 (R. v. Smith, 1909, 2 K. B. 756).

See the Infanticide Act, 1922, when in certain cases a verdict of infanticide may be returned, notwithstanding that the circumstances were such that, but for the Act, would have amounted to murder.

There is an express power of refraining from sentencing at once to punishment, and of directing the conditional release of the offender given to the Court by the Probation of Offenders Act, 1907; and see the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, ss. 7-9.

In sentencing any misdeemeanant to imprisonment without hard labour, the Court may order that he be treated as a misdeemeanant of the first division of misdeemeanants, and not as a 'criminal prisoner' (Prison Act, 1865, s. 67), and s. 6 of the Prison Act, 1898, provides for prisoners being divided into three divisions.

Sentence of Death, Recording of. See the disused but still unrepealed Judgment of Death Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 48), 'to enable Courts to abstain from pronouncing sentence of death in certain capital felonies,' and enter judgment on the record instead—which had the effect of a reprieve.

The Children Act, 1933, s. 53 (1), provides as follows:—

Sentence of death shall not be pronounced on or recorded against a person under the age of eighteen, but in lieu thereof the court shall sentence him to be detained during His Majesty's pleasure, and, if so sentenced, he shall, notwithstanding anything in the other provisions of this Act, be liable to be detained in such place and under such conditions as the Secretary of State may direct.

Separaliter [Lat.] (separately or distributively).

Separate Estate. The Common Law did not allow a married woman to possess any property independently of her husband, but when property was settled to her separate use and benefit, equity treated her, in respect to that property, as a feme sole, or unmarried woman. A wife's separate property might be acquired by a pre-nuptial contract with her husband, or by gift, either from the husband, or from any other person. The Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (see MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY), almost abolished the Common Law distinction between married and unmarried women in respect of property, and the amending Act of 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 63) provided (s. 1) that:—

1. Every contract hereafter entered into by a married woman otherwise than as agent,

(a) shall be deemed to be a contract entered into by her with respect to and to bind her separate property whether she is or is not in fact possessed of or entitled to any separate property at the time when she enters into such contract;

(b) shall bind all separate property which she may at that time or thereafter be possessed of or entitled to; and

(c) shall also be enforceable by process of law against all property which she may thereafter while discover be possessed of or entitled to. Provided that nothing in this section contained shall render available to satisfy any liability or obligation arising out of such contract any separate property which at that time or thereafter she is restrained from anticipating.

The Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 30), repealed the provisions of this section and provides, subject to the provisions of the Act, that a married woman is to be capable of (1) acquiring; rendering herself liable in contract or tort; (2) being capable of being sued in contract or tort; and (3) being subjected to bankruptcy law and the enforcement of judgments and orders in all respects as if she were a feme sole, and by s. 2, that her separate property belonging to her or held for her separate use in equity on the 2nd August, 1935, or belonging to her or acquired by or devolving upon her after that date shall belong to her in all respects as if she were a feme sole.

But marriage and other settlements made before the 1st January, 1936, frequently contain (see s. 19 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, and the Married Women's Property Act, 1907) restrictions against the 'anticipation' of her settled property by a married woman. These restrictions are perfectly valid, but they are subject to the important qualification that under s. 7 of the Conveyancing Act, 1911 (replacing s. 39 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881), the Chancery Division of the High Court may, if it thinks fit, where it appears to the Court for the benefit of a married woman, bind her interest in any property, with her consent, notwithstanding that she is restrained from anticipation. The Law Reform (M. W. and T.) Act, 1935, does not invalidate or affect these restrictions upon anticipation created before the 1st January, 1936, but it avoids the creation of any such restriction by any instrument, exercise of a special power, or will of a testator dying after that date except any instrument attaching the restriction in consequence of an obligation entered into before that date. See MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY.

Separation. If a husband and wife cannot agree so as to carry out the purpose of their union, they may resolve to live apart. A deed of separation, containing the terms and conditions upon which an actual and immediate separation is to be arranged, will be valid, so far as relates to the trusts and covenants of the husband; but if it contemplate a contingent or future separation it is void, as opposed to the policy of marriage, and the well-being of the community.

The concurrence of trustees is not essential, and a deed of separation will be binding on the wife as well as the husband, though entered into without the intervention of a trustee (McGregor v. McGregor, (1888) 21 Q. B. D. 424; Sweet v. Sweet, 1895, 1 Q. B. 12).

The Court will decree specific performance of an agreement to execute a deed of immediate separation if based upon sufficient consideration (Gibbs v. Harding, (1870) L. R. 5 Ch. 336).

If, after the separation, the husband and wife be reconciled, and live together again, that circumstance will put an end to the agreement, and determine the separate allowance.

See, further, HUSBAND AND WIFE, and JUDICIAL SEPARATION.

Separatists, seceders from the Church. They, like Quakers, solemnly affirm, instead of taking the usual oath, before they give evidence. See 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 82; Oaths Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 46); and AFFIRMATION.

Separia, several or severed and divided from other ground.—Paroch. Antiq. 336.

Sepoy, or Sipoy [fr. sip., Hind., a bow and arrow], a native Indian soldier.

Septennial Act, 1715 (1 Geo. 1, st. 2, c. 38). By this Act (enlarging the time from three years) a parliament had continuance for seven years and no longer unless sooner dissolved. By the Parliament Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 13), s. 7, five years was substituted for the seven years fixed by the Septennial Act.

Septuagesima, the third Sunday before Quadragesima Sunday in Lent, being about the seventieth day before Easter.

Septum, an inclosure; any place paled in.

Sepultura, an offering to the priest, for the burial of a dead body.

Sequatur sub suo periculo, a writ that lay where a summons ad warrantizandum was awarded, and the sheriff returned that he had nothing whereby he might be summoned; then issued an alias and a pluries, and if he came not in on the pluries, this writ issued.—Old N. B. 163.

Sequela causæ, the process and depending issue of a cause for trial.

Sequela curiæ, suit of court.

Sequela molendina. See SECTA AD MOLENDINUM.

Sequela villanorum, the family retinue and appurtenances to the goods and chattels of villeins, which were at the absolute disposal of the lord.—Paroch. Antiq. 216.

Sequels, small allowances of meal, or manufactured victual, made to the servants at a mill where corn was ground, by tenure, in Scotland. See THRILAGE.

Sequendum et prosequendum, to follow and prosecute a cause.

Sequester, to renounce; to set aside from the use of the owners.

Sequestrari facias de bonis ecclesiasticis, Writ of, a process of execution issued against a beneficed clerk commanding the bishop to enter into the rectory and parish church, and to take and sequester the same, and hold them until, of the rents, tithes, and profits thereof, and of the other ecclesiastical goods of the defendant, he has levied the plaintiffs' debt.

The Rules of the Supreme Court provide that this writ may be issued and executed as theretofore: Ord. XLIII., r. 5.

The Sequestration Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 45), provides that on sequestration the bishop of the diocese shall appoint a curate and assign a stipend. And see the Benefices Sequestration Measure, 1933.

Sequestratio, the separating or setting aside of a thing in controversy, from the possession of both the parties that contend for it; it is twofold—voluntary, done by consent of all parties; and necessary, when a judge orders it.—Civ. Law.

Sequestration. This is a prerogative process (formerly confined to the Court of Chancery and the Courts of Probate and Divorce), addressed to certain commissioners empowering them to enter upon real estates, and sequester the rents, and upon the goods, chattels, and personal estate of a person in contempt for disobedience of a decree or order, and keep the same until the defendant clear his contempt. It has no return, and is granted upon a return of non est inventus by the sergeant-at-arms, or by a sheriff on an attachment.—1 Eq. Rep. 261. See R. S. C. Ord. XLIII., r. 6. It is the mode of enforcing an order against a corporation in the case of the order having been 'wilfully disobeyed.' See R. S. C. Ord. XLII., r. 31, and Stancomb v. Trowbridge Urban Council, 1910, 2 Ch. 190.

Sequestration of a Benefice. See SEQUESTARI FACIAS.

Sequestro habendo, a judicial writ for the discharging a sequestration of the profits of a church benefice, granted by the bishop at the sovereign's command, thereby to compel the parson to appear at the suit of another; upon his appearance, the parson may have this writ for the release of the sequestration.—Reg. Judic. 36.

Serf, the slave of feudalism. See SERVI.

Sergeanty, or Seargeanty, or Searjeanty, or Serjeanty, a service anciently due to the Crown for lands held of it and which could not be due to any other lord. It was divided into grand and petit. See TENURE.

A peculiarity of the Law of Property Act, 1922, abolishing copyhold tenure is that by s. 136, the services incident to grand and petit serjeanty are preserved (following 12 Car. 2, c. 24, as to grand serjeanty), and are declared not to be manorial incidents but the special tenure, if any, is free and common socage, or if copyhold, is enfranchised under the Act.

Seriatim [Lat.] (severally, and in order).

Serjeant [fr. serviens, Lat.], used in several senses:—

(1) Serjeants-at-law, or of the coif (servientes ad legem), otherwise called serjeants counter, the highest degree in the Common Law, as doctors in the Civil Law; but, according to Spelman, a doctor of law is superior to a serjeant, for the very name of a doctor is magisterial, but that of a serjeant is only ministerial. Serjeants-at-law were made by the sovereign's writ, addressed unto such as are called, commanding them to take upon them that degree by a certain day.—Fortescue, c. 50; 3 Cro. 1; Dyer, 72; 2 Inst. 213.

The monopoly of exclusive audience enjoyed by the serjeants in the Court of Common Pleas, during term time, ineffectually attempted to be abolished by Royal Warrant in 1834 (see In the matter of the Serjeants-at-law, (1840) 6 Bing. N. C. 235), was abolished in 1846 by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 54.

The judges of the Common Law Courts were formerly required to take or to have taken the degree of Serjeant-at-law; but by the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 8, that requirement is dispensed with in the case of any person appointed a judge of the High Court of Justice or of the Court of Appeal; and since 1868 no person except a Judge Designate has taken the degree, which, however, has never been formally abolished. See Pulling's Law of the Coif. Lord Lindley, d. 1921, was the last surviving Serjeant-at-Law.

(2) Serjeants-at-arms, officers attending the sovereign's person to arrest individuals of distinction offending, and give attendance on the Lord High Steward of England, sitting in judgment on any traitor, etc. Two of these, by the royal permission, attend on the two Houses of Parliament, and each has a deputy; the office of him in the House of Commons is the keeping of the doors, and the execution of such commands, touching the apprehension and taking into custody of any offender, as the House shall enjoin him. Another of them attended the Court of Chancery, and one on the Lord Treasurer of England; also one upon the Lord Mayor of London on extraordinary solemnities, etc. They are in old books called virgatories, because they carried the silver rods gilded, as they now do maces, before the sovereign.—Fleta, l. 2, c. 38.

(3) Serjeants of the household were officers who executed several functions within the royal household.—33 Hen. 8, c. 12.

(4) The Common Serjeant, a judicial officer in the City of London, who attends the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen on court days. He acts as one of the judges of the Central Criminal Court.

(5) Inferior serjeants, such as serjeants of the mace in corporations, officers of the county; and there are serjeants of manors, of the police, etc.

Serjeantia idem est quod servitium. Co. Litt. 105.—(Serjeanty is the same as service.)

Serjeants' Inn. A society consisting of the entire body of serjeants-at-law, which included all the Common Law judges appointed before the commencement of the Judicature Acts. Their property in Chancery Lane was sold by auction in 1877, and the proceeds, 57,000*l.*, divided amongst the then members of the Society. See title SERJEANT.

Sermo relatus ad personam intelligi debet de conditione personæ. 4 Co. 16.—(A speech relating to a person is to be understood as relating to his condition.) Thus, saying to an attorney that he is known to deal corruptly is to be understood as meaning that he deals corruptly in his office of an attorney. See Birchley's case, 4 Rep. 16.

Sermones semper accipiendi sunt secundum subjectam materiam, et conditionem personarum. 4 Rep. 14.—(Language is always to be understood according to its subject-matter, and the condition of the persons.) See SECUNDUM SUBJECTAM MATERIAM.

Servage, when a tenant, besides payment of a certain rent, finds one or more workmen for his lord's service. King John brought the Crown of England in servage to the see of Rome: 2 Inst. 174; 1 Rich. 2, c. 6.

Servants. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

Servi, bondmen, or servile tenants.

They were of four sorts: (1) Such as sold themselves for a livelihood. (2) Debtors sold because they were unable to pay their debts. (3) Captives in war, retained and employed as perfect slaves. (4) Nativi, servants born as such, solely belonging to the lord. There were also said to be servi testamentales, those which were afterwards called covenant-servants.

Servi redemptione [Lat.], criminal slaves in the time of Henry I.—1 Kemble's Sazons, 197 (1849).

Servi testamentales, covenant-servants.

Service [fr. servitium, Lat.], that duty which a tenant, by reason of his estate, owes to his lord. There are many divisions of this duty in our ancient law books, as into personal and real, which is either urbane or rustic, free and base, continual and annual, casual and accidental, intrinsic and extrinsic, certain and uncertain, etc. See TENURE.

The formal mode of bringing a writ or other process, or a notice in a suit, to the knowledge of the person affected by it.

The service of writs of summons is regulated by R. S. C. 1883, Ord. IX., which by r. 1 dispenses with service, when (as is usual) the defendant, by his solicitor, agrees to accept service, and enters an appearance. By r. 2, service, when required, must be personal, unless an order for 'substituted service, or the substitution of notice for service,' be made. Personal service is effected by tendering a copy of the writ to the defendant, and producing the original if required by him; and actual knowledge will not be equivalent to or dispense with a necessity for personal service (Re Tuck, 1906, 1 Ch. 692). As to service by post, see R. S. C. Ord. LXVII., r. 2.

By the Law of Property Act, 1925, any notice to or by lessees, mortgagors, mortgagees, and any notice affecting property required by any instrument coming into operation after 1925 unless a contrary intention appears, must be in writing and may be effected by registered letter through the post. See L. P. Act, 1925, s. 196, replacing and extending the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 67 (4). See POST.

As to address for service, see, as to plaintiff, INDORSEMENT OF ADDRESS; and as to defendant, APPEARANCE.

As to the expression 'service by post' in a statute passed after Jan. 1st, 1890, by s. 26 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, 'Service is deemed to be effected on properly addressing, prepaying, and posting a letter containing the document' to be served, 'and unless the contrary is proved, to have been effected at the time at which the letter would have been delivered in the ordinary course of post.'

Service Franchise, a franchise given by s. 3 of the Representation of the People Act, 1884, to male persons occupying, by virtue of their service or employment, a dwelling-house not occupied by their master. Obsolete. See ELECTORAL FRANCHISE.

Service of an Heir. Originally in Scotland no heritable estate vested in the heir merely by survivorship, and this procedure (by petition) was necessary to vest the right.

Service out of the Jurisdiction of a writ of summons may be allowed by the Court or a judge in certain specified cases, e.g., where the contract sued upon was entered into within the jurisdiction, etc.—R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XI. And see ibid. for restriction upon the allowance of such service upon a defendant resident in Scotland or Ireland. As to service of a summons, order, or notice, see r. 8A. As to the exercise of discretion in giving leave, see Watson & Sons v. Daily Record, Ltd., 1907, 1 K. B. 853. There can be no service out of the jurisdiction except in the particular cases mentioned in Ord. XI., which forms a complete code on the subject.

Service, Secular, worldly service, as contrasted with spiritual or ecclesiastical.

Serviens ad legem, serjeant-at-law, q.v.

Servient Tenement, the land over which an easement is exercised, as the dominant tenement is that to which the easement is attached. See EASEMENT. Consult Goddard on Easements.

Servientibus, certain writs touching servants and their masters violating the statutes made against their abuses.—Reg. Brev. 189.

Servitilis acquietandis, a judicial writ for a man distrained for service to one, when he owes and performs them to another, for the acquittal of such services.—Reg. Judic. 27.

Servitium feudale et prædiale, a personal service, but due only by reason of lands which were held in fee.—Bract. l. 2, c. 16.

Servitium forinsecum, a service which did not belong to the chief lord, but to the king.—Dugd. Mon. ii. 48.

Servitium, in lege Angliæ, regulariter accipitur pro servitio quod per tenentes dominis suis debetur ratione feodi sui. Co. Litt. 65.—(Service, by the law of England, means the service which is due from the tenants to the lords by reason of their fee.)

Servitium intrinsecum, that service which was due to the chief lord alone from his tenants within his manor.—Fleta, l. 3.

Servitium liberum, a service to be done by feudatory tenants, who were called liberi homines, and distinguished from vassals, as was their service, for they were not bound to any of the base services of ploughing the lord's land, etc., but were to find a man and horse, or go with the lord into the army, or to attend the Court, etc. It was called also servitium liberum armorum.

Servitium regale, royal service, or the prerogatives that, within a royal manor, belonged to the lord of it; which were generally reckoned to be the following—viz., power of judicature in matters of property, and of life and death in felonies and murders; right to waifs and estrays; minting of money; assize of bread and beer, and weights and measures.—Paroch. Antiq. 60.

Servitor, a serving man: particularly applied to students of Christ Church, Oxford, upon the foundation, similarly to sizars at Cambridge.

Servitors of Bills, servants or messengers of the Marshal of the King's Bench, who were sent abroad with writs, etc., to summon persons to that Court.—2 Hen. 4, c. 23.

Servitudes, burdens affecting property in Scotland; resembling easements in England.

In the Civil Law, certain portions or fragments of the right of ownership separated from the rest, and enjoyed by persons other than the owner of the thing itself. As to their various kinds, see Sand. Just.

Session, Court of, in Scotland, the supreme civil Court of Scotland, instituted A.D. 1532, and formerly consisting of fifteen judges—that number being reduced in 1830, by 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 69, s. 20, to thirteen; viz., the Lord President, the Lord Justice-Clerk, and eleven ordinary lords. This Court is required, by 48 Geo. 3, c. 151, to sit in two divisions; the Lord President, with three ordinary lords, form the first division; and the Lord Justice-Clerk and three other ordinary lords form the second division. There are five permanent Lords Ordinary, attached equally to both divisions, the last appointed of whom officiates on the bills, i.e., petitions to the Court during session, and performs the other duties of junior Lord Ordinary. The chambers of the Parliament House, in which the First and Second Divisions of the Court of Session hold their sittings, are called the Inner House; those in which the Lords Ordinary sit, as single judges, to hear motions and causes, are collectively called the Outer House. The nomination and appointment of the judges is in the Crown. No one can be appointed who has not served as an advocate or principal clerk of session for five years, or a writer to the signet for ten years. Reference may be made to Shand's Practice of the Court of Session; but the practice has been considerably altered by recent statutes. See now, Administration of Justice (Scotland) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 41). See also JUSTICIARY, HIGH COURT OF.

Session, Great, of Wales, a court which was abolished by 1 Wm. 4, c. 70; the proceedings now issue out of the Royal Courts of Justice, and two of the judges of the High Court hold the circuits in Wales and Cheshire, as in other English counties.

The jurisdiction of the Great Session of Wales, which was first established by Henry VIII., was similar to that of Judges of Assize in England. Latterly it was exercised by two barristers, who sat for eighteen days only, into which period all the litigious business has to be compressed.

Session of Parliament, the sittings of the Houses of Lords and Commons, which are continued, day by day, by adjournment, until the parliament is prorogued or dissolved. See PARLIAMENT.

Sessional Divisions of Counties. See next title.

Sessions of the Peace, sittings of justices of the peace for the execution of those powers which are confided to them by their commission, or by charter, and by numerous statutes. They are of three descriptions :—

I. Petty Sessions.—Metropolitan Police magistrates can act alone (see that title), with that exception, every meeting of two or more justices in the same place, for the execution of some power vested in them by law, whether had on their own mere motion, or on the requisition of any party entitled to require their attendance in discharge of some duty, is a petty or petit session. The occasions for holding petty sessions are very numerous, amongst the most important of which is the bailing persons accused of felony, which may be done after a full hearing of evidence on both sides, where the presumption of guilt shall either be weak in itself, or weakened by the proofs adduced on behalf of the prisoner. See PETTY SESSIONS.

As to right of the public to attend petty sessions, see OPEN COURT.

As to places of petty sessions, see Petty Sessions Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 18).

II. Special Sessions.—A special session is a sitting of two or more justices, held not of their own mere motion and private agreement, but on a particular occasion for the execution of some given branch of their authority, after reasonable notice to all the other magistrates of the hundred or other division of the county, city, etc., for which it is convened, and holden, has been served personally or by post.

As to regulation of sessional divisions, see the Division of Counties Act, 1828, and other Acts; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Justices (Sessions).'

There are several special sessions required by law to be held at particular periods, as by s. 10 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, a general annual licensing meeting within the first fourteen days of February, for licensing alehouses and victualling-houses to sell excisable liquors by retail to be drunk or consumed on the premises; and, formerly, for executing the purposes of the Highway Acts, 1835 and 1864, see HIGHWAY; for granting licences to deal in game under 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 32; for pawnbrokers' certificates under 35 & 36 Vict. c. 93 (these two functions were transferred to district councils by 56 & 57 Vict. c. 73); and licences for theatres outside the Lord Chamberlain's jurisdiction, now granted by county or borough councils, see THEATRE.

III. General or Quarter Sessions of the peace, held before two or more justices, for execution of the general authority given to justices by the commission of the peace and certain Acts of Parliament.

The court is a court of oyer and terminer, and a court of record, and not a court of inferior jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction is criminal and civil, and arises from the commission of the peace itself, as settled under 18 Edw. 3, c. 2, and 34 Edw. 3, c. 1. The two main jurisdictions are (1) to try, with a jury, for indictable offences not excepted by the Act of 1842 as below, and (2) to hear appeals from petty or special sessions.

Time of Quarter Sessions.—The time of Quarter Sessions is now fixed by the Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 86), s. 22, and instead of being held at the times prescribed by s. 35 of the Law Terms Act, 1830, shall be held at such times within the period of twenty-one days immediately preceding or immediately following 25th March, 24th June, 29th September, and 25th December. See QUARTER SESSIONS.

Extent of Criminal Jurisdiction.—The early jurisdiction under 34 Edw. 3, c. 1, was to hear and determine all manner of felonies in the county; but by the Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 38), 'to define the jurisdiction of Justices in General and Quarter Sessions of the Peace,' it is enacted that neither the justices of the peace for any county, nor the Recorder of any borough, shall at any sessions of the peace try any person for any treason, murder, or capital felony, or for any felony which, when committed by a person not previously convicted of felony, is punishable by penal servitude for life, or for :

- (1) Misprision of treason.
- (2) Offences against the king's title, or government, etc.
- (3) Offences subject to the penalties of præmunire.
- (4) Blasphemy and offences against religion.
- (5) Administering or taking unlawful oaths.
- (6) Perjury and subornation of perjury.
- (7) Making or suborning any other person to make a false oath, affirmation, or declaration, punishable as perjury or as a misdemeanour; (6) and (7) were repealed and re-enacted by Perjury Act, 1911 (c. 6), s. 10.

(8) Forgery.

(9) Unlawfully or maliciously setting fire to crops of corn, etc. The exclusion of these offences was repealed and now all offences under ss. 16 and 17 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, are triable. See Criminal Justice Act, 1925.

(10) Bigamy, and offences against the laws relating to marriage.

(11) Abduction of women and girls.

(12) Concealment of birth.

(13) Offences of bankrupts. This restriction is abolished. See below.

(14) Libels.

(15) Bribery, except under the Public Bodies Corrupt Practices Act, 1889 (c. 69), s. 6.

(16) Unlawful combinations and conspiracies, except conspiracies and combinations to commit any offence which such justices or Recorder respectively have or has jurisdiction to try when committed by one person.

(17) Stealing or injuring records or documents belonging to any court of law.

(18) Stealing or destroying, or concealing, wills or documents containing evidence of title to real estate.

To which must be added the following offences :

(19) Offences against s. 9 of the Night Poaching Act, 1828.

(20) Misdemeanours against ss. 82, 83, 84 of the Licensing Act, 1861.

(21) Offences against the False Personation Act, 1874.

(22) Corrupt practices at elections (Corrupt and Illegal Practices Act, 1883, s. 53, and Municipal Elections Act, 1884, ss. 30, 35, 36).

(23) Indictable offences against the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885.

(24) Misdemeanours under the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1906.

(25) Offences under the Punishment to Incest Act, 1908.

(26) Indictable offences under the Perjury Act, 1911.

(27) Offences under the Official Secrets Act, 1911.

(28) Misdemeanours under ss. 20, 21, 22 of the Larceny Act, 1916.

(29) Child Destruction, Infant Life (Preservation) Act, 1929, s. 2.

Note.—Jurisdiction to try offences in bankruptcy was given by s. 20 of the Debtors Act, 1869, and jurisdiction to try burglary cases by the Burglary Act, 1896, now replaced by s. 38 of the Larceny Act, 1916.

Subject to the above restrictions, where an offence is created, and declared a misdemeanour by a statute passed since the institution of the office of justice of the peace, it may be tried by a court of quarter sessions, unless there is some special direction that it shall be determined by another court; and with the above exceptions, the quarter sessions have power to try all indictable offences, whether offences at the Common Law or created by statute. As to the extension of criminal jurisdiction, see Criminal Justice Act, 1925, s. 18 and Schedule. See Stone's Justices Manual, 68th ed. pp. 243 et seq., and Archbold, Quarter Sessions, 6th ed. pp. 461 et seq.

Appellate Jurisdiction.—Quarter sessions have jurisdiction to hear an appeal from any conviction by a court of summary jurisdiction where the appellant has not pleaded guilty to or admitted the offence (Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, s. 37 (1)); and under the Criminal Justice Act, 1925, s. 25, a person who pleaded guilty or admitted the offence can appeal against sentence imposed. An appeal to quarter sessions lies from a court of summary jurisdiction in respect of any order (or refusal to make an order) under the enactments relating to bastardy (ib., s. 37 (2)). There is also a right to appeal under the Metropolitan Police Courts Act, 1839, s. 50; as to the appeal against the making of a Probation Order, see Criminal Justice Act, 1925, s. 7 (1), as amended by the 1926 Act. Quarter sessions also hear appeals relating to licensing, rating, highways, and removal of poor persons. Appeals to quarter sessions are re-hearings. As to procedure when the appeal is from an order or conviction of a court of summary jurisdiction, see the Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933, which substitutes a new s. 31 for the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879.

As to the administrative business of quarter sessions, transferred to the county councils by the Local Government Act, 1888, see COUNTY COUNCIL.

Set-off, any counter-balance or cross-claim.

The subject of a set-off under the former practice was a cross debt or claim, on which a separate action might be sustained, due to the party defendant from the party plaintiff. It was a defence created by 2 Geo. 2, c. 22, and had no existence at Common Law, and could only be pleaded in respect of mutual debts of a definite character, and did not apply to a claim founded in damages, or in the nature of a penalty, and the debt must have been due in the same right and between the same parties, and not a mere equitable demand. The defendant could not avail himself of a set-off, unless it were specially pleaded, and particulars thereof delivered with the plea.

It is now provided by R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XIX., r. 3, that a defendant in an action may set off or set up, by way of counter-claim against the claims of the plaintiff, any right or claim, whether such set-off or counter-claim sound in damages or not. Consult Ogders on Pleading, 7th ed. pp. 236 et seq.

Sets of Exchange, or of Bills. It has been common, from a very early period, for the drawer to draw and deliver to the payee several parts, commonly called a set, of the same bill of exchange, any one part of which being paid, the others are void. This is done to obviate inconveniences from the mislaying or miscarriage of the bill, and to enable the holder to transmit the same by different conveyances to the drawee, so as to ensure the most speedy presentment for acceptance and payment. The general usage in England and America is for the drawer to deliver a set of three parts of a bill to the payee or holder.—Byles on Bills.

By the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 71, where a bill is drawn in a set, each part of the set being numbered and containing a reference to the other part, the whole of the parts constitute one bill.

Settled Land. For the purposes of the Settled Land Acts, 1882–1890, 'settled land' meant land, and any estate and interest therein, which was the subject of a settlement; and 'settlement' meant any instrument, or any number of instruments, under which any land, or any estate or interest in land, 'stands for the time being limited to or in trust for any persons by way of succession' (Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 2) (see infra for the statutory definitions in the Settled Land Act, 1925, which has repealed the S. L. Acts, 1882–1890). Where the settlement consists of more instruments than one it is commonly called a 'compound settlement,' though this term is not defined in the Acts themselves; as to compound settlements, see Re Du Cane & Nettlefold, 1898, 2 Ch. 96; Re Munday & Roper, 1899, 1 Ch. 275; Re Lord Wimborne & Browne, 1904, 1 Ch. 537; Wolstenholme & Cherry, Conveyancing, etc., Acts.

Prior to 1856 settled estates could not be sold or leased except under the authority of some power in the settlement by which they were settled, or of a private Act of Parliament. In 1856 the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act (19 & 20 Vict. c. 120) (amended and extended by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 77; 27 & 28 Vict. c. 45; and 37 & 38 Vict. c. 33), gave large powers to the Court of Chancery, with the concurrence of the parties interested, to direct sales and leases of settled estates, and also enabled tenants for life, without application to any Court, to make certain leases binding on the parties in remainder. The Settled Estates Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 18), consolidated these Acts, with some amendments.

The Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), came into operation on the 1st January, 1883, was retrospective, and though not repealing the Act of 1877, rendered its provisions comparatively useless. The main objects of the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, were to liberate tenants for life from the control of their trustees, and to enable them to improve settled land out of the proceeds of the sale of part of it, or permanently to convert the whole or part of the settled land into money and receive the income derived from its investment instead of the rents of the estate. The Acts regarded the tenant for life as the person most interested in the welfare of the estate, and empowered him to do almost anything that a judicious owner would wish to do, subject to one great exception—he could not sell the estate and himself receive the purchase money; that must be paid at his option either into court or to the trustees of the settlement, as defined by s. 2 (8) of the Settled Land Act, 1882, and s. 16 of the Act of 1890, now replaced and reproduced by s. 30 of the S. L. Act, 1925, including among trustees the persons appointed for the purpose by the settlement, or trustees with a power of sale or consent thereto, and others. The number of trustees to whom the money is paid must not be less than two, or a trust corporation, but this does not apply to a personal representative selling in course of administration or to persons of full age absolutely entitled to deal with the legal estate free from the settlement. The direction of investment lies with the tenant for life and the investments may not be varied without his consent (s. 75 of the S. L. Act, 1925); capital money and the investments representing it will devolve on the death of the life tenant in the same way.

as the land would have done if it had remained unsold (Re Monckton, 1913, 2 Ch. 636), and see s. 22 of the Act of 1882, replaced by s. 75 (5) of the S. L. Act, 1925.

The general scheme of the Settled Land Acts, 1882-1890, has not been materially altered by the Settled Land Act, 1925, which repeals, consolidates and extends the S. L. Acts, 1882 to 1890. The Act of 1925, however, contains some innovations which bring it into line with the rest of the land legislation of 1925, so that a fee-simple in possession or a term of years absolute (which are the only legal estates in existence) should be vested in an owner who could transfer either of these if settled entirely to a purchaser for value without being affected by the limitations and trusts of the settlement. To effect this, the entire legal estate comprised in the settlement is now vested in the tenant for life or in a person on whom the like powers have been conferred instead of being merely subject to the power of disposition freed from the settlement which had been given to the tenant for life by the Acts of 1882 to 1890. The difference is technical without any substantial alteration in effect, since the tenant for life's beneficial interest is still limited for his life only, but more substantial changes have been introduced.

By the S. L. Act, 1925, s. 4 (1), it is provided that 'Every settlement of a legal estate in land inter vivos shall, save as in this Act otherwise provided, be effected by two deeds, namely, a vesting deed and a trust instrument, and if effected in any other way shall not operate to transfer or create a legal estate.' See VESTING INSTRUMENT and TRUST INSTRUMENT.

By s. 1, ibid., a settlement now includes one or more instruments whereby land stands limited in trust: (sub-s. (i.)) for any persons by way of succession, (sub-s. (ii.)) for any person in possession (a) in tail, (b) for a legal estate subject to a limitation over, (c) for a base or determinable fee, or corresponding interest in leasehold land, (d) being an infant, for a legal estate, or (sub-s. (iii.)) limited in trust for any person for a legal estate contingently on the happening of any event, or (sub-s. (iv.)) limited to or in trust for a married woman of full age in possession for a legal estate or any other interest with a restraint upon anticipation, or (sub-s. (v.)) charged voluntarily, or in consideration of marriage or by way of family arrangement with any payment of any rent-charge for life or less period or any capital or annual or periodic sum for portions, advancement, maintenance or other benefits with or without terms of years for securing the same (as to this see the liberating amendment in the L. P. Amendment Act, 1926, ss. 1 and 2), and references in the Act to the settlement shall extend to any compound settlement to which the land may be subject (see Re Ogle's Settled Estates, 1927, 1 Ch. 229).

Sect. 1, defining settlement, does not apply to land held on trust for sale (L. P. Amendment Act, 1926). See also Ryder and Steadman's Contract, 1927, 2 Ch. 62.

By s. 4 (2), the vesting deed must convey the land to the tenant for life or statutory owners for the legal estate, the subject of the settlement, or if the legal estate is already vested in the tenant for life or statutory owner, must declare that the land is vested in him for that estate. The expression 'Tenant for life' (defined in s. 19 (1) and extended by s. 117 (1), (xxviii.)) includes persons having the powers of a tenant for life and complying with the statutory definition (see s. 20), and includes tenants for life as defined by s. 1 (5) of the Act of 1882 (if of full age), and persons having the powers of a tenant for life under ss. 58 and 59 of 1882, as extended by s. 20, 1925, such as tenants in tail, tenants in fee-simple subject to executory limitations over, and more particularly to an estate owner of land subject to family charges, and a married woman subject to restraint upon anticipation.

A vesting instrument must be executed in favour of each successive tenant for life or statutory owner upon his becoming entitled, and if the legal estate is held by statutory owners, they must also at his request execute a vesting deed in favour of the tenant for life upon his becoming entitled. The vesting deed constitutes the tenant for life's title to deal with the legal estate, and a purchaser for value from him under that title is not concerned with anything outside the vesting instrument so far as relates to equitable interests affecting the estate and subject to the provisions of the Law of Property and other land legislation of 1925, except that in some cases, notably a first vesting instrument in connection with a pre-1926 settlement, it will be incumbent on the purchaser (inter alia) to identify the land conveyed with the land comprised in the settlement, so as to see that the person conveying is the person in whom the land ought to be vested as tenant for life or statutory owner and that the trustees have been properly constituted (see s. 110, S. L. Act, 1925). Under s. 21, an estate owner in fee-simple in possession or entitled to a term of years absolute subject to family charges may declare that the legal estate is vested in him on trust to give effect to those charges, etc., and thereupon subject to the appointment of trustees as provided by the section, he may exercise the powers of a tenant for life. A similar result can be attained by way of trust for sale (L. P. Act, 1925, s. 2), but the owner may also convey the legal estate simply as owner in fee or of the term subject to the charge (L. P. Amend. Act, 1926).

By s. 23, where there is no tenant for life or person having the power of a tenant for life under ss. 20 and 26 (infancy), any person of full age on whom such powers are by the settlement conferred or in any other case the trustees of the settlement are to have the powers of a tenant for life. These persons having the powers of a tenant for life, as well as the Settled Land Act trustees during an infancy (if so acting instead of a personal representative, see s. 26 (2)), are called 'statutory owners' and may come into existence (a) in the event of land being limited in trust contingently on a future event, or (b) in case of a discretionary trust, or (c) a trust for accumulation, or in other cases where there is no person being a tenant for life or having his powers under s. 20 in possession of the property.

Very wide powers of sale, mortgage, leasing improvements and investing capital money were conferred on tenants for life by the S. L. Acts, 1882 to 1890, subject to safeguards provided by the Acts for the protection of the estate and the other beneficiaries under the settlement, and these powers have been reproduced and extended by the Act of 1925 (see Parts II. to V. of that Act). Improvements are classed under three heads (see the Third Schedule of the Act of 1925), the cost of which the tenant for life is (a) not required, or (b) may be required by the trustees of the Court, or (c) is unconditionally, required to replace by instalments of income into capital money.

By s. 18 (b) or (c), capital money must be paid to not less than two trustees of the settlement, or a trust corporation if trustee.

The powers given by the Act are not assignable, and any contract not to exercise them is void (s. 104 of the S. L. Act, 1925); and any prohibition against any exercise of the powers is forbidden (s. 51; s. 106 of the S. L. Act, 1925); the tenant for life is however to be regarded as a trustee in exercising the powers of the Act (s. 107 of the S. L. Act, 1925; see Re Hunt, 1905, 2 Ch. 418; 1906, 2 Ch. 11). The case of property settled not by a strict settlement, i.e. as land, but through the medium of a trust for sale, was provided for by s. 63 of 1882, which gave the statutory powers to the person entitled to receive the income of the sale moneys. This was soon found to create a difficulty, the question arising whether the trustee for sale or the tenant for life was the proper person to sell; but the Act of 1884 restored the rights of the trustees under the trust for sale, unless and until an order has been made by the Court authorizing the tenant for life to sell: see Settled Land Act, 1884, ss. 6, 7; Re Harding's Estate, 1891, 1 Ch. 60. But now by the Law of Property (Amendment) Act, 1926, settlements by way of trust for sale have been expressly excluded from settlements which are regulated by the Settled Land Act, 1925, and trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, 1925, have no general power of sale against the tenant for life. On the other hand, trustees for sale under trusts for sale have all the powers of a tenant for life (see Law of Property Act, ss. 28 et seq.).

The principal mansion house on any settled land, and the park and grounds occupied therewith, cannot be sold without the consent either of the trustees of the settlement or an order of the Court (see Settled Land Act, 1890, s. 10; Gilbey v. Rush, 1906, 1 Ch. 11); unless a settlement made before 1926 provides to the contrary, or a post-1925 settlement imposes the condition that it is not to be sold without such consent or order (s. 65, S. L. Act, 1925); and heirlooms cannot be sold without an order of the Court (Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 37), and see now S. L. Act, 1925, s. 67.

Settlement, the act of giving possession by legal sanction; a jointure granted to a wife; a disposition of either real or personal property or both for the benefit of one person for his life, and after his death for the benefit of another person absolutely, or with a similar ultimate devolution for the use of several persons in succession after the person first named. See last title, and SETTLEMENT ESTATE DUTY.

Settlement (in the Poor Law), the fixture of a person on becoming a poor person in a particular parish, to which is attached a right, first regulated by the Poor Relief Act, 1662 (14 Car. 2, c. 12), to be maintained by that parish and a liability to be removed thereto. In the early part of the nineteenth century, the law of settlement, in consequence of the increased facilities for locomotion, led to very frequent litigation between parishes, which has gradually diminished by the introduction of the 'status of irremovability,' upon acquiring which a poor person is no longer liable to be removed. Now a person shall be deemed to be settled in the county or county borough in which he was born until shown to have derived or acquired a settlement elsewhere. A person may derive a settlement from a parent or husband, acquire a settlement, by (1) residence, (2) apprenticeship, (3) estate, (4) renting a tenement, (4) paying rates or taxes, or be presumed to be settled by reason of an estoppel (see Poor Law Act, 1930 (20 Geo. 5, c. 17), Part III.). See DERIVATIVE SETTLEMENT; POOR LAWS; and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Poor (Settlement and Removal).'

Settlement, Act of, the title of 12 & 13 Wm. 3, c. 2, by which the Crown is limited to the heirs of the body of the Princess Sophia, Electress of Hanover (daughter of James the First's daughter, the Queen of Bohemia, and mother of George the First), 'being Protestants,' and various provisions made for securing our religion, laws, and liberties. Consult Hall. Const. Hist., ch. xv.

Settlement Estate Duty. The further estate duty (see that title) levied under ss. 5 and 17 of the Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30) (Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Death Duties'), on settled property passing on the death of one person to another not competent to dispose of it. The rate was by the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, s. 54, two per cent., and the further estate duty, or 'settlement estate duty,' was levied on the principal value of the settled property, with two important qualifications, being these:—

(1) If the only life interest in the property after the death of the deceased were that of the wife or husband of the deceased, settlement estate duty was not leviable at all.

(2) During the continuance of the settlement, the settlement estate duty was not payable more than once.

The duty was abolished by the Finance Act, 1914, s. 14, in the case of persons dying after 11th May, 1914.

Settling Day. The day on which transactions for the 'account' are made up on the Stock Exchange. In consols they are monthly; in other investments, twice in the month.

Sever. Defendants are said to 'sever' in their defences when they plead independently. Trustees made defendants to an action are not justified in severing except under very special circumstances.

Several Covenant, a covenant by two or more separately.

Several Fishery is where a person has an exclusive right to fish, either on his own soil or the soil of another. See FISHERY.

Several Inheritance, an inheritance conveyed so as to descend to two persons severally, by moieties, etc.

Several Tail, where land is entailed on two separately.

Several Tenancy [tenura separalis, Lat.], a tenancy which is separate, and not held jointly with another person.

Severalty, Estates In. He who holds lands or tenements in severalty, or is sole tenant thereof, is he that holds them in his own right only, without any other person being joined or connected with him, in point of interest, during his estate therein.—2 Bl. Com. 179.

Severance, separating or severing. See SEVER.

Seward, or Seaward, one who guards the sea-coast; custos maris.

Sewer, a trench or channel through which water or sewage flows.

The Court of Commissioners of Sewers is a temporary tribunal, erected by commission under the Great Seal, which used to be granted pro re nata at the pleasure of the Crown, and later at the discretion of the Lord Chancellor, Lord Treasurer, and Chief Justices, pursuant to the Statute of Sewers (23 Hen. 8, c. 5). Their jurisdiction is to overlook the repairs of the banks and walls of the sea-coast and navigable rivers; or, with consent of a certain proportion of the owners and occupiers, to make new ones, and to cleanse such rivers, and the streams communicating therewith, and is confined to such county or particular district as the commission shall name. They are a court of record, and may proceed by jury, or upon their own view, and may make orders for the removal of annoyances, or the conservation of the sewers within their commission according to the customs of Romney Marsh, or otherwise. They may also assess necessary rates upon the owners of land, and, on refusal of payment, may (see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Sewers') levy by distress of goods and chattels.

By the Land Drainage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 133), the King may, upon the recommendation of the Inclosure Commissioners, direct commissions of sewers into all parts of England, and give them jurisdiction over such areas as may be most expedient for the construction of new, and maintenance and improvement of old, works. The Act includes all commissions of sewers granted by the Crown for the time being in force, whether granted previously to the Act or not, but does not extend to the metropolis. It provides for the constitution of elective drainage districts, and for the appointment of boards therein, with the same powers as commissioners of sewers.

The Land Drainage Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 44), has repealed the Statute of Sewers (23 Hen. 8, c. 5), and a large number of other statutes, including the Land Drainage Acts, 1861, 1914, 1918, 1926 and 1929, and has consolidated the enactments relating to the drainage of land. Provision is made for the creation of drainage districts and respective drainage boards. The districts are to include catchment areas constituted by or under that Act, including drainage districts or areas constituted under the Land Drainage Act, 1861, or any amendment thereof or under any other enactment, and the drainage boards or authorities of such districts or areas are to be treated for the purposes of the Act as the drainage boards of those districts or areas. The First Schedule sets out the catchment areas for which schemes for the transfer of powers and duties to catchment boards (to be constituted under the Act) and reorganization are to be prepared (s. 4). Until determined by the scheme every commission in force is to continue (s. 83 (2)) and commissioners of sewers are to exercise the powers given by the Act as well as all powers previously vested in them. The Act does not apply to the Administrative County of London except the Lee catchment area (s. 78), and by s. 79 the Drainage Board of the Thames catchment area above (Teddington Lock) is to be the conservators of the River Thames. See DRAINAGE.

The Public Health Act, 1936, Part II., imposes the duty on every local authority to provide all public sewers which may be necessary for effectually draining their district for the purposes of the Act and to make such provision by sewage works or otherwise as may be necessary. The Act makes general provisions (inter alia), replacing ss. 13 to 25, part of s. 26, and ss. 27–34 of the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), and, with certain exceptions, vests all existing and future sewers within the district of a local authority in such authority, and places them under its control, giving them also powers and duties for the making, purchasing, and maintaining such sewers, and for compelling the use of them by persons within the district. See Wood Green Urban Council v. Joseph, 1908, A. C. 419, under the Act of 1875.

Any local authority is authorized for the purpose of receiving, storing, disinfecting, distributing, or otherwise disposing of sewage, to construct, purchase, or take on lease works, either within or without their district; and to agree with an adjoining authority for the communication of the sewers of their respective districts.

Sects. 14 to 52 of the Public Health Act, 1936, also deals with sewers, drains, cess-pools and water-closets, replacement of earth closets by water-closets, and kindred matters. See DRAIN; PUBLIC SEWER.

As to Metropolitan Sewers, see Public Health (London) Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 50), Part II., and other Acts; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Metropolis.'

Sexagesima Sunday, the second Sunday before Lent, being about the sixtieth day before Easter.

Sexhinden, or Sexhindmen, the middle thanes valued at 600s. See HINDENI HOMINES.

Sextery Lands, lands given to a church or religious house for maintenance of a sexton or sacristan.

Sexton (probably from sacristan), the keeper of things belonging to divine worship. He is chosen by the incumbent, but sometimes by the parishioners, according to custom. There is, it seems, no presumption in law that the office of sexton in an ancient parish church is a freehold for life (Rex v. Dymock (Vicar and Churchwardens), 1915, 1 K. B. 147). His particular duties are to cleanse the church, to open the pews, to fill up the graves, to provide candles and other necessities, and to prevent disturbance in the church.—59 Geo. 3, c. 134, ss. 6, 10; and 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104, s. 9, and 11 & 12 Geo. 5 (No. 1), s. 6.

Shack, a liberty of winter pasturage in Norfolk.

Shack, Common of, the right of persons occupying lands lying together in the same common field to turn out their cattle after harvest to feed promiscuously in such field. See Sir Miles Corbet's Case, 7 Rep. 5; Williams on Rights of Common, p. 68.

Sham Plea, a vexatious or false defence, resorted to under the old system of pleading for purposes of delay and annoyance.

Shares in Public Undertakings. Where the property is vested by charter or Act of Parliament in a body corporate, the shares of the individual corporators in the concern itself are personal, not real, estate; for such shares are merely the rights which each individual possesses as a partner to a share in the surplus profit derived from the employment of the capital, which is a mixed fund, consisting in part of personal chattels, as well as lands and fixtures. Shares in all companies which are within the Companies Acts (see the Companies Act, 1929, s. 62), or the Companies Clauses Act, 1845, are personal property; and in many cases of companies incorporated by special Act the shares have been expressly declared to be personal property. Before 1926 the question whether shares in other undertakings were real or personal property turned upon the nature of the shares—that is, whether the holder could call for a specific part of the land itself or only a share of the profits. See now UNDIVIDED SHARES.

Shares are limited in number, each share being indivisible and, in a company having a share capital, must have a distinctive number. Such companies and companies limited by guarantee and having a share capital may, if authorized by the articles, alter their memorandum of association and convert their shares into stock representing the same amount of capital, but divisible at the pleasure of the holders, though some companies will not recognize the divisibility of a pound stock into fractions. And see s. 50 (Companies Act, 1929) and also s. 61 of the Companies Clauses Act, 1845.

The expression 'shares' in a will passes stock: Morrice v. Aylmer, (1875) L. R. 7 H. L. 717.

Sharpling Corn, a customary gift of corn which, at every Christmas, the farmers in some parts of England give to their smith for sharpening their plough-irons, harrow-tines, etc.—Blount.

Shaster, the instrument of government or instruction; any book of instructions, particularly containing Divine ordinances.—Indian.

Shaw, a grove or wood, an underwood.

Shawatores, soldiers.

Sheading, a riding, tithing, or division in the Isle of Man, where the whole island is divided into six sheadings, in each of which there is a coroner or chief constable appointed by a delivery of a rod at the Tinewald Court or annual convention.—King's Isle of Man, 7.

Shebeen, any house, shop, room, premises or place in which spirits, wine, beer, etc., are trafficked in by retail without a certificate and excise licence in that behalf: Public Houses Acts Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 35), s. 37. By s. 19 of that Act any person found drinking in a shebeen may be apprehended and fined up to ten shillings.

Sheep, injury to, by dogs, action for, under the Dogs Act, 1906, and the Amendment Act of 1928. See DOG. As to cruelty by allowing them to become infested with maggots, see Potter v. Challans, (1910) 102 L. T. 324.

Sheep of a tenant are exempt from distress for rent conditionally, i.e. if there be other sufficient distress on the demised premises, by the Statute of Marlbridge (51 Hen. 3. s. 4), and this exemption extends to the sheep of an under-tenant (Keen v. Priest, (1859) 28 L. J. Ex. 157).

Sheep-heaves. 'Small plots of pasture often in the middle of a waste . . . the soil of which may or may not be in the lord, but the pasture is certainly a private property, and is leased and sold as such.'—Cooke, Inclos. Acts, 44.

Sheep-scab. The Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries (see AGRICULTURE AND FISHERIES, MINISTRY OF) may, by the Diseases of Animals Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 43), make an order 'for prescribing, regulating, and securing the periodical treatment of all sheep by effective dipping, or by the use of some other remedy for sheep scab.' For descriptions of the disease see extracts from Board of Agriculture 'Sheep-scab Order' in Chitty's Statutes, and Maclean v. Laidlaw, 1909, 5 C. (J.) 68.

Sheep-silver, a service turned into money, which was paid in respect that anciently the tenants used to wash the lord's sheep.

Sheep-skin, a deed; from the parchment it was written on.

Sheep-stealing, or killing sheep, with intent to steal, is a felony.—Larceny Act, 1916, ss. 3 and 4.

Sheffield University Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 4), extending the privileges of graduates of the University of Sheffield.

Shelley's Case, Rule in. Intimately connected with the quantity of estate which a tenant may hold in realty, is the antique feudal doctrine generally known as the rule in Shelley's Case, which is reported by Lord Coke in 1 Rep. 93 b (23 Eliz. in C. B.), and elaborately examined by Lord Macnaghten in Van Grutten v. Foxwell, 1897, A. C. 658.

The rule has been abolished by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 131, in the construction of all instruments coming into operation after 1925; but the rule governs the construction of all instruments which have come into operation before the 1st January, 1926.

The rule may be described thus: Where a life freehold, either legal or equitable in realty (whether of freehold or copyhold tenure), is limited by any assurance to a person, and by the same assurance the inheritance of the same quality, i.e., either legal or equitable, is limited by way of remainder (with or without the interposition of any other estate) to his heirs or the heirs of his body, such remainder is immediately executed in possession in the person so taking the life freehold, the word 'heirs' being treated as word of limitation and not of purchase, so that the life-tenant takes the inheritance, which is neither contingent nor in abeyance; that is to say, where the inheritance is to his heirs or right heirs he takes the fee-simple; and where it is to the heirs of his body an estate-tail general.—1 Steph. Com.

In Coke's Reports in verse the rule has been rhymed thus:—

Where ancestors a freehold take,
The words 'his heirs,' a limitation make;

which may serve to refresh the memory.

As examples of the application of the rule, take the following:—Land is limited to A. for life, remainder to his right heirs; the rule does not treat this remainder as contingent, but confers it upon A. at once, whereupon his life estate merges in the remainder, and he takes the entire interest, i.e., the fee-simple. Again: Land is limited to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, remainder in the heirs male of A.'s body, the second remainder vests in A. as a remainder in tail male general, and is not in contingency or abeyance, nevertheless waiting for, and continuing expectant on, the determination of B.'s life-estate, which is expectant on A.'s death; but after A.'s death, and the determination of the mesne remainder to B., A.'s heir in tail male general shall enjoy the land as heir, and not as purchaser.

The rule is of positive institution at variance with rules of construction; for while the latter seek for the intention of parties, and strive for its accomplishment, the former combats the intention—a conflict which frequently raises immense difficulties as to whether the rule or intention should prevail. In the operation of the rule on the limitations of the two above-stated examples, it certainly contradicts the meaning of the assurance, and the intent of the parties. Two estates are created, a particular estate in the ancestor, and a remainder in his heirs. In the absence of the rule, the heir would have taken an original and independent estate by purchase, not derived from or controllable by his ancestor; but the operation of the rule places the whole power over the inheritance in the ancestor, who can partially or totally defeat the expectation of his relation.

Sect. 131 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, enacts:—

Where by any instrument coming into operation after the commencement of this Act an interest in any property is expressed to be given to the heir or heirs or issue or any particular heir or any class of heirs or issue of any person in words which, but for the section would under the rule of law known as Shelley's case, have operated to give to that person an interest in fee-simple or an entailed interest, such words shall operate in equity as words of purchase and not of limitation, and shall be construed and have effect accordingly, and in the case of an interest in any property expressed to be given to an heir or heirs or any particular heir or class of heirs, the same person or persons shall take as would in the case of freehold land have answered that description under the general law in force before the commencement of the Act.

Shepway. Court of, a court held before the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports. A writ of error lay from the Mayor and jurats of each port to the Lord Warden in this court, and thence to the King's Bench. The civil jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports is abolished by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 48.

Shereffe, the body of the lordship of Cardiff, in South Wales, excluding the members of it.—Powel's Hist. Wal. 123.

Sheriff, Shire-reeve, or Shliriff [fr. scire, Sax., fr. soyran, to divide, and gerefa, a guardian (vicecomes)], the chief officer of the Crown in every county.

The judges, together with the other great officers and privy councillors, meet in the Exchequer on the morrow (November 12th) of St. Martin, yearly; and then and there the judges propose three persons from each county, to be reported, if approved of, to the King, who afterwards appoints one of them to be sheriff, and such appointment generally takes place about the end of the following Hilary Term. If a sheriff die in office, the appointment of another is the mere act of the Crown.

The Sheriffs Act, 1887, repeals and, so far as they were not obsolete, re-enacts the very numerous enactments as to sheriffs from 3

Edw. 1, c. 9, to s. 16 of the Judicature Act, 1881, inclusive. By s. 3 of this Act a sheriff is annually appointed, having (s. 4) sufficient land within the county to answer the King and his people; by s. 23 every sheriff must, within one month after his appointment is gazetted, nominate some fit person to be his under-sheriff; and by s. 24 every sheriff is to appoint a sufficient deputy, having an office within a mile of the Inner Temple Hall, for the receipt of writs, granting warrants thereon, making returns thereto, and accepting all rules and orders made as to the execution of any process or writ addressed to the sheriff. The two sheriffs of London are elected by the Corporation of the City. As to the protection of the sheriff selling goods under an execution without notice of claims by third parties, see Bankruptcy and Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1913, s. 15. Consult Mather's Sheriff Law.

Sheriff (in Scotland), the chief judge of a county, also called sheriff-substitute, the office of sheriff principal being an intermediate point of appeal between the sheriff-substitute and the Court of Session. His civil jurisdiction extends to all personal actions on contract, bond, or obligation, to the greatest extent; also, by 40 & 41 Vict. c. 50, s. 8, to actions relating to a heritable right where the value of the subject-matter does not exceed 50*l.* by the year or 1,000*l.* value, and to all possessory actions, as removings, spuilzies, etc., to all briefs issuing from Chancery in Scotland, as of inquest, terce, division, tutory, etc., and generally to all civil matters not specially committed to other courts. He has also a summary jurisdiction in regard to small debts, as well as a criminal jurisdiction.

Sheriffalty, Sheriffdom, Sheriffship, Sheriff-wick, or Shrievalty [vicecomitatus, Lat.], the office or jurisdiction of a sheriff.

Sheriff Clerk, the clerk of the Sheriff Court in Scotland.

Sheriff-geld, a rent formerly paid by a sheriff, and it is prayed that the sheriff in his account may be discharged thereof.—Rot. Parl. 50 Edw. 3.

Sheriff's Court in London. See CITY OF LONDON.

Sheriff's Officers, bailiffs, who are either bailiffs of hundreds or bound-bailiffs.

Sheriff's Tourn or Rotation, a court of record held twice every year, within a month after Easter and Michaelmas, before the sheriff, in different parts of the county, being indeed only the turn of the sheriff to keep a court-leet in each respective hundred;

this, therefore, was the great court-leet of the county, as the county court was the court-baron; but the 'tourn,' which had been long obsolete, was expressly abolished by s. 18, sub-s. 4, of the Sheriffs Act, 1887.

Sheriff-substitute (in Scotland), the resident judge ordinary of the county, discharging the duties of the sheriff principal, by whom his judgment is in most cases subject to review.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Sheriff-tooth, a tenure by the service of providing entertainment for the sheriff at his county courts; a common tax, formerly levied for the sheriff's diet.

Sherrerie, a word used by the authorities of the Roman Church to specify contemptuously the technical parts of the law, as administered by non-clerical lawyers. — Racon.

Shew Cause, to appear (in obedience to a rule of Court calling upon the party to appear and shew cause) and argue that the rule should not be made absolute. Rules to shew cause are now, in many cases, abolished by the Supreme Court of Judicature Act. See RULES.

Shewing [monstratio, Lat.], being quit of attachment in a court, in plaints shewed and not avowed. Obsolete.

Shifting Use, a secondary or executory use, which, when executed, operates in derogation of a preceding estate: as land conveyed to the use of A. and his heirs, with proviso that when B. pays a certain sum of money, the estate shall go to the use of C. and his heirs. The legal estates thereby created have been converted as from the 1st January, 1925, into equitable interests (see Law of Property Act, 1925, ss. 1 and 39 and the 1st Sched., Part I.). The instrument declaring the use if it was still in contingent operation on the 31st December, 1925, is a settlement within the meaning and for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 1 (ii). (b). See also SPRINGING USE.

Shilling [fr. solidus, Lat.; scilling, Sax.] among the English Saxons passed for 5*d.*; afterwards it represented 16*d.*, and often 20*d.* In the reign of the Conqueror it was of the same denominative value as at this day.—Domesday.

Shilwit. See CHILDWITE.

Ship, in the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), by s. 742, 'includes every description of vessel used in navigation not propelled by oars.' (This definition has been adopted by the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 34), s. 48 (1).)

'Foreign-going ship,' by the same section, includes every ship employed in trading, or going between some place or places in the United Kingdom, and some place or places situate beyond the following limits: that is to say, the coasts of the United Kingdom, the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man, and the continent of Europe, between the river Elbe and Brest inclusive'; and

'Home-trade ship' includes 'every ship employed in trading or going' within the above limits; and

'Home-trade passenger ship' means every home-trade ship employed in carrying passengers.' A ship cannot be registered as a British ship unless owned by British subjects or a British corporation (s. 1). The property in a ship is divided into sixty-four shares; not more than sixty-four persons may own a ship as part owners, and not more than five may be joint owners of a ship or shares therein, but a corporation may be registered as owner (s. 5). A part owner can sell or mortgage his share or shares provided he complies with the provisions of the Act. Joint owners cannot dispose in severalty of any interest in a ship, or in any share therein in respect of which they are registered (ib.). Other statutory definitions of a ship are as follows: (1) Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, 1924 (14 & 15 Geo. 5, c. 22), Sched., Art. 1, 'any vessel used for the carriage of goods by sea.' (2) Merchant Shipping (International Labour Conventions) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 42), s. 5, 'any sea-going ship or boat of any description which is registered in the United Kingdom as a British ship and includes any British fishing boat entered in the fishing-boat register.' (3) Petroleum (Consolidation) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 32), s. 24, 'every description of vessel used in navigation, whether propelled by oars or otherwise.' See also the Merchant Shipping Acts, 1928 and 1932, and the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1925, s. 22.

Any person born on board a British ship, whether in foreign territorial waters or not, is a natural-born British subject (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 17, s. 1). The criminal jurisdiction of British courts extends to British ships on the high seas, and in foreign rivers below the bridges where the tide ebbs and flows (R. v. Anderson, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 161).

The liability of shipowners (who are liable at common law, if carriers, as insurers of goods) is limited by s. 503 of the Merchant Shipping Act, where there has been no actual loss or privy, to amounts varying with the tonnage of the ship. Sect. 502 protects the owner of a British ship against liability in respect of goods lost or damaged by fire on board the ship, and in respect of certain valuables, the true nature and value of which have not been declared on shipment, if lost or damaged by reason of any robbery, embezzlement, etc. Although the Carriers Act, 1830, extends to carriage by land only, where there is a contract for the carriage of goods partly by land and partly by sea, the carrier has the benefit of the Act as to the carriage by land (Le Conteur v. L. & S. W. Ry., (1865) L. R. 1 Q. B. 54). See also the Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, 1924. The Shipowners' Negligence (Remedies) Act, 1906, enables a person injured by, or on, or in, or about a ship in a port or harbour of England or Ireland, or within three miles of the coast thereof, to apply to a judge to order the detention of the ship, if owned by foreigners none of whom reside in the United Kingdom, until the owners have made satisfaction or given security to abide the result of an action. The order, it seems, will be made on the applicant showing that the owners are 'probably liable to pay damages' in respect of personal or fatal injuries caused in consequence of the negligence, etc., mentioned in the Act. See NAVIGATION ACTS; MERCHANT SHIPPING; LIMITED LIABILITY; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Shipping'; and consult Temperley or MacLachlan on M.S. Acts; Maude and Pollock on Shipping; Carver on Carriage by Sea.

Ship-money, an imposition formerly levied on port-towns and other places for fitting out ships for the defence of the realm. It had become obsolete, but was revived by Charles I., who attempted to levy it in the county of Bucks. John Hampden, a gentleman of the county, was accordingly assessed at 20s., which he declined to pay, and proceedings were taken against him in the Exchequer. Judgment was given for the Crown, 'which gave such offence to the nation and occasioned great heart-burnings' in Parliament. Resolutions were at once passed condemning the judgment, and it was reversed and the whole abuse abolished by 16 Car. 1, c. 14. See The Case of Ship Money, (1637) 3 St. Tr. 825; Broom's Const. Law, p. 306.

Shipper, the owner of goods who entrusts them on board a vessel for delivery abroad, by charter-party or otherwise.

Ship's Agent. The Naval Agency and Distribution Act, 1864, provides for the appointment of an agent by the commanding officer of each of His Majesty's ships to act for the ship with respect to salvage, bounty, prize, etc. (ss. 4-12). The ship's agent receives  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. of any such money distributed among the officers and crew. He may not be a solicitor, proctor, attorney, or employed by the Crown, and is subject to the jurisdiction and authority of the High Court of Admiralty. See also Naval Prize Act, 1918 (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 30).

Ship's husband, a peculiar agent appointed by the owner of a ship to look after the repairs, equipment, management, and other concerns of the ship. His duties are: (1) To see to the proper outfit of the vessel, the repairs, tackle and furniture necessary for a seaworthy ship. (2) To have a proper master, mate, and crew for the ship, so that in this respect it shall be seaworthy. (3) To see to the due furnishing of provisions and stores. (4) To see to the regularity of clearance from the Custom-house of the registry. (5) To settle contracts, and provide for payment of the furnishings requisite. (6) To enter into charter-parties, or engage the vessel for general freight, under usual conditions; and to settle for freights and adjust averages with the merchant. (7) To preserve the proper certificates, surveys, and documents, in case of disputes with insurers or freighters, and to keep regular books of the ship.—Story's Agency, 31. See MacLachlan on Shipping. He must be registered under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 59 (2).

Ship's Papers, documents required for the manifestation of the property of the ship and cargo, etc. See a list of them in Form No. 17, Appx. K, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883.

They are of two sorts: (1) those required by the law of a particular country, as the certificate of registry, licence, charter-party, bills of lading and of health, required by the law of England to be on board all British ships; (2) those required by the law of nations to be on board neutral ships, to vindicate their title to that character; they are the passport, sea-brief, or sea-letter, proofs of property, the muster-roll, or role d'équipage; the charter-party, the bills of lading and invoices, the log-book or ship's journal, and the bill of health.—1 Marshall on Insur., c. 9, s. 6.

Shire [fr. scyr, Sax., to divide], a part or portion of the kingdom; called also a county [comitatus, Lat.]. King Alfred first divided this country into satrapiae, now called shires; shires into centuriae, now called hundreds; and these again into decennae, now called tithings.—Leg. Alfred. See Brompton, 956.

Shire-clerk, he that keeps the county court.

Shire-man, or Seyre-man, anciently judge of the county, by whom trials for land, etc., were determined before the Conquest.

Shire-mote, an assembly of the county or the shire at the assizes, etc.

Shire-reeve, a sheriff, which see.

Shochet, a Jewish butcher; in effect a religious order invested by the Chief Rabbi with authority to kill and prepare meat in accordance with the Jewish ceremonial.

Shoolaa, pre-emption, or a power of possessing property which has been sold, by paying a sum equal to that paid by the purchaser.—Macn. Mahometan Law.

Shooting or wounding, or causing any grievous bodily harm, with intention to maim, disfigure, or disable, or to do some other grievous bodily harm, or with intent to resist or prevent the lawful apprehension or detaining of any person, is a felony; see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 18.

Shop, a place where things are kept for sale, usually in small quantities, to the actual consumers. By Shops Act, 1912, s. 19, 'shop' includes any premises where any 'retail trade or business' is carried on; 'retail trade or business' includes the business of a barber or hairdresser, but not the sale of programmes, etc., at places of amusement.

The Shops Act, 1934, deals with the employment of persons under eighteen years, repealing s. 2 of the Shops Act, 1912; but the other provisions are unaffected. The 1934 Act, s. 1, provides that no young person (under eighteen) shall be employed for more than the normal maximum working hours, that is, forty-eight hours in any week; it makes restrictions on night employment, has special provisions as to the catering trade, the sale of accessories for aircraft, motor vehicles and cycles; provides for weekly half-holidays and intervals for meals, and provides for sanitary and other arrangements; this latter applies to assistants of all ages.

The 1912 Act provides (s. 3) that in all rooms of a shop where female assistants are employed the employer shall provide seats behind the counter, or in such other position as may be suitable for the purpose, and also that such seats shall be in the proportion of not less than one seat to every three female assistants employed in each room, and as amended by the 1934 Act, it shall be the duty of the occupier of the shop to permit the female assistants to make use of such seats whenever such use does not interfere with their work.

Every shop must, save as otherwise provided by the Act, be closed not later than 1 P.M. on one week-day in every week, which day may be fixed by the local authority (s. 4); and a 'closing hour,' not earlier than 7 P.M., may be fixed by the local authority with the sanction of a Secretary of State (s. 5). The Act contains special provisions with reference to trading elsewhere than in shops (s. 9), to shops where more than one business is carried on (s. 10), holiday resorts (s. 11), and shops where Post Office business is carried on (s. 12). The enforcement of the Act is entrusted to the local authority as defined by s. 13, and the Act applies, with necessary modifications, to Scotland (s. 20) and Ireland (s. 21). It does not apply to fairs, bazaars, or sales of work for charitable or other purposes from which no private profit is derived (s. 19), and certain trades and businesses are exempted from the provisions as to a weekly half holiday, and from the provisions of closing orders; see Second and Third Schedules. An incorporated company is bound by the Act (Evans v. L. C. C., 1914, 3 K. B. 315). The Act was amended, in its application to premises for the sale of refreshments, by the Shops Act, 1913. The Shops (Early Closing) Act, 1920, provided for a temporary continuance of orders made under the expired Defence of the Realm (Consolidation) Act, 1914, and set out the orders in a schedule to the Act. The Shops (Hours of Closing) Act, 1928, amends the law relating to the closing of shops. Shops are to be closed not later than 8 P.M. (this is called the general closing hour), but on one day in the week they may be closed not later than 9 P.M., called the late day, which day shall be Saturday, unless otherwise fixed by the local authority. There are provisions dealing with the sale of confectionery and tobacco, and exemptions for exhibitions, etc. Customers in the shop before closing time may be served, or when the article is required in a case of illness. The sale of meals and food is excepted in certain circumstances, as also that of intoxicating liquors, medicine, etc., newspapers, etc., motor and cycle supplies, etc.

The Hairdressers and Bakers Shops (Sunday Closing) Act, 1930, compels such establishments to close on Sunday, with exemptions as respects Jewish hairdressers, provided that they close on Saturday.

The Shops (Sunday Trading Restriction) Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 53), provides for the closing of shops on Sundays, with certain exceptions, such as for sale of intoxicating liquors, refreshments, sweets, ice-cream, fruit, flowers, milk and cream, medicines, tobacco, newspapers, books, etc. (see the 1st Schedule), but the exceptions do not apply to sale of tinned goods of the above goods except tinned clotted cream. There are special provisions for holiday resorts, and for Jewish trades so long as they close on Saturday. Goods cannot be dispatched to a customer at any time when a customer could not lawfully be served in the shop.

In contravention of the provisions the occupier of the shop is liable up to 5*l.* for the first offence, and up to 20*l.* for a second or subsequent offence.

The Shops Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 28), provides for the application of the Shops Acts, 1912-34, to the premises of lending libraries when carried on for profit.

Shop-Lifting Act (10 Wm. 3, c. 12), by which stealing goods to the value of five shillings was a capital felony, repealed in 1826 by 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27.

Short Cause, an action in the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice, where there is only a simple point for discussion and which counsel has certified as fit to be heard 'short' (Felstead v. Gray, (1874) L. R. 18 Eq. 92). As to the entry in the Short Cause list of an action in the King's Bench Division, see R. S. C. Ord. XIV., r. 8.

Short Entry. It takes place when a bill or note, not due, has been sent to a bank for collection, and an entry of it is made in the customer's bank-book, stating the amount in an inner column, and carrying it into the accounts between the parties when it has been paid. See ENTERING SHORT.

Short-lord. The ancient custom of the city of Exeter is, when the lord of the fee cannot be answered rent due to him out of his tenement, and no distress can be levied for the same, he is to come to the tenement, and there take a stone, or some other dead thing of the said tenement, and bring it before the mayor and bailiffs; and this he must do seven quarter-days successively; and if, on the seventh quarter-day, the lord is not satisfied his rent and arrears, then the tenement shall be adjudged to the lord to hold the same a year and a day; and forthwith proclamation is to be made in the Court, that if any man claim any title to the tenement, he must appear within the year and a day next following, and satisfy the lord of the said rent and arrears. But if no appearance be made, and the rent not paid, the lord comes again to the Court and prays that according to the custom the tenement be adjudged to him in his demesne as of fee, which is done, and the lord from thenceforth has it to him and his heirs. This custom is called short-ford; being as much as, in French, to foreclose.—Izack's Antiq. Exet. 48. See Cowel.

A like custom in London by the ancient statute of Gavelet, attributed to 10 Edw. 2, is called forschof or forschoke.

Shorthand Notes. The only statutory provision for the taking of shorthand notes is in s. 16 of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (see that title).

Such notes of the evidence are usually made in important cases; but the costs of taking them will usually not be allowed, unless on an appeal they are used by the Court (see Castner, etc., Co. v. Commercial Corporation, 1899, 1 Ch. 803), and they can be so used on an appeal from a county court, even though not signed by the judge (Barber v. Burt, 1894, 2 Q. B. 437). The costs of shorthand notes of the judgment of a court below are on appeal allowed without special order (Re De Falbe, 1901, 1 Ch. p. 542).

Short Notice of Trial: four days, unless otherwise ordered. See R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXVI., r. 14.

Short Titles, of Acts of Parliament. First introduced for convenience of citation in 1845 by the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and since then gradually more and more used in the case of particular Acts. General Short Titles Acts were also passed in 1892 and 1896, that of 1896 giving short titles to 2,076 Acts, of which 840 had had short titles given to them by the Act of 1892, which the Act of 1896 repeals. See ACT OR PARLIAMENT.

Shrievalty, the office of sheriff; the period of that office.

Shrieve, a corruption of sheriff.

Shroff, Shrof, a banker or money-changer.—Indian.

Shroud-stealing. If any one, in taking up a dead body, steal the shroud or other apparel, it will be felony; for the property therein remains with the executor, or whoever was at the charge of the funeral.—3 Inst. 110; 1 Hale, P. C. 535.

Si actio, the conclusion of a plea to an action when the defendant demands judgment, if the plaintiff ought to have his action, etc. Obsolete.

Sib, related by blood.

Sica, Sieha, a ditch.—Dugd. Mon. ii. 130.

Sicca Rupee, originally a newly coined rupee, accepted at a higher value than those worn by use; latterly, a rupee coined under the Government of Bengal from 1793, and legally current till 1836, of a greater weight than the (India) Company's rupee.—Oxf. Dict.

Sich, a little current of water, which is dry in summer; a water furrow or gutter.

Siclus, a sort of money current among the ancient English, of the value of 2d.

Sickness Benefit. See NATIONAL INSURANCE.

Sicut alias, as at another time, or heretofore. This was a second writ sent out when the first was not executed.

Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas. 9 Rep. 59.—(Use your own rights so that you do not hurt those of another.) See Broom's Legal Maxims, citing especially Bonomi v. Backhouse, (1861) 9 H. L. C. 511; and also Fletcher v. Rylands, (1866) L. R. 1 Ex. 265; 1 Smith's Leading Cases, and the notes thereto.

Side-bar Rules. See RULES.

Sidelings (sidlings), meers or balks betwixt or on the sides of arable ridges or lands.—Cowel.

Side-men, or Sides-men (Synods-men), two or three or more discreet persons acting as assistants to the churchwardens in collecting alms and maintaining order. They are elected by the Parochial Church meeting and the incumbent jointly under the Parochial Church Councils (Powers) Measure, 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, No. 1), s. 14. See Prideaux's Churchwarden's Guide, 16th ed., by Mackarness.

Siens, scions or descendants.

Si fecerit te securum, a species of original writ, so called from the words of the writ, which directed the sheriff to cause the defendant to appear in court, without any option given him, provided the plaintiff 'gave the sheriff security' effectually to prosecute his claim.

Sight, Bills payable at, are by s. 10 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, replacing the repealed 34 & 35 Vict. c. 74—prior to which three days' grace was allowed—made equivalent to bills payable on demand.

Sigil [fr. sigillum, Lat.], seal, signature.

Sigla [fr. segel, Sax.], a sail.—Leg. Ethel. c. 24.

Signature, a sign or mark impressed upon anything; a stamp, a mark; the name of a person written by himself either in full or by initials as regards his Christian name or names, and in full as regards his surname, or by initials only (In the goods of Blewitt, (1880) 5 P. D. 116), or by mark only, though he can write (Baker v. Denig, (1838) 8 Ad. & E. 94).

Signature is required to authenticate a will (see WILL), a deed after 1925 (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 73), a guarantee and other documents mentioned in the Statute of Frauds (see FRAUDS, STATUTE OF), and a risk note within the meaning of the seventh section of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (see RISK NOTE). Pleadings must be signed by counsel if settled by him, and if not, by the solicitor or the party; R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XIX., r. 4. No fee to counsel is allowed on taxation unless vouched by his signature.—Ibid., Ord. LXV., r. 27, reg. 52.

Signet, a seal commonly used for the sign-manual of the sovereign. See PRIVY SEAL.

In Scotland, before the Administration of Justice (Scotland) Act, 1933, was passed, the 'will,' an essential part of a summons before the Court of Session, was required to be signed by a Writer to the Signet (q.v.). The summons must be sealed at the Signet Office before service, or founding action.

Significavit, a writ issuing out of the Chancery upon certificate given by the ordinary of a man's standing excommunicate by the space of forty days, for the keeping him in prison till he submit himself to the authority of the Church. See 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, and Ex parte Dale, (1881) 6 Q. B. D. at p. 381, in which case Lord Penzance in 1880 issued a significavit against the Rev. Mr. Dale for disobedience to his inhibition.

Also, another writ, addressed to the judges, commanding them to stay any suit depending between such and such parties by reason of an excommunication alleged against the plaintiff, etc.—Reg. Brev. 7.

Sign-manual. 1. The royal signature. Sometimes required by statute as evidence of the authority of the sovereign, e.g., by the Jud. Act, 1925, s. 4 (2), replacing Jud. Act, 1873, s. 31, in reference to the transfer of a judge of the High Court from one division thereof to another. Towards the end of the reign of King George the Fourth, the royal signature was, in consequence of the king's illness, by 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 23, authorized to be affixed for him by commission.

2. The signature of any one's name in his own handwriting.

Signs. See SKY SIGN.

Signum, a cross prefixed as a sign of assent and approbation to a charter or deed, used by the Saxons.

Silentiarius, one of the Privy Council: also an usher, who sees good rule and silence kept in court.

Silva cædua, wood under twenty years' growth.

Similiter [Lat.] (in like manner). Formerly when an issue of fact was tendered, the words were as follows: 'and of this the defendant puts himself upon the country'; or thus, 'and this the plaintiff prays may be inquired of by the country'; the issue and form of trial were then both accepted on the other side (unless there appeared grounds for demurrer), by the words following: 'and the plaintiff (or the defendant, as the case may be) doth the like,' which latter words were called the Similiter. After the passing of the C. L. P. Act, 1852, the joinder of issue under s. 79 of that Act superseded the Similiter. See now ISSUE.

The want of a similiter by the prosecutor in criminal cases is cured by the Criminal Law Act, 1826 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 64), s. 20.

Simony, the corrupt presentation of, or the corrupt agreement to present any one to an ecclesiastical benefice for reward. It is derived from Simon Magus, who offered money to the Apostles for the power to work miracles (Acts viii. 18-24). It is an offence by statute 31 Eliz. c. 6, which by s. 5, 'for the avoiding of simony,' directs that the corrupt presentation shall be void, and the presentation shall go to the Crown, and the Clerical Subscription Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 122), required a declaration against simony to be subscribed by every person about to be instituted or collated to any benefice or to be licensed to any perpetual curacy, lectureship, or preachership. This declaration, which was only to the effect that the declarant had not been party to any contract to the best of his knowledge simoniacal, is now superseded by a far more effective and specific declaration scheduled to the Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), which declaration, however, contains a saving for Resignation Bonds (see RESIGNATION).

Simple Contract, a contract made either verbally or in writing but not under seal. See Addison, Chitty, Leake, or Pollock on Contracts.

Before 1870 simple contract debts were, in the administration of the estate of a deceased person, postponed to debts secured by instrument under seal, called 'specialty debts,' but all such priority was abolished by the Administration of Estates Act, 1869, s. 1, replaced by A. E. Act, 1925, s. 32. See also LIMITATIONS.

Simple Deposit, a deposit made, according to the Civil Law, by one or more persons having a common interest.

Simple Larceny, stealing for which no special punishment is provided under the Larceny Act, 1916, or any other Act.—Larceny Act, 1916, s. 2. See LARCENY.

Simple Trust: where property is vested in one person upon trust for another, and the nature of the trust, not being qualified by the settlor, is left to the construction of law. In this case the cestui que trust has jus habendi, or the right to be put into actual possession of the property, and jus disponendi, or the right to call upon the trustee to execute conveyances of the legal estate as the cestui que trust directs. See BARE TRUSTEE and Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 3 (3), and Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 7 (5), enabling a person entitled to a legal estate to have it conveyed to him, and also L. P. Act, 1925, 1st Sched., Part II., par. (3), as amended by the L. P. (Amendment) Act, 1926, vesting the estate existing on 1st January, 1926, in the beneficial owner by force of the statute.

Simple Warrandice, an obligation to warrant to secure from all subsequent and future deeds of the grantor.—Scots term.

Simplex beneficium, a minor dignity in a cathedral or collegiate church, or any other ecclesiastical benefice, as distinguished from a cure of souls. It may therefore be held with any parochial cure, without coming under the prohibitions against pluralities.

Simplex commendatio non obligat. The mere recommendation of goods by the seller imposes no liability upon him. See REPRESENTATION.

Simplex justiciarius, a style formerly used for any puise judge who was not chief in any court.

Simplex obligatio. See SINGLE BOND.

Simplexiter [Lat.], without involving anything not actually named.

Simulatio latens, a species of feigned disease, in which disease is actually present, but where the symptoms are falsely aggravated, and greater sickness is pretended than really exists.—Beck's Med. Jurisp. 3.

Simul cum [Lat.] (together with).

Sinderesis, a natural power of the soul, set in the highest part thereof, moving and stirring it to good, and abhorring evil. And therefore sinderesis never sinneth nor erreth. And this sinderesis our Lord put in man, to the intent that the order of things should be observed. And therefore sinderesis is called by some men the law of reason, for it ministereth the principles of the law of reason, the which be in every man by nature, in that he is a reasonable creature.—Doctor and Student, 39.

Sine assensu capitali, an abolished writ where a bishop, dean, prebendary, or master of a hospital aliened the lands holden in right of his bishopric, deanery, house, etc., without the assent of the chapter or fraternity, in which case his successor should have this writ.—Fitz. N. B. 195.

Sinecure [fr. sine, Lat., without, and cura, care], an office which has revenue without any employment.

Sinecure Rector, a rector without cure of souls. Sinecure rectories are now abolished by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 113, s. 48, and 4 & 5 Vict. c. 39, s. 17. See 2 Steph. Com.

Sine die [Lat.] (without day, or indefinitely). Without a day being fixed. The consideration of a matter is said to be adjourned sine die when it is adjourned without a day being fixed for its resumption.

Sine prole, without issue.—See S. P.

Single Bond [simplex obligatio, Lat.], a bond merely for the payment of money, or for the performance of some particular act, without any condition in or annexed to it. See Re Dixon, 1900, 2 Ch. 561.

Single Combat, Trial by. See BATTEL.

Single Entry, an entry made to charge or to credit an individual or thing, as distinguished from double entry, which is an entry of both the debit and credit accounts of a transaction. See DOUBLE ENTRY.

Single Escheat, when all a person's movables fall to the Crown, as a casualty, because of his being declared rebel. See FORFEITURE.

Singular. By the Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), re-enacting the repealed 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 4, it is enacted that words in Acts of Parliament passed after 1850 importing the singular shall include the plural, and the plural the singular, unless the contrary intention appears.

Singular Successor. A purchaser is so termed in Scots Law, in contradistinction to the heir of a landed proprietor, who succeeds to the whole heritage by regular title, of succession or universal representation, whereas the purchaser acquires right solely by the single title acquired by the disposition of the former proprietor.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Sinking Fund. A fund formed for the redemption of a debt by the periodical accumulation of fixed amounts by the borrower.

Si non omnes, Writ of, a writ on association of justices, by which, if all in commission cannot meet at the day assigned, it is allowed that two or more of them may finish the business.—Fitz. N. B. 186; Reg. Brev. 202. And after the writ of association, it is usual to make out a writ of si non omnes, addressed to the first justices, and also to those who are associated with them, which, reciting the purport of the two former commissions, commands the justices that if all of them cannot conveniently be present, such a number of them may proceed, etc.—Fitz. N. B. 111.

Sipessocua, a franchise, liberty, or hundred.

Si quidem in nomine, cognomine, prænomine legatarii testator erraverit, cum de personâ constat, nihilominus valet legatum. Justinian's Institutes, l. 2, t. 20, s. 29.—(Although a testator may have mistaken the nomen, cognomen, or prænomen of a legatee, yet if it be certain who is the person meant, the legacy is valid.)

Si quid universitati debetur singulis non debetur, nec quod debet universitas singuli debent. D. 3, 4, 7.—(If anything be owing to an entire body, it is not owing to the individual members; nor do the individuals owe that which is owing by the entire body.)

Si quis [Lat.] (if any one), in ecclesiastical law, a notification published in the parish church of the parish where a candidate for Holy Orders resides, that 'if any one' (si quis) knows of any just cause for which he ought not to be admitted to Holy Orders, he is to declare the same or signify the same to the Bishop.

Sircar, a Government; a man of business.—Indian.

Si recognoscat, a writ that, according to the old books, lay for a creditor against his debtor, who had acknowledged before the sheriff in the county court that he owed his creditor such a sum received of him.—Old N. B. 68.

Sise, corrupted from assize.

Sisters. Lord Coke says, omnes sorores sunt quasi unus hæres—all sisters are, as it were, one heir. See COPARCENERS.

Sitheundman, the high constable of a hundred.

Sittings. By the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 26, the division of the legal year into terms is abolished, and sittings are substituted for it. See now R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LXIII.

The sittings of the Court of Appeal and High Court of Justice in London and Middlesex are four in every year, viz., the Michaelmas sittings, the Hilary sittings, the Easter sittings, and the Trinity sittings. The Michaelmas sittings commence on the day appointed by Order in Council (Long Vacation Order, 1935, 12th October; Long Vacation Order, 1936, 12th October), and terminate on the 21st of December; the Hilary sittings commence on the 11th of January and terminate on the Wednesday before Easter; the Easter sittings commence on the Tuesday after Easter week and terminate on the Friday before Whit-Sunday; and the Trinity sittings commence on the Tuesday after Whitsun-week and terminate on the 31st of July (R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LXIII).

It is also provided by the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 52 (replacing the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 30), that, subject to rules of court, such number of judges of the High Court as may be requisite having regard to the business to be disposed of shall, so far as reasonably practicable and subject to the vacations, sit continuously at the Royal Courts of Justice for the trial of causes in the King's Bench Division. See further as to the judges who are to preside at different sittings, Judicature Act, 1925, s. 70 (3) (replacing Judicature Act, 1873, s. 37); and see also GUILDHALL SITTINGS; WESTMINSTER; and VACATION.

Sittings at the Royal Courts of Justice include sittings in chambers as well as in court (Petty v. Daniel, (1886) 34 Ch. D. 172).

Sittings in banc, sittings of the judges on the benches of their respective courts at Westminster, at which they decided matters of law and transacted other judicial business, as distinguished from Nisi Prius sittings, at which matters of fact were tried. See DIVISIONAL COURT.

Sittings in Camerâ. See CAMERÂ.

Situs [Lat.], situation, location.

Six Acts (60 Geo. 3 & 1 Geo. 4, cc. 1, 2, 4, 6, 8, 9), passed to put down seditious meetings, etc.; of these, c. 1, the Unlawful Drilling Act, 1819; c. 4, the Pleading in Misdemeanour Act, 1819; and c. 8, the Criminal Libel Act, 1819, are still unrepealed.

Six Articles, Law of, made in 1539 by 31 Hen. 8, c. 14. This famous Act was styled 'An Act for abolishing Diversity of Opinions,' and it enforced conformity to six of the strongest points in the Romish religion (being the real presence, communion in one kind for the laity, celibacy of the clergy, sanctity of vows, private masses, and auricular confession), under the penalty of death in case of offence, amended by 32 Hen. 8, c. 10, which required conviction to be on the oath of twelve men, and repealed by 1 Eliz. c. 1.—4 Reeves, 278.

Six Clerks in Chancery, officers who received and filed all proceedings, signed office copies, attended court to read the pleadings, etc. They were abolished by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103.

Six Day Licence, a liquor licence containing a condition that the premises in respect of which it is granted shall be closed during the whole of Sunday—granted under Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, s. 58.

Sixhindi, servants of the same nature as rodknights (q.v.).—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Skeleton Bill, one drawn, indorsed, or accepted in blank.

Skilled Witnesses. See EXPERTS.

Sky Sign. This expression is defined in s. 91 (3) of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907, as follows:—

'Sky sign' means—

Any word, letter, model, sign, device, or representation in the nature of an advertisement, announcement, or direction supported on or attached to any post, pole, standard, framework, or other support wholly or in part upon, over, or above any house, building or structure which, or any part of which, sky sign shall be visible against the sky from some point in any street or public way, and includes all and every part of any such post, pole, standard, framework, or other support.

The expression 'sky sign' shall also include—

Any balloon, parachute, or other similar device employed wholly or in part for the purposes of any advertisement or announcement on, over, or above any house, building, structure, or erection of any kind, or on or over any street or public way;

But shall not include—

(a) Any flagstaff, pole, vane, or weathercock unless adapted or used wholly or in part for the purpose of any advertisement or announcement;

(b) Any sign or any board, frame, or other contrivance securely fixed to or on the top of the wall or parapet of any building, or on the cornice or blocking course of any wall, or to the ridge of a roof: Provided that such board, frame, or other contrivance be of one continuous face and not open work, and do not extend in height more than three feet above any part of the wall or parapet or ridge to, against, or on which it is fixed or supported;

(c) Any word, letter, model, sign, device, or representation as aforesaid relating exclusively to the business of a railway or canal company, and placed wholly upon or over any railway, canal, railway station, wharf, quay, yard, platform, or station or wharf or quay approach belonging to a railway or canal company, and so placed that it cannot fall into any street or public place.

Skyvinage, or Skevinage, the precincts of Calais.—27 Hen. 4, c. 2.

Slander, the malicious defamation of a person by words; as a libel is by writing, etc. It is actionable in the following cases: (1) where the words impute a criminal offence; (2) where they impute misconduct in a public office; (3) where they are spoken in reference to a person's trade or profession (see Jones v. Jones, 1916, 2 A. C. 481); (4) where they impute a contagious disease likely to cause exclusion from society, e.g., venereal disease; (5) where the speaking of them is productive of special damage.

The slander of a woman by imputation on her chastity was first made actionable without special damage by the Slander of Women Act, 1891; but under this Act no more costs than damages can be recovered unless the judge certifies there was reasonable ground for bringing the action.

Slander of Title, a false and malicious statement, either oral or in writing, tending to cut down the title to some right or property vested in the plaintiff. It is not actionable without proof of special damage. See Pater v. Baker, 3 C. B. 831; Steward v. Young, L. R. 5 C. P. 122.

A limited company are liable for a slander uttered by their servant in the course of his employment, and for the benefit of his employers (Finburgh v. Moss' Empires, Ltd., 1908, S. C. 928).

Consult Odgers on Libel and Slander.

Slaughterhouses are licensed in the Metropolis under Public Health (London) Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 50), s. 144, repealing the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, s. 20, and in large towns by the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, ss. 125–131, incorporated by the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 169; by which Act it includes the buildings and places commonly called slaughterhouses and knacker's yards, and any building or place used for slaughtering cattle, horses or animals of any description for sale. As to the powers of the Ministry of Agriculture to regulate and restrict the slaughter of animals used for food, see the Slaughter of Animals Act, 1914.

Slavery, that civil relation in which one man has absolute power over the liberty of another. It cannot subsist in England. See Sommersett's case, (1771–2) 20 St. Tr. 1; Lofft, 1; Broom's Const. Law, pp. 65 et seq., where it was held that a person forcibly detained as a slave was entitled to be discharged on a habeas corpus.

The system of colonial slavery was abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 73. See 5 Geo. 4, c. 113; 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 91; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 73; 6 & 7 Vict. c. 98; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 26; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 122; 26 & 27 Vict. c. 34; and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 75. The various Acts for carrying into effect the treaties for the more effectual suppression of the slave trade were amended and consolidated by the 36 & 37 Vict. c. 88 (many previous Acts being thereby repealed). See, too, as to East Africa, 36 & 37 Vict. c. 59.

As to Roman slavery, see Sand. Just., 7th ed. 14.

Sledge, a hurdle to draw traitors to execution.—1 Hale, P. C. 82.

Sliding on ice or snow. See SNOW.

Slip Order. The term commonly applied to Ord. XXVIII., r. 11, under which clerical errors arising from any accidental slip or omission may be corrected by the Court.

Silena, a stirrup. There is a tenure of land in Cambridgeshire by holding the sovereign's stirrup.

Slough Silver, a rent paid to the castle of Wigmore, in lieu of certain days' work in harvest, heretofore reserved to the lord from his tenants.—Cowel.

Small Dwellings. The Small Dwellings Acquisition Act, 1899 to 1923, as amended by the Housing Act, 1936, enables county councils, county borough councils, and, under certain restrictions, district councils, to advance money after the 31st October, 1935, to residents in houses, which do not exceed 800*l.* in value, so as to enable them to become the owners; and see HOUSING.

Small Holdings. The Small Holdings and Allotments Act, 1908, by s. 61 gives the following definition:—

The expression 'small holding' means an agricultural holding which exceeds one acre and either does not exceed fifty acres, or, if exceeding fifty acres, is at the date of sale or letting of an annual value for the purposes of income tax not exceeding one hundred pounds (as amended by the Small Holdings and Allotments Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 62), s. 16).

Small Holding Colonies. By the Small Holding Colonies Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 38) and 1918 (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 26), as amended by the Land Settlement (Facilities) Act, 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 59), the Board, now Ministry, of Agriculture and Fisheries may, after consultation with the chairman of the county council, acquire by agreement a limited amount of land up to 45,000 acres in England and Wales for the purpose of providing small holding colonies with powers conferred by the Acts.

See ALLOTMENTS, and Aggs on Agricultural Holdings.

Small Pox. See VACCINATION.

Small Tithes [otherwise called privy], all personal and mixed tithes, and also hops, flax, saffrons, potatoes, and sometimes, by custom, wood.—2 Steph. Com.

Smoke, Consumption of, prescribed in the Metropolis by the Public Health (London) Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 50), ss. 147 et seq.—see LONDON; in Scotland, by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 73; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 17; and 28 & 29 Vict. c. 102; for locomotives on railways by the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 114, as amended by the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 119), s. 19 (see London County Council v. G. E. R., 1906, 2 K. B. 312); and in towns generally by the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 91, as amended by the Public Health (Smoke Abatement) Act, 1926, replaced by the P. H. Act, 1936, ss. 101–106.

Smoke-farthings, pentecostals, which see.

Smoke-silver, a nodus of 6*d.* in lieu of tithe-wood.

Smoking Carriages. By s. 20 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868—

All railway companies, except the Metropolitan Railway Company, shall, . . . in every passenger train where there are more carriages than one of each class, provide smoking compartments for each class of passengers, unless exempted by the Board of Trade.

See Hodges on Railways; Browne and Theobald on Railways.

Smoking, Juvenile. See TOBACCO.

Smuggling, the offence of importing prohibited articles, or of defrauding the revenue by the introduction of articles into consumption without paying the duties chargeable upon them. It may be committed indifferently either upon the excise or customs revenue.

Smuggling is restrained by the statutes relating to the Customs, and in particular by the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876.

Snottering Silver, a small duty which was paid by servile tenants in Wylegh to the abbot of Colchester.

Snow. Nuisances arising from snow may be prevented by bye-laws of local authorities under s. 81 of the Public Health Act, 1936, but, in case of conflict, a regulation under the London Traffic Act, 1924, s. 10, is to prevail over any bye-law. If any obstruction shall arise in any highway from accumulation of snow, the surveyor is required from time to time, and within twenty-four hours after notice thereof from any justice of the peace of the county in which the parish may be situate, to cause the same to be removed, by s. 26 of the Highways Act, 1835: Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Highways.' Snow is included in the 'street refuse' which London sanitary authorities must, as far as reasonably practicable, remove from the street, by s. 86 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 50); Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Public Health (Metropolis)'; but the fine up to 20*l.* was held to be the only liability of the authority if in default (Saunders v. Holborn Board of Works, 1895, 1 Q. B. 64). Sliding on snow in the street to the common danger is an offence under s. 28 of the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, and s. 54 (17) of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 47): Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Police'; but by s. 28 of the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, 'snow thrown down so as not to fall on any passenger' is excepted from the list of things which may not be thrown down from a roof.

Soap. The excise on soap was repealed by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 39.

Soc, Sok, Soka, jurisdiction; a power or privilege to administer justice and execute laws; also a shire, circuit, or territory. See Mertens v. Hill, 1901, 1 Ch. 842. See SOKE.

Soca, a seignior or lordship, enfranchised by the king with liberty of holding a court of his soc-men or socagers, i.e., his tenants.

Socage, or Socage. Common socage is the ordinary tenure (q.v.) in this country; the exceptions were, until abolished by the Law of Property Act, 1922, Borough-English, Gavelkind, etc. (q.v.). Socage is the same as service of the soc; and soc is the same thing as a plough. Co. Litt. 86. In Scotland, a type of agricultural holding of which the services were transferred into Feu or Blench Farm (annual) or Grassum (capital) payments.

Socager, a tenant by socage.

Socer [Lat.], the father of one's wife; a father-in-law.

Socida, a contract or hiring, upon condition that the bailee take upon himself the risk of the loss of the thing hired.—Civ. Law.

Societas leonina, that kind of society or partnership by which the entire profits belong to some of the partners in exclusion of the rest. So called in allusion to the fable of the lion, who, having entered into partnership with other animals for the purpose of hunting, appropriated all the prey to himself. It was void.—Civ. Law. Other societates were negotioris alicujus (partnership); Unius rei vel certarum rerum; universorum bonorum; universorum quæ ex questu veniunt; and vectigalium (collection of taxes). See Hunter, Roman Law and Sand. Just.

Société anonyme, analogous to a limited company (Foreign Jurisprudence), an association where the liability of all the partners is limited. See LIMITED LIABILITY.

Société en commandite. See COMMANDITE.

Society. Associations designated by the name of 'Society' include (1) Building Societies, regulated by the Building Societies Acts, as to which see BUILDING SOCIETIES; (2) Friendly Societies, regulated by the Friendly Societies Act, 1896, as to which see FRIENDLY SOCIETIES; (3) Industrial and Provident Societies, regulated principally by the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1893, as to which see INDUSTRIAL AND PROVIDENT SOCIETIES; (4) Loan Societies, regulated by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 110, as to which see LOAN SOCIETIES; (5) Literary and Scientific Societies, regulated by the Literary and Scientific Institutions Act, 1854, and exempted from rates by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36, as to which see that title; and other benevolent or useful societies, e.g., see Companies Act, 1929, s. 18, and (6) Illegal Societies, prohibited by the Unlawful Societies Act, 1799, and the very similar Seditious Meetings Act, 1817, as to which see SEDITION, and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Societies.'

Socli mei socius, meus socius non est. D. 50, 17, 47.—(The partner of my partner is not my partner.)

Socman, a socager.

Socmanry, a free tenure by socage.

Socna, a privilege, liberty, or franchise.

Sosome, a custom of grinding corn at the lord's mill.

Bond-sosome is where the tenants are bound to it.—Blount.

Sodomy, the crime against nature, punishable until 1891 by a minimum term of ten years' penal servitude; prescribed by s. 61 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, but the effect of the Penal Servitude Act, 1891, s. 1, sub-s. 2, appears to be that imprisonment may be substituted, though this particular crime is not expressly mentioned in that Act.

Sodor and Man, Bishopric of, annexed to the province of York by Henry VIII.—33 Hen. 8, c. 31. See 1 & 2 Vict. c. 30, repealing partially 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 77. The bishop is not a lord spiritual, the lands with which the see was endowed being held, not of the king directly, but of a subject, who nominated the bishop, till 1829. when the lordship of the Isle of Man was purchased by the Crown (Lord Selborne's Defence of the Church of England, 5th ed. p. 45).

Solt droift fait al partie [Nor.-Fr.] (let right be done to the party).

Soke, a manor or lordship.—Spelm. And see per Lord Chelmsford in Earl Beauchamp v. Winn, (1873) L. R. 6 H. L. at p. 243.

Sokemanries, lands and tenements which were not held by knight service, nor by grand serjeanty, nor by petit, but by simple services; being, as it were, lands enfranchised by the king or his predecessors from their ancient demesne. Their tenants were sokemans.

Sokemans, tenants of socage-lands.—3 Bl. Com. 100.

Soke-reeve, the lord's rent-gatherer in the soca.

Solarium, a sollar, upper room or garret.—Jac. Law Dict.

Soldiers. See ARMY.

Soldiers' Wills. See NUNCUPATIVE WILL.

Sold Note. See BOUGHT AND SOLD NOTES.

Sole, not married, single, alone; also separate, and apart.

Sole Agent, an expression of which the meaning is to be ascertained by construction of the contract (Snelgrove v. Ellringham Coll. Co., (1881) 45 J. P. 408; and Lamb v. Goring Brick Co., 1932, 1 K. B. 710). The appointment does not preclude the principal from selling on his own behalf (Bentall and anor. v. Vicary, 1931, 1 K. B. 253).

Sole, Corporation, one person and his successors, who are incorporated by law, in order to give them some legal capacities and advantages, particularly that of perpetuity, which in their natural persons they could not have had; as the sovereign, a bishop, parson, etc.—Steph. Com., 7th ed., i. 358; iii. 4.

The word 'successors' was essential in order to pass the fee simple in a grant to a corporation sole; without it, a life estate only passes: Co. Litt. 94 b. Words of limitation are not now necessary to convey land to a corporation sole (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 60), and by s. 180 (ibid.) any property which vested at any time in a corporation sole, including the Crown, passes and always has passed to his successors unless disposed of by him, and on his death it does not pass to his personal representatives but to his successor (Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 3 (5)). In the event of a vacancy in office, see s. 180, L. P. Act, 1925. As to the property on a dissolution, see s. 181, and Hastings Corporation v. Letton, 1908, 1 K. B. 378. In a conveyance to a corporation aggregate, on the other hand, words of limitation are unnecessary, and indeed meaningless (Re Woking U. C. (Basingstoke Canal) Act, 1911, [1914] 1 Ch. p. 307; Co. Litt. 9 b, 94 b).

Sole Tenant [solus tenens, Lat.], he that holds lands by his own right only, without any other person being joined with him.

Sollicitation. It is an indictable offence to solicit and incite another to commit a felony, although no felony be in fact committed (R. v. Higgins, (1801) 2 East, 5).

As to arrest by a constable, on view, of a prostitute 'loitering in any thoroughfare or public place for the purpose of prostitution or solicitation to the annoyance of the inhabitants or passengers,' see Metropolitan Police Act, 1839, s. 54, and s. 28 of the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, where this street offence is described as 'loitering and importuning passengers for the purpose of prostitution.'

Solicitor, an officer of the Supreme Court of Judicature, who, and who only, is entitled to 'sue out any writ or process, or commence, carry on, solicit, or defend any action, suit or other proceeding' in any court whatever (see Solicitors Act, 1932, s. 45). 'Solicitor of the Supreme Court' was the title given by the Judicature Act, 1843, s. 87, to all attorneys, solicitors, and proctors, and continued by Solicitors Act, 1932, s. 81. Prior to that Act, 'attorneys' conducted business in the Common Law Courts, 'solicitors' business in the Court of Chancery and 'proctors' ecclesiastical and Admiralty business; but it was the general practice, although any person might be admitted to practise as an attorney or solicitor only, to be admitted to practise as an attorney and solicitor also.

Solicitors practise as advocates before magistrates at petty sessions and quarter sessions where there is no bar, in County Courts, at Arbitrations, at Judges' Chambers, Coroners' Inquests, Under Sheriffs' and Secondaries' Courts, and in the Court of Bankruptcy. The Law Society is Registrar of Solicitors, and regulates the examinations.

The Solicitors Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 37), has now consolidated the Solicitors

Acts, 1839 to 1928, and other enactments relating to solicitors of the Supreme Court. See Chit. Stat., tit. 'Solicitors.'

No person may act as a solicitor unless admitted and enrolled (see ss. 3, 43 and 45). Before admission he must have been bound by a contract in writing ('articles') to serve as a clerk ('articled clerk') to a solicitor, and have passed certain examinations (see s. 14). The period of service as an articled clerk is five years, unless the articled clerk has been a barrister or a Scotch solicitor, or has passed certain examinations or taken certain degrees at certain universities, when the period may be reduced to three or four years (see Schedule I.). A practising solicitor must take out an annual certificate (see ss. 36 to 43). The Law Society may refuse to renew the certificate of a solicitor who is an undischarged bankrupt (see s. 38).

No solicitor may have more than two articled clerks at one time (s. 17), nor any after discontinuing business (s. 18), although solicitors being in partnership may have two each (Ex parte Bayley, (1829) 9 B. & C. 691), and there may be a binding to a firm, which operates as a binding to each member of it (Re Holland, (1872) L. R. 7 Q. B. 297). If the solicitor become bankrupt, etc., the articles may be discharged or assigned to another person by the High Court (s. 24), and if the solicitor die or leave off practice, or the articles be cancelled by mutual consent, fresh articles may be entered into with another solicitor (s. 13). The clerk may not engage in any other employment without the consent in writing of the solicitor, and the sanction of a judge of the High Court (s. 21). The articles must be produced to the Registrar after execution. This should be done within six months (s. 16).

Examinations of persons intending to become solicitors are held as fixed by ss. 26 to 33, as amended by the 1936 Act, ss. 6, 7, and the regulations of the Law Society under s. 26. They are three in number—the preliminary, the intermediate, and the final examination. The preliminary is held in each of the months of February, July, and October; the intermediate and final in each of the months of March, June, and November. As to conditions of exemption from the preliminary examination, see s. 28. Barristers of not less than five years' standing having been disbarred, and having obtained certificates of fitness from two benchers, are exempted from the intermediate examination (s. 34).

A solicitor is exempted from various offices requiring personal service, and cannot be compelled to serve on juries (Juries Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 77), s. 9).

A solicitor is liable to his client for negligence, and may be struck off the Roll for misconduct. Sect. 45 makes provision for penalties for wrongfully acting as a solicitor and s. 46 for prosecuting in a summary way any person not having in force a practising certificate who wilfully pretends to be a solicitor (see 1934 Act, infra). A solicitor cannot sue for (although he may set off) (see Brown v. Tibbets, 11 C. B. N. S. 855) his bill of costs until one month after its delivery in the manner prescribed by s. 65. He has a general lien for his costs on the papers of his clients (Re Rapid Road Transit Co., 1909, 1 Ch. 96). As to charging order for costs, see s. 69. Communications made to him in his professional character by a client are privileged; but the privilege is that of the client, not of the solicitor. Transactions between a solicitor and his client are subject to special scrutiny by the Courts: see Demerara Bauxite Co. v. Hubbard, 1923, A. C. 673.

Sect. 59 enacts that the remuneration of solicitors in contentious business may be fixed by agreement, and a client who so agrees cannot recover (s. 60 (1) (i)) from another party any more costs than what he has agreed to pay his own solicitor. See, however, Gundry v. Sainsbury, 1910, 1 K. B. 99. The taking by a solicitor from his client of security for payment of his remuneration in contentious and non-contentious business is provided for by s. 63 (2) and s. 56 (6), respectively. The taxing officer may, in determining the remuneration to be allowed to the solicitor for his services, allow additional remuneration for diligence in non-contentious business (Remuneration Order, 1882, Ord. VII.) and costs on the higher scale for particular items in non-contentious work (R. S. C. Ord. LXV., r. 10). The cost to be allowed to solicitors in contentious business in the Supreme Court are regulated by R. S. C., Ord. LXV. rr. 8-27; in County Courts, by the County Court Rules, Ord. LIII., and Schedule thereto of court fees and costs (see Annual County Courts Practice, 1934, Part II.). The remuneration of solicitors in conveyancing and non-contentious business is in general governed by 'the Solicitors Remuneration Order,' 1882, with reference to (inter alia) the amount of money to which the business relates, and the skill, labour, and responsibility involved therein on the part of the solicitor. The Order of 1882 has been amended by the Remuneration Orders of 1919, 1920, 1925, 1926, 1932 and 1934. Part V. of the Act deals with the remuneration of solicitors. See also the Annual Practice, Part IV., Division III. Sects. 1 and 2 place the custody of the 'Roll of Solicitors' in the Law Society as Registrar of Solicitors, and provide that such Roll is to be open to public inspection without any fee. Sect. 16 provides for the registration of articles of clerkship, and s. 3 for the admission of solicitors by the Master of the Rolls. A Committee of the Law Society investigates charges made against solicitors and may strike offenders off the Roll (ss. 4 to 8).

The Justices of the Peace Act, 1906, provides by s. 3 (amendment by the Act of 1932) that a solicitor, if otherwise qualified, may be appointed a justice of the peace for any county. But a solicitor who is a justice of the peace for any county may not practise before any justices for that county (see s. 54 of that Act).

As to solicitors ('Law Agents') in Scotland, see the Solicitors (Scotland) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 21).

As to the admission to the Supreme Court of solicitors of colonial courts, see s. 35.

The Solicitors Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 24), provides for the opening and keeping by solicitors of accounts at banks for clients' money, and the Solicitors Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 45), prohibits bodies corporate from purporting to act as solicitors.

The Solicitors Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 45), passed as a result of the decision in Law Society v. United Services Bureau, 1934, 1 K. B. 343, which decided that 'person' in the 1932 Act meant natural person, so a corporate body could not commit the offence of pretending to be a solicitor under the 1932 Act, s. 46. Now, by the 1934 Act, bodies corporate are prohibited from purporting to act as solicitors on penalty on summary conviction of a fine not exceeding one hundred pounds.

The Solicitors Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 35), makes certain amendments to the 1932 Act. By s. 1 a solicitor is to practise five years before taking an articulated clerk; (s. 2) evidence of character and suitability to be furnished by persons entering into articles; (s. 4) fee payable on registration of articles is increased to twenty shillings; (s. 5) the Law Society has power to discharge articles in certain cases. Sects. 6 and 7 make amendments as regards examinations. Sects. 9 et seq. deal with registrars' grant of practising certificate and also proceedings before disciplinary committee, etc.

And see, further, INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY; OFFICIAL SOLICITOR; CHARGING ORDER; COSTS; and Cordery on Solicitors; and The Annual Practice; Part IV., Division III.—Solicitors.

Solicitor-General, the second law officer of the Crown, appointed by patent, and holding office during the continuance of the Ministry of which he is a subordinate member. He is usually knighted. He ranks after the Attorney-General, and receives an annual salary and fees; he may not now carry on a private practice. As to the Solicitor-General for Scotland, see LORD ADVOCATE. Attached to the household of a queen-consort there is an officer with this title. Consult Norton-Kyshe's Attorney-General and Solicitor-General of England.

Solidatum, absolute right of property.

Solidum. To be bound in solido is to be bound for the whole debt jointly and severally with others; but where each is bound for his share, they are said to be bound pro rata parte.

Solidus legalis, a coin equal to 13s. 4d. of the present standard.—4 Steph. Com.

Sollinus terre, 'in Domesday booke containeth two plow-lands and somewhat lesse than an halfe.'—Co. Litt. 5 a. But it seems doubtful what amount of land the term really represented—perhaps 160 acres; see Jac. Law Dict.

Solitary Confinement. The Criminal Law Consolidation Acts of 1861 each frequently provide for sentences of imprisonment 'with or without solitary confinement' in the discretion of the Court, and also that no offender shall be kept in solitary confinement for a longer period than one month at a time, nor three months in the space of a year; but the Prison Act, 1865, has since, by s. 17, enjoined the prevention of criminal prisoners from holding any communication with each other, and these provisions of the Criminal Law Consolidation Acts have been consequently repealed by Statute Law Revision Acts.

Sollar. See SOLARIUM.

Solutio, a discharge; the performance of that to which a person is bound.—Civ. Law.

Solutiones feodi militis parliamenti, or Feodi burgensis parliamenti, old writs whereby knights of the shire and burgesses might have recovered their wages if refused.—35 Hen. 8, c. 11.

Solvendo esse, to be in a state of solvency, i.e., able to pay.

Solvere pœnas, to pay the penalty.

Solvit ad diem, was a plea in an action of debt, on bond, etc., that the money was paid at the day appointed.—1 Selv. N. P., 13th ed. 512.

Solvit ante diem, a plea that the money was paid before the day appointed.

Solvit post diem, a plea that the money was paid after the day appointed.—1 Selv. N. P. 13th ed. 513.

Son assault demesne, a justification in an action of assault and battery, on the ground that the plaintiff made the first assault, and what the defendant did was in his own defence. It was a plea by confession and avoidance.—1 Selv. N. P., 13th ed. 2. See now PLEADING; STATEMENT OF DEFENCE.

Sontage, a tax of 40s. heretofore laid upon every knight's fee.

Sorcery. Prosecution for witchcraft, sorcery, etc., or for charging another with any such offences, is abolished by the Witchcraft Act, 1735 (9 Geo. 2, c. 5); but the same Act enacts that persons pretending to use witchcraft, sorcery, etc., shall suffer one year's imprisonment on conviction. Persons using any subtle craft, means, or device, by palmistry or otherwise, to deceive the people, are rogues and vagabonds, and to be punished with imprisonment and hard labour.—Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 83), s. 4.

Sorehon, or Sorn, an arbitrary exaction, formerly existing in Scotland and Ireland. Whenever a chieftain had a mind to revel, he came down among the tenants with his followers by way of contempt called Gilli-wilfits, and lived on free quarters. See Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Sorites, a form of argument which consists in consolidating several syllogisms (see SYLLOGISM), in which the subject of the minor premiss is the same, so as to suppress the conclusion in every syllogism but the last, and the minor premiss in every syllogism but the first.

Sorner, an unwelcome guest in Scotland whose visits were restricted by Scots Act of Parliament. Compare COSHERING, and see Statute Law Revision (Scotland) Act, 1906.

Sors, principal; to distinguish it from interest.

Sothsaga, or Sothsage [fr. soth, true, and saga, Sax., testimony], history.

Soul-scot, a mortuary fee.

Sounding in Damages. An action is said to sound in damages when it is brought for the recovery of unascertained damages.

Soup. The name applied to briefs for the prosecution handed to members of the bar-mess of certain courts where prisoners are to be tried on indictment in cases other than private prosecutions.

Sourcar, a merchant or banker; a money-lender.—Indian.

South Africa, Union of. The Colonies of Cape of Good Hope, Natal, Transvaal, and Orange Free State were incorporated into the Union of South Africa by the South Africa Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 9), and see DOMINION.

South Sea Fund, the produce of the taxes appropriated to pay the interest of such part of the National Debt as was advanced by the South Sea Company and its annuitants. The holders of South Sea Annuities have been paid off, or have received other stock in lieu thereof.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed. 578.

Sovereign, a chief or supreme person. See Chit. Stat., tit. 'Crown,' and see KING. Also, a gold coin of the value of twenty shillings; see Coinage Act, 1870.

Soverelgn Power, or Sovereignty, that power in a state to which none other is superior.

Sowlegrove, February, so called in South Wales.

Sowming and Rowming, the apportioning or placing of cattle on a common, according to the respective rights of various parties interested. See Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Sowne [fr. souvenu, Fr., remembered], such as is leviabie.

Spadarius, a sword bearer.—Blount.

Spado, a eunuch; an impotent man.—Civ. Law.

Sparsim [Lat.], dispersedly.

Spasæ Plactum, a court for the speedy execution of justice upon military delinquents.—Cowel.

Speaker of the House of Commons. This great officer is the organ or spokesman of the Commons; in modern times he is more occupied in presiding over the deliberations of the House than in delivering speeches on their behalf. The principal duties of the Speaker are the following:—To preside, as Chairman of the House, at its debates when not in committee; to give a casting vote, when the votes are equal, which according to practice he gives in favour of a motion or bill (he has no original vote); to read to the sovereign petitions or addresses from the Commons, and to deliver in the royal presence, whether at the palace or in the House of Lords, such speeches as are usually made on behalf of the Commons; to reprimand persons who have incurred the displeasure of the House; to issue warrants of committal or release for breaches of privilege; and to communicate in writing with any parties, when so instructed by the House. In the case of Bills introduced under the provisions of the Parliament Act, 1911, he must certify that a Money Bill is such, and in the case of Bills other than Money Bills he must certify that the provisions of s. 2 of the Act have been duly complied with, and must also give a certificate as to amendments introduced by the House of Lords. Any certificate given by him under the Act is conclusive for all purposes (s. 3). He is chosen by the House of Commons, from amongst its members, subject to the approval of the Crown, and holds office till the dissolution of the Parliament in which he was elected, and is expected to preserve a strictly impartial attitude. A substantial salary is provided with a furnished residence. At the end of his official labours he is usually rewarded by a peerage. As to the powers and duties of a Deputy Speaker, see 18 & 19 Vict. c. 25 and 31 & 32 Vict. c. 125, and May's Parl. Pr.

Speaker of the House of Lords. The Lord Chancellor, by virtue of his office, becomes, on the delivery of the seal to him by the sovereign, Speaker of the House of Lords. He is usually, but not necessarily, a peer, and unlike the Speaker of the House of Commons is under no obligation to preserve an impartial attitude, since he is a member of the Government for the time being. There has always been a Deputy Speaker, and formerly there were two or more, but since the year 1815 there has been only one. The chairman in committees generally fills the office. In the absence of the Lord Chancellor and of the Deputy Speaker, it is competent to the House to appoint any noble lord to take the woolsack. The Speaker is the organ or mouthpiece of the House, and it therefore is his duty to represent their lordships in their collective capacity, when holding intercourse with other public bodies or with individuals. He has not a casting vote upon divisions, for should the numbers prove equal, the non-contents prevail. The Deputy Speaker of the Lords is appointed by the Crown.—See Dod's or May's Parl. Pr.

Speaking Demurrer, one in which new facts, which did not appear upon the face of a bill in equity, were introduced to support a demurrer. See 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 5th ed. 538. See now DEMURRER.

Special Act of Parliament. Commonly called Local, Personal or Private Acts. See LOCAL AND PERSONAL ACTS. That which applies only to a particular kind of persons or things, as a particular railway to be constructed, or otherwise dealing with a particular area or person only, and therefore not overruled by the general terms of a general Act. See Taylor v. Oldham Corporation, (1876) 4 Ch. D. 410. But the term has received various statutory definitions; see Public Health Act, 1875, s. 316, and Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 Vict. c. 20), s. 2. See also May's Parl. Pr., etc.; PRIVATE BILLS.

Special Administration, one limited to a particular extent of time, or to a specified subject-matter, as distinguished from a general grant, e.g., administration with the will annexed and administratio de bonis non. See ADMINISTRATION. Consult Trist. and Coote, Prob. Prac.

Special Agent, one authorized to transact only a particular business for his principal, as distinguished from a general agent.

Special Bail. See BAIL.

Special Bailiff, one chosen by a party himself to execute process in the sheriff's hands; the appointment of such a bailiff relieves the sheriff of all responsibility.—2 Steph. Com.

Special Bastard, one born of parents before marriage, the parents afterwards intermarrying. By the Civil and Scots Law he would be then legitimated.

Special Case. By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXIV., the parties may, after writ issued, concur in stating the questions of law arising in the action in the form of a special case for the opinion of the Court, and 'if it appear to the Court or a judge that there is in any action a question of law which it would be convenient to have decided before any evidence is given or any question or issue of fact is tried, or before any reference is made to a referee or an arbitrator, the Court or judge may make an order accordingly, and may direct such question of law to be raised for the opinion of the Court, either by special case, or in such other manner as the Court or judge may deem expedient.' Similar power is given to referees to state a case by Ord. XXXVI., r. 52, and see the Administration of Justice Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 55). As to special case before the Judicature Acts, see C. L. P. Act, 1852, ss. 42-48, and 13 & 14 Vict. c. 35 (Turner's Act). Where at a trial in a court of oyer and terminer, gaol delivery, or quarter sessions, any question of law arises on motion in arrest of judgment (or even independently of such motion), which such court finds too difficult for its determination, it was empowered by the Crown Cases Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 78) (see now CROWN CASES RESERVED), to reserve the question and to state it in the form of a special case for the judges of the superior courts as a court of criminal appeal; and in the meantime to postpone the judgment, or respite the execution of it.

As to cases stated by justices, see the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1857, and Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, s. 33, by which any person aggrieved by a conviction, order, determination, or other proceeding of a court of summary jurisdiction, and desirous of questioning the same on the ground of its being erroneous in point of law, may appeal from the same to the High Court by special case stated by the justices. The Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 38), does not affect an appeal by way of special case under s. 33 of the 1879 Act. Justices at quarter sessions also, to whom there is an appeal from courts of summary jurisdiction both on points of law and fact, may state a special case on any point of law for the opinion of the High Court (Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 86), s. 20); and see Arbitration Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 14), s. 9, as to special cases on points of law by arbitrators.

Special Commission, an extraordinary commission of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, issued by the Crown to the judges when it is necessary that offences should be immediately tried and punished.

Special Constables, persons appointed by justices of the peace to assist in keeping the peace 'on the oath of a credible witness that any tumult, riot, or felony has taken place or may be reasonably apprehended in any parish, township, or place,' if the justices are of opinion that the ordinary constables are insufficient for that purpose. See Special Constables Act, 1831, s. 8 of which imposes a penalty for each refusal to serve when duly called upon, while s. 2 allows a Secretary of State to order persons to be sworn in though exempt by law, and s. 196 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, by which borough justices 'shall appoint in October in every year so many as they may think fit of the inhabitants of the borough, not legally exempt from serving the office of constable, to act as special constables in the borough.'

There are also Acts of 1835 and 1838 dealing with the subject.

By the Special Constables Act, 1914, as amended by the Special Constables Act, 1923, power is given to His Majesty by Order in Council to make regulations with respect to special constables. See Special Constables Order, 1923. As to Scotland, see s. 1 (3) of the Act, and the Special Constables (Scotland) Act, 1914.

Special Damage, such a loss as the law will not presume to be the consequence of the defendant's act, but which depends in part at least on the special circumstances of the case. It must therefore be explicitly claimed on the pleadings, and at the trial it must be proved by evidence both that the loss was incurred and that it was the direct result of the defendant's conduct. A mere expectation or apprehension of loss is not sufficient (Odgers on Pleading).

Special Defence, in a county court. A defendant must give notice to the plaintiff when he intends to rely on a defence of set-off or counterclaim, infancy, coverture, statute of limitations, bankruptcy, or equitable defence. For example, he must specially plead the Statute of Frauds, and if he fails to do so in one action he may be estopped from doing so in a subsequent action (Humphries v. Humphries, 1910, 2 K. B. 531).

Special Demurrer, a demurrer for some defect in the form of the opposite party's pleading. Abolished by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 51.

Special Examiner, one appointed to take examinations in suits in Chancery, etc., appointed, by agreement of the parties, instead of the officer of the Court, for the greater despatch of the suit. He was generally a professional lawyer.—Smith's Chan. Prac. 27; and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, ss. 31 et seq. See R. S. C. Ord. XXXVII., and A. P. notes thereto.

Special Finding, of a jury, and amendment of variance. See R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXVIII., r. 1, and Ord. XXXVI., r. 41.

Special Indorsement, an indorsement in full on a bill of exchange or promissory note, which, besides the signature of the indorser, expresses in whose favour the indorsement is made. Thus: 'Pay Mr. C. D. or order, A. B.'; the signature of the indorser being subscribed to the direction. Its effect is to make the instrument payable to C. D. or his order only. See Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, sub-s. 2.

Special Indorsement on Summons. See SUMMONS.

Special Injunctions, prohibitory orders or interdicts against acts of parties, such as waste, nuisance, piracy, etc. See INJUNCTION.

Special Jury, a jury consisting of persons who, in addition to the ordinary qualifications, are of a certain station in society, as esquires, bankers, merchants, etc. The Jurors Act, 1870, s. 6, provides that every man whose name shall be on the jurors' book for any county in England or Wales, or for the county of the City of London, and who shall be legally entitled to be called an esquire, or shall be a person of higher degree, or shall be a banker or merchant, or who shall occupy a private dwelling-house rated or assessed to the poor rate, or to the inhabited house duty, on a value of not less than 100*l.* in a town containing, according to the census then next preceding the preparation of the jury list, 20,000 inhabitants and upwards, or rated or assessed to the poor rate, or to the inhabited house duty, on a value of not less than 50*l.* elsewhere, or who shall occupy premises other than a farm, rated or assessed as aforesaid on a value of not less than 100*l.*, or a farm rated or assessed as aforesaid on a value of not less than 300*l.*, shall be qualified and liable to serve on special juries in every such county in England and Wales, and in London respectively.

Summons of Special Jurors.—The 108th section of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, and the Special Jurors Act, 1898, provide for the summoning a sufficient number of special jurors to the assizes; and see the Juries Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5. c. 11), dispensing with the practice of 'striking' except for compensation under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845.

Right to Special Jury.—Either party, if entitled to a jury, may have a special jury upon application (R. S. C. Ord. XXXVI., r. 9).

Fees of Jurors.—Each special juror is entitled to receive one guinea only for each cause he tries, but in very long cases the parties have occasionally agreed to pay more. The provisions as to payment of jurors, introduced by the Jurors Act, 1870, s. 22—by which each special juror was entitled to one guinea each day of attendance—were repealed by 34 & 35 Vict. c. 2. See GOOD JURY.

Cost of Special Jury.—The party upon whose application the special jury is struck bears all the expenses occasioned at the trial of the cause by the special jury, and is not allowed any more costs than for a common jury, unless the judge, immediately after the verdict, certifies upon the back of the record that it was a proper cause to be tried by a special jury. See also JURY and TRIAL, and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Juries.'

Special Licence, one granted by the Archbishop of Canterbury to authorize a marriage at any time or place whatever. See MARRIAGE.

Special Occupancy. Where an estate was before 1926 granted to a man and his heirs during the life of cestui que vie, and the grantee dies before 1926 without alienation, and while the life for which he held continued, the heir would succeed, and he was called a special occupant. See Wills Act, 1837 (7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), ss. 3, 6; but in case of death of the tenant pur autre vie, after 1925, the equitable interest apparently devolves on the special personal representatives of the deceased, and if he dies intestate, upon trust for sale for the benefit of persons entitled under the Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (see s. 45), the old rules of descent having been abolished (see DESCENT; HEIR), and see also in the case of a limitation or trust under an instrument coming into operation after 1925 for a man and his heirs during the life of another, SHELLEY'S CASE; AUTRE VIE.

Special Paper, a list kept in the Courts of Common Law, and afterwards in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court, in which list special cases, etc., to be argued, were set down.

Special Personal Representatives. The name given to the personal representatives of a tenant for life in connection with settled land which has been settled otherwise than by his will or by way of trust for sale. They should be the trustees of the settlement and their duties are to convey the land to the tenant for life or statutory owner entitled upon the death of the testator subject to provision by them for death duties (see Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 16). If there is no appointment to that effect the testator will be deemed to have appointed the trustees of the settlement as the special representatives. Upon an intestacy, probate may and should be granted to them for the purposes (see Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 7 (1), and Administration of Estates Act, 1925, ss. 22 to 24). If the settlement has come to an end with the testator's death, these provisions do not apply (Bridgett and Hayes' Contract, 1928, Ch. 163).

Special Pleaders, members of an inn of court who devote themselves mainly to the drawing of pleadings, and to attending at judge's chambers. If not called to the Bar, as was in former times (when many special pleaders practised as such prior to being called to the Bar) frequently the case, they take out annual certificates on which a duty of 9*l.* is payable, under s. 44 and Schedule of the Stamp Act, 1891, re-enacting similar provisions of the repealed Stamp Act, 1870. They are exempt while in practice from jury service, by the Juries Act, 1870, and see Solicitors Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 37), ss. 47 to 49.

Special Pleading, the science of pleading. It is a forensic invention, due to the dialectic genius of the Middle Ages, but nearly destroyed by modern innovation. See Steph. on Plead.; Bullen and Leake's Prec. of Pleadings; and Chitty's Precedents. See PLEADING.

Special Pleas, pleas not in the form of what were called general issues, but which allege affirmative matter, as infancy, coverture, statute of limitations, etc. See DEFENCE.

Special pleas in bar in criminal matters go to the merits of the indictment, and give a reason why the prisoner ought to be discharged from the prosecution: they are of four kinds, viz., a former acquittal, a former conviction, a former attainder, or a pardon.

Special Property, qualified property, which see.

Special Referee. See REFERENCE.

Special Reserve. See MILITIA.

Special Sessions. See SESSIONS.

Special Tail, where an estate-tail is limited to the children of two given parents, as to A. and the heirs of his body by B., his wife.—1 Steph. Com.

Special Traverse, a form of pleading, abolished by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 65.

Special Trust, where the machinery of a trust is introduced for the execution of some purpose particularly pointed out, and the trustee is not a mere passive depository of the estate, but is called upon to exert himself actively in the execution of the settlor's intention; as where a conveyance is made to trustees upon trust to sell for payment of debts. See USES.

Special Verdict, a special finding of the facts of the case, leaving to the Court the application of the law to the facts thus found. See R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXVIII., r. 1, and Ord. XXXVI., r. 41. For instance of special verdict in a criminal case (which is very rare), see Reg. v. Dudley, (1884) 14 Q. B. D. 273, and NECESSITY (HOMICIDE BY).

Specialty, a contract by deed.

Specialty Debts, bonds, mortgages, debts, secured by writing under seal, and recoverable at any time within twenty years, by virtue of s. 3 of the Civil Procedure Act, 1883 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42); they formerly ranked in the administration of the estate of a deceased person in priority to simple contract debts; but this distinction was abolished by the Administration of Estates Act, 1869, 'Hinde Palmer's Act,' replaced by the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, ss. 32 and 34.

Specie, metallic money. Anything in specie is anything in its own form, not any equivalent, substitute, or reparation.

Specific Legacy. See LEGACY.

Specific Performance. Equity, in obedience to the cardinal rule of natural justice that a person should perform his agreement, enforces, pursuant to a regulated and judicial discretion, the actual accomplishment of a thing stipulated for, on the ground that what is lawfully agreed to be done ought to be done, and that damages at law for breach of the contract are not a sufficient compensation. The Common Law has not recognized this principle; it has only given damages to a suffering party for the non-performance of an executory agreement. The C. L. P. Act, 1854, however, imparted to the Common Law writ of mandamus a little more efficacy by provisions since superseded by s. 24 of the Judicature Act, 1873, now by Judicature Act, 1925, s. 36, and the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856, introduced a procedure for enforcing the specific delivery of goods sold, specially superseded by s. 52 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893.

An award of damages may be combined with a decree for specific performance by s. 24 of the Judicature Act, 1873 (see now Judicature Act, 1925, s. 36).

By s. 49, Law of Property Act, 1925, where the Court refuses to grant specific performance of a contract, the Court has power to order the repayment of any deposit.

The broad general rule is that contracts relating to the sale or lease of land will be specifically enforced, but not contracts relating to personal property except under very special circumstances, as where damages do not afford an adequate remedy. The Court will not decree specific performance of a contract of personal service, but it will enforce a negative covenant by injunction if damages are not an appropriate remedy (Warner Brothers' Pictures (Inc.) v. Nelson, 1937, 1 K. B. 209).

The several requisites of a contract, which will be directed to be specifically executed, are these :—

(a) The contract must be entered into by competent parties, or their lawfully authorized agents. The general rule is, that all parties who can bind themselves at law are competent to enter into agreements, which equity will enforce.

(b) The parties must contract willingly, without undue bias, and not under any improper influence.

(c) The terms of the contract must be understood by the parties without mistake or misapprehension, and must be certain and defined, importing a concluded agreement. See Douglas v. Baynes, 1908, A. C. 477.

(d) The contract must be entered into for a valuable executory consideration, such as marriage or money; and not for a merely good consideration, how meritorious soever it may be.

(e) While a valuable consideration exists on the one side, there must be a promise or sale on the other, together with a mutuality of remedy between the parties. In other words, there must be some inducement passing from one party in order to render binding the promise of the other.

(f) The contract must be in writing if so required by the Statute of Frauds. See Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 40, replacing s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds.

Equity, however, will entertain actions for the specific performance of contracts which, though within the statute, have not been reduced into writing, where there does not appear any danger of fraud or perjury. The following contracts will be specially enforced :—

(1) A sale ordered by a decree of a Court, for the judgment of the Court in confirming such a purchase takes the transaction out of the statute. It is, however, now usual for the purchaser to subscribe a written or printed contract.

(2) Where a parol agreement has been so substantially performed in part as to render it inequitable not to enforce the whole of it. See Maddison v. Alderson, (1883) 8 App. Cas. p. 473; and see now L. P. Act, 1925, s. 40.

(3) Where the agreement has not been reduced into writing through the fraud of one of the parties.

(4) When the land is partnership property. Where a partnership, or an agreement in the nature of one, exists between two persons, and land is acquired by the partnership as a substratum of it, the land is in the nature of stock-in-trade of the partnership; and this being proved as an independent fact, the Court, without regarding the Statute of Frauds, will inquire of what the partnership stock consisted, whether that stock be land or any other kind of property.

(5) Where a suit is brought for the execution of a verbal agreement fully set forth in the plaintiff's claim, and the defendant puts in his answer or defence thereto, and confesses the agreement.

By the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 34 (see now Judicature Act, 1925, s. 56 (1)), all causes and matters for the specific performance of contracts between vendors and purchasers of real estates, including contracts for leases, are assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice. Specific performance may be obtained up to 500l. in the county courts under s. 52 (1) (d) of the County Courts Act, 1934. See Fry on Specific Performance.

Specification, a particular and detailed account of a thing; also, a description of a patent with the object of putting the public in full possession of the inventor's secret, so that any person may be in a condition to avail himself of it when the period of exclusive privilege has expired. See LETTERS-PATENT.

As to indexes of specifications for the public use, see s. 46 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (as amended by the Patents and Designs Act of 1932); and s. 7 for official investigation of old specifications of less than fifty years' date on application for a patent.

Speedy Execution. A plaintiff having obtained a verdict in a cause was not entitled to issue execution until fourteen days, unless a judge should order execution to issue at an earlier period, which was called 'speedy execution.'—C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 120, and H. T. 1853, r. 57. Under the Jud. Acts, immediate execution is the rule. See EXECUTION.

Spes recuperandi [Lat.], the hope of recovery.

Spigurnel [fr. spicourran, Sax., to shut up or inclose], the sealer of the royal writs.

Spinning-house, a place of confinement in Cambridge to which the University authorities might, by virtue of the University Charter (confirmed by 13 Eliz. c. 29), commit public women and others suspected of evil. See Kemp v. Neville, (1861) 10 C. B. N. S. 523; Broom's Const. Law, p. 734, in which the Vice-Chancellor was unsuccessfully sued by a Cambridge milliner committed by him after apprehension by a proctor, and Ex parte Hopkins, (1891) 61 L. J. Q. B. 240, where the conviction of a woman upon a charge of walking with a member of the University was held bad. This jurisdiction was taken away from the University in 1894 by 57 & 58 Vict. c. lx.

Spinster, an unmarried woman, so called because she was supposed to be occupied in spinning.

In Scotland the wife's or cognate side of the family is termed the 'spindle-side,' in contradistinction to the agnate or husband's side, which is denominated the 'spear' or 'sword-side.' The armorial bearings of the families of widows and spinsters are painted on this spindle, which is popularly termed a lozenge.

Spirits. By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 114, and the Spirits Act, 1880, and later Acts, the excise regulations relating to the distilling, rectifying, and dealing in spirits have been successively amended and consolidated. As to the supply and sale of immature spirits, see Immature Spirits Act (Restriction) Act, 1915; as to strength and weight, 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 89, s. 19; in medicine, 8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 15, s. 41; as to methylated spirits, 11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. 32, and 14 & 15 Geo. 5, c. 21, ss. 13 and 41; as to misdescription, 22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 25, s. 11, and Finance Acts.

As to licences for the sale of spirits by retail, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS; and as to barring of action for price of spirits sold in small quantities, see TIPPLING ACT.

Spiritual Corporations, corporations the members of which are entirely spiritual persons, and incorporated as such, for the furtherance of religion and perpetuating the rights of the Church.

They are of two sorts:

(1) Sole, as bishops, certain deans, parsons and vicars; or

(2) Aggregate, as dean and chapter, prior and convent, abbot and monks.

Spiritual Courts, ecclesiastical courts, which see.

Spiritual Lords, the archbishops and bishops of the House of Peers.

Spiritualism, the pretending to hold communication with spirits. The pretender may be convicted as a rogue and a vagabond and imprisoned for three months; and upon a second conviction he may be whipped.—

Monck v. Hilton, (1877) 2 Ex. D. 268. See Vagrancy Act, 1824, s. 4, and VAGRANT. Large gifts by an aged widow to a so-called 'Spiritual Medium' were set aside on the ground of undue influence in Lyon v. Home, (1868) L. R. 6 Eq. 655.

Spirituality, that which belongs to one as an ecclesiastic.

Spirituality of Benefices, the tithes of land, etc.

Spital, or Spittle, a charitable foundation; a hospital.

Splitting a Cause of Action, suing for only a part of a claim or demand, with a view to suing for the rest in another action. This is not permitted in the county courts. See Grimby v. Ackroyd, (1847) 1 Ex. 479, and s. 67 of the County Courts Act, 1934, replacing s. 81 of the County Courts Act, 1888.

Spoliation, a writ or suit for the fruits of a church or the church itself, to be sued in the spiritual and not in the temporal court. It lies for one incumbent against another, where they both claim by one patron, and the right of patronage does not come in question.—3 Steph. Com.

Sponsalia, or Stipulatio sponsalitia, espousals; mutual promises to marry.—Civ. Law.

Sponsio judicialis, the feigned issue of the Roman Law. See FEIGNED ISSUE.

Sponsions, agreements or engagements made by certain public officers, as generals or admirals in time of war, either without authority, or in excess of the authority under which they purport to be made.—Inter. Law.

Sponsor, a surety; one who makes a promise or gives security for another, particularly a godfather in baptism.

Sponte oblata, a free gift or present to the Crown.

Sportula, or Sportella, a dole or largess either of meat or money given in the time of the Roman Empire by princes or great men to the poor. It was properly the pannier or basket in which the meat was brought, or with which the poor went to beg it, thence the word was transferred to the meat itself, and thence to money sometimes given in lieu of it.

Sposual, marriage nuptials.

Spouse-breach, adultery, as opposed to simple fornication.

Spreading False News concerning any great man of the realm, punishable at Common Law, and by the repealed 2 Ric. 2, st. 1, c. 5. And see SCANDALUM MAGNATUM.

Spring Guns. The setting of spring guns, etc., calculated to destroy life or inflict grievous bodily harm on a trespasser, is a misdemeanour.—Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 31. Damages are recoverable by a person injured by a spring gun, set without notice, from the person setting it (Bird v. Holbrook, (1828) 4 Bing. 628).

Springing Use, a form of use in the nature of an executory interest directing property in land to vest at a future period which does not coincide with the termination of a legal estate at common law, for instance. In conveyances before 1926, upon a grant by X. to B. to the use of A. (an infant) in fee attaining twenty-one years of age, the use results to the settlor until, if ever, the period arrives and a good legal estate was conferred upon A. attaining that age by virtue of the statute. The use may be contingent as in that case, or vested, as grant to B. to the use of A. in fee upon the death of C., a stranger. If the grant defeats a previous legal estate and is not capable of being construed as a vested or contingent remainder, it may operate as a shifting use. Springing and shifting uses were resorted to in order to facilitate freedom of grant or conveyance of the legal estate in land by virtue of the Statute of Uses. Grants which would have created springing or shifting uses if they had been made inter vivos are good, apart from the Statute of Uses if made by will at Common Law as executory devises, but apart from statute (see CONTINGENT REMAINDERS), executory devises like springing or shifting uses are not so construed if they are capable of taking effect by vesting as a remainder before or eo instanti with the determination of a particular freehold estate. The Statute of Uses has been repealed by the Law of Property Act, 1925, which also converted executory as well as all other future interests in land into equitable interests, and even before 1926, where the executory devise, shifting or springing use, or contingent remainder did not operate to create a legal estate but only an equitable interest, the rule as to failure of a preceding particular estate before the remainder could vest did not invalidate the equitable estate in remainder (see Re Freme, 1891, 3 Ch. 167).

Spullzie [fr. spoliatio, Lat.], the taking away or meddling with movables in another's possession, without the consent of the owner or authority of law.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Spurli [either fr. σποράδην, Gk., at hazard; or fr. sine patre, Lat., without a father], children conceived in prostitution.—Sand. Just.

Squatter. If a squatter wrongfully encloses a bit of waste land, and builds a hut on it, and lives there, he acquires an estate in fee-simple by his own wrong in the land which he has enclosed. He may, of course, be turned out by legal process until his title is confirmed by the Statute of Limitations; but as long as he remains he has an estate in fee-simple: Williams on Seisin, p. 7. It has even been held that he will be bound by the restrictive covenant of a former owner even after he has acquired a statutory title (Re Nisbet and Pott's Contract, 1906, 1 Ch. 386).

Squibs. Casting squibs in any thoroughfare or public place is an offence punishable by fine. See FIREWORKS.

In the leading case of Scott v. Shepherd, (1773) 2 Wm. Bl. 892, 1 Sm. L. C., it was held that an action of trespass and assault lay against the original thrower of a squib, which after having been thrown about in self-defence by two other persons successively, 'at last put out the plaintiff's eye.'

Squire, contraction of 'esquire.' See ESQUIRE.

S. S., Collar of. Collars bearing these letters, or consisting of many of them linked together, have been much worn by persons holding great offices in the state, e.g., by the Lord Chief Justice of England. The signification is obscure.

Stabilia, a writ called by that name, founded on a custom in Normandy that where a man in power claimed lands in the possession of an inferior, he petitioned the prince that it might be put into his hands till the right was decided, whereupon he had this writ.

Stabilitio venationis, the driving deer to a stand.

Stabit præsumptio donec probetur in contrarium. Hob. 297.—(A presumption will stand good till the contrary is proved.) See PRESUMPTION.

Stable-stand, one of the four evidences or presumptions whereby a man is convicted to intend the stealing of the royal deer in the forest; and this is when a man is found at his standing in the forest, ready to shoot with a cross-bow bent at any deer, or with a long bow, or else standing close by a tree with greyhounds in a leash ready to slip.—Mamwood, pac. 2, cap. 18.

Stade, Stadium, a furlong.

Stade-herding, the following of cattle within a forest.

Stage Coaches. As to the duty thereon, see 32 & 33 Vict. c. 14, repealing various previous enactments; ROAD TRAFFIC ACTS and MOTOR CAR.

Stage-play. It is enacted by the Theatres Act, 1843 (see THEATRE), s. 23, that:—

In this Act the word 'stage-play' shall be taken to include every tragedy, comedy, farce, opera, burletta, interlude, melodrama, pantomime, or other entertainment of the stage, or any part thereof: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to apply to any theatrical representation in any booth or show which by the justices of the peace, or other persons having authority in that behalf, shall be allowed in any lawful fair, feast, or customary meeting of the like kind.

See Wigan v. Strange, (1865) L. R. 1 C. P. 175.

Stagliarius, a resident.

Stagnum, a pool. By this name the land and water pass.—Co. Litt. 5a.

Stake, a deposit made to answer an event.

Stakeholder, one with whom a stake is deposited (see, generally, Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 58)). As to when money deposited in the hands of a stakeholder, to abide the event of a wager, may be recovered, see Gaming Act, 1845, s. 18, and the title WAGER. A stakeholder of a sealed packet containing a document can be called upon to produce it upon a subpoena duces tecum (R. v. Daye, 1908, 2 K. B. 333). Upon a sale of land a stakeholder appears to hold the deposit for the party entitled thereto. He may interplead under R. S. C. Ord. LVII., and is entitled to retain the interest on the deposit for his pains: see Mr. Cyprian Williams in 71 L. J. (articles), pp. 162 and 180—Wolst. & Ch. Conveyancing Statutes, 12th Ed., p. 724. Apart from a special stipulation, it is not clear that a stakeholder converting the deposit into the property of either party before determination of the event is not acting in contradiction of his mandate. See INTERPLEADER.

Stale, larceny.—Ang.-Sar.

Stallage, the liberty or right of pitching, or erecting stalls in fairs or markets, or the money paid for the same.—1 Steph. Com. 'The right of stallage is a right for a payment to be made, to the owner of the market, in respect of the exclusive occupation of a portion of the soil, for the purpose of selling goods in the market': Williams on Rights of Common, p. 295. See Mayor, etc., of Great Yarmouth v. Groom, (1862) 1 H. & C. 102.

Stallarius, a master of the horse; also the owner of a stall in the market.—Spelm.

Stamp Act, of 1765, for imposing stamp duties on American colonies, 5 Geo. 3, c. 12, repealed by 6 Geo. 3, c. 11.

Stamp Duties, a branch of the revenue. They are a tax imposed on all parchment and paper whereon certain legal proceedings and certain private instruments are written; and on licences for various purposes.

The consolidating Stamp Act, 1870, superseded the very numerous older enactments (in great part repealed by the Inland Revenue Repeal Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 90)) in regard to the duty on the various classes of instruments, but by s. 17 of the Stamp Act, 1870 (re-enacted by s. 14 of the Stamp Act, 1891), reversing the former law (see Buckworth v. Simpson, (1835) 1 C. M. & R. 384), the stamp to be affixed to an unstamped document to render it admissible in evidence was not the stamp in accordance with the law at the time of affixing it, but the stamp in accordance with the law in force at the time when the document was first executed.

Very important alterations in the law of stamps were effected by the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888. Prior to that Act it was no offence not to stamp any instruments except receipts, the provision that unstamped instruments should be inadmissible in evidence being considered sufficient for the protection of the revenue. With respect to very large classes of instruments, being either (1) Bonds, (2) Conveyances of Transfers, (3) Leases or Agreements for Leases, (4) Mortgages whether legal or equitable, or (5) Settlements, the Act of 1888 created the new offence of not stamping, imposing the special penalty of ten pounds, which falls upon the obligee, vendee or transferee, lessee or intended lessee, mortgagee, or settlor, as the case may be, for not stamping the instrument within thirty days after execution in ordinary cases. The same Act barred any right to sue for moneys assured by an unstamped assignment of a life policy, made void every condition of sale framed with a view of precluding objection or requisition upon the ground of absence or insufficiency of stamp upon any instrument executed after 16th May, 1888, and abridged, from twelve months to three, the period after execution of an instrument within which the Commissioners of Inland Revenue might remit the penalties payable on stamping, after execution, unstamped or insufficiently stamped instruments generally.

tions in the law of stamps having been effected since the passing of the Act of 1870, the enactments relating to stamps were again consolidated, with a few immaterial amendments, by the Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 91), the 14th section of which regulates the terms on which instruments not duly stamped may be received in evidence, while the 15th imposes penalties on the stamping of conveyances, leases, etc., after execution. In the same year the Stamp Duties Management Act, 1891, repealing and re-enacting the Stamp Duties Management Act, 1870, regulated the sale of stamps, the allowance for spoiled stamps, and made the forgery of stamps and dies a felony, as to which see now the Forgery Act, 1913.

Since 1891 the duties on various documents (see especially CONTRACT NOTE, and, generally, Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Stamps,' and Statutes of Practical Utility (Annual), tit. 'Stamps') have been altered by various Finance Acts, of which the most important are the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7, c. 8), and Finance, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 18). By the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, the duties on conveyances and transfer on sale of any property except on certain stocks were doubled by s. 73 (ibid.), unless the consideration does not exceed 500l., and the following certificate must in that case be inserted on every conveyance on which the reduction is applicable:—

It is hereby certified that the transaction hereby effected does not form part of a larger transaction or series of transactions in respect of which the amount or value or the aggregate amount or value of the consideration (or if voluntary) of the land and property conveyed or transferred exceeds the sum of 500l.

Consult Alpe on Stamp Duties.

As to exemption from certain stamp duties, see Building Societies Act, 1874, s. 41; Friendly Societies Act, 1896, s. 33; Revenue Act, 1911, s. 15; Finance Act, 1911, s. 17. See also National Health Insurance Act, 1924, and NATIONAL INSURANCE, and Law of Property Acts, 1922 and 1925; Administration of Estates Act, 1925.

Standard, that which is of undoubted authority, and the test of other things of the same kind; a settled rate. See the Weights and Measures Act, 1878, and the Amendment Act of 1926. The 1936 Act (25 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 38) deals mostly with the measuring of sand and sand ballast.

Standing by, sanctioning by silence and inaction. See LYING BY.

Standing Mute. See MUTES.

Standing Orders, general regulations to be observed in passing private Acts through Parliament. An edition of the Standing Orders of both Houses of Parliament is published each year. See May's Parl. Pr.

Stannary [stannaria, fr. stannum, Lat.; stean, Cornish, tin], a tin mine.

From very ancient times there were Stannary Courts in Cornwall for the administration of justice among the tinners therein, such courts being mentioned in charters of the reign of King John. In 1855 their jurisdiction was extended to Devonshire mines. The Stannaries Court Abolition Act, 1896, transferred this jurisdiction (which was exercised by a Vice-Warden with an appeal to the Lord Warden and a further appeal to the Court of Appeal by virtue of s. 18 of the Judicature Act, 1873 (see now Judicature Act, 1925, s. 26)), to county courts; see Companies Act, 1929, ss. 163 (jurisdiction in winding up), 297 to 299 (attachment of debts, preferential payments, and mine club funds), 339 (1) (contributories), 357 (prohibition of unregistered companies having more than twenty members not to apply), 375 (jurisdiction of the Court exercising Stannaries jurisdiction); Dunbar v. Harvey, 1913, 2 Ch. 530.

The 'Stannaries' covers mines in the Stannaries of Devon and Cornwall; companies and ordinary partnerships working these mines may do so under the cost-book system (see that title), or as companies registered under the Companies Act, 1929, except companies so registered, cost-book companies and ordinary partnerships are governed by the Stannaries Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 19), and the sections of the Companies Act, 1929, supra.

Staple, a public mart which anciently was appointed by law to be held in Westminster, Newcastle, Bristol, and other places. A court was held before the mayor of the staple, which court was governed by the law merchant. It appears from Statute 14 Ric. 2, that the staple goods of England then were wool, woollfells, leather, lead, tin, cloth, butter, cheese, etc.

Staple, Statute of the, 27 Edw. 3, st. 2, repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1863. See STATUTE STAPLE.

Staple Inn, an Inn of Chancery. See INNS OF CHANCERY.

Star [fr. starrum, contr. fr. shetar, Heb., a deed or contract], the deeds, obligations, etc., of the Jews; also a schedule or inventory.—4 Steph. Com.

Star Chamber [chambre des estoyles, Fr.], camera stellata, which see.

Stare decisis, to abide by authorities or cases already adjudicated upon.

Stare in judicio [Lat.], to sue; to litigate in a court.

Starrum. See STAR.

State Trials, a work in thirty-three volumes octavo (from which 'selections' were brought out by Mr. J. Willis-Bund in 1880), containing all trials for offences against the State, and others partaking in some degree of that character, from 1163 to 1820. Eight continuation volumes, for the period from 1820 to 1858, have been brought out under the auspices of a Government committee; the eighth and last volume contains the index, and appeared in 1898.

Statement of Claim. The mode in which, under the Judicature Acts, a plaintiff begins his pleading, substituted for the former Bill in Chancery or Declaration at Common Law. The delivery of the statement of claim is regulated by R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XX., which provides that none shall be delivered if the writ be specially indorsed, or without an order on summons for directions (see Ord. XXX.), unless the defendant has not appeared.

Statement of Defence. This form of pleading is substituted, under the Judicature Acts, for the former pleas at Common Law, and answers in Chancery, and its delivery is now regulated by R. S. C. Ord. XXI., which provides in ordinary cases for the delivery of the statement of defence within ten days from the delivery of the statement of claim, or appearance if no statement of claim be delivered.

Statesman, a freeholder and farmer in Cumberland.

Statham. The learning of the law was thrown into a more methodical form than it had ever yet received by this author, who was a Baron of the Exchequer in the time of Edward IV. This was in his Abridgment of the Laws, being a kind of digest containing most titles of the law, arranged in alphabetical order, and comprising under each head adjudged cases, concisely abridged from the Year-books.—4 Reeves, c. xxv. 117.

Stationers' Hall. The (repealed) Copyright Act, 1842, authorized, in every case of copyright, the registration of the title of the proprietor at Stationers' Hall, and provided that, without previous registration, no action should be commenced, though an omission to register did not otherwise affect the copyright itself. It was founded A.D.

1553.—2 Hall. Hist. Lit., pt. 2, c. 8, p. 366. This registration is now unnecessary; see Copyright Act, 1911.

Stationery Office. A Government office established to supply Government offices with stationery and books, and to print and publish Government papers. By the Documentary Evidence Act, 1882, documents printed under the superintendence of the office are receivable in evidence.

Statu liber, a slave made free or enfranchised by testament conditionally.—Civ. Law.

Statutes. See ART, WORKS OF; MONUMENTS; and PUBLIC STATUTES.

Status. The legal position or condition of a person. In Roman law this term indicated the position of a persona. A full Roman citizen must have possessed the status libertatis, familiae, and civitatis, which are sometimes called tria capita. See Sanders' Justinian; Mackenzie's Roman Law, 4th ed. p. 81. The law of status thus classified men as slaves and free, citizens and aliens—as equals and unequals, so that it may be called the law of inequality. Much in the same way the term 'status' is used at the present time in connection with the law of persons, in which connection it signifies some disability or special right or treatment by the law.

In Scotland, with few exceptions, actions affecting status must be brought in the Court of Session.

Status de manerio, the assembly of the tenants in the court of the lord of a manor, in order to do their customary suit.

Status of Irremovability, the right formerly acquired by a poor person under the Union Chargeability Act, 1865, s. 8, after one year's residence (altered from the three years of an Act of 1861 by the Act of 1865, having been first fixed at five years by an Act of 1846) in any parish, not to be removed therefrom; for the present law see Poor Law Act, 1930 (20 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 93.

Status quo, the existing state of things at any given date; e.g., Status quo ante bellum, the state of things before the war.

Statutable, according to statute.

Statute, a law, an edict of the legislature, an Act of Parliament. See ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

Statute Fair, a fair at which labourers of both sexes stood and offered themselves for hire; sometimes called also Mop.

Statute Law Revision Acts. A number of general Acts were passed from the year 1861 to 1927 inclusive, for the purpose of expressly and specifically repealing Acts or parts of Acts which had been either impliedly repealed by subsequent statutes on the ground that leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant, or which (see the preambles to the various Acts) 'might be regarded as spent, or had by lapse of time or otherwise become unnecessary' from various causes, or had become obsolete, and also partly with the view of clearing the way for two editions of 'Statutes Revised,' that is, statutes in force only, as distinguished from the 'Statutes at Large,' or statutes just as they are passed. In 1890, as explained in an Introductory Note to vol. 4 of the 2nd edition of the Revised Statutes, a Select Committee of the House of Commons considered the subject of statute law revision, and recommended the omission from the Revised Statutes of 'any preambles' [but see that title] 'to an act, or introductory words to a section, which though not dead were practically inoperative'; and the two Statute Law Revision Acts of that year, which repeal such matter for the first time, authorize the insertion in the Revised Statutes of such brief statements as such omission may render necessary. See ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

Statute-merchant, a bond of record (see 13 Edw. 1 (Stat. Merc.), repealed by Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863) under the hand and seal of the debtor, authenticated by the sovereign's seal, with the effect that, on failure of payment on the day assigned, execution might be awarded, without any mesne process to summon the debtor, or bringing in proofs to convict him, and thus, it is presumed, it obtained the name of a 'pocket judgment.' Obsolete.

Statute of Frauds : of Distributions. 29 Car. 2, c. 3; 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10. See FRAUDS; DISTRIBUTION.

Statute Staple, a bond of record acknowledged before the mayor of the staple, in the presence of the constables of the staple, or one of them; the only seal required for its validity was the seal of the staple, and therefore if the statute were void for any cause, it could not, as in the case of a statute-merchant (q.v.), be proceeded on as a common obligation; and, wanting the sanction of the seal of the king, the sheriff, after the extent, could not deliver the lands to the conusee, but had to seize them into the king's hands; and in order to obtain possession of them, the conusee had to sue out a writ of Liberate, which was a writ out of Chancery, reciting the former writ, and commanding the sheriff to deliver to the conusee all the lands, tenements, and chattels by him taken into the king's hands, if the conusee would have them, until he should be satisfied his debt. Obsolete. See STAPLE.

Statuti, advocates, members of the college, —Civ. Law.

Statuto mercatorio, an ancient writ for imprisoning him who had forfeited a statute-merchant bond, until the debt was satisfied. —Reg. Brev. 146.

Statutory Declarations Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 62), which substitutes declarations for oaths in a large number of cases.

The expression 'statutory declaration' in a statute means a declaration under the above Act.—Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 21.

As to the punishment if a person 'knowingly and wilfully makes a statement false in a material particular' in a statutory declaration, see Perjury Act, 1911, s. 5.

Statutory Exposition. When the language of a statute is ambiguous, and any subsequent enactment involves a particular interpretation of the former Act, it is said to contain a statutory exposition of the former Act.

Statutory Order. See STATUTORY RULES.

Statutory Owner. Defined by the Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 117 (1) (xxvi.), as the trustees of the settlement or other persons who, during the minority, or at any other time when there is no tenant for life, have the powers of a tenant for life under that Act, but does not include the trustees of the settlement, where, by virtue of an order of the Court or otherwise, the trustees have the power to convey the settled land in the name of the tenant for life. Where land has been devised to an infant, the personal representatives, in other cases, the trustees of the settlement, may be statutory owners: ss. 23 and 26; see also s. 110 (ibid.).

Statutory Release, a conveyance which superseded the old compound assurance by lease and release. It was created by 4 & 5 Vict. c. 21 (repealed, as being superseded by subsequent legislation, by the Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1874, No. 2), which abolished the lease for a year. See RELEASE.

Statutory Rules and Orders. Very numerous Acts of Parliament, especially those passed in recent years, empower the Sovereign in Council, some Government Department, or Courts of Justice, to make rules, having the same effect as the statute under which they are made, to regulate details left unprovided for by such statute. Thus, there are the Bankruptcy Rules, regulating the practice under the Bankruptcy Acts; the Rules of the Supreme Court, regulating the practice of the High Court and the Court of Appeal ; Orders of the Ministries of Health, Labour, etc., and Orders of the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries, under the Diseases of Animals Act, 1894, and other Acts ; and hundreds of other rules, orders, and regulations, in some cases requiring to be laid before Parliament, and in other cases not, and in some cases required to be published in the London, Edinburgh, or Dublin Gazette, and in others not.

The Rules Publication Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 66), directs that all rules made in 1894 and afterwards under an Act of Parliament which relate to any court, or are made by the Sovereign in Council, or the Treasury, or any other Government Department, are to be printed by the King's Printer and sold by him ; and with regard to rules which have to be laid before Parliament, but come into operation at once (with certain exceptions), this Act also makes provision for consideration of them in draft by any 'public body' interested, and for the consideration by the authority making the rules of any representations or suggestions made in writing by such public body to such authority. The exceptions are : Certain rules made by the Ministries of Health and Labour, and rules made by the Revenue Departments, or by the Post Office, or by the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries, under the Diseases of Animals Acts.

See Pulling's Annual Indexes of Statutory Rules and Orders, first published by Government in 1891, and Collection of Statutory Rules and Orders in Force, published by Government.

Statutory Trusts. For the purposes of the Law of Property Act, 1925, land held upon 'statutory trusts' shall be held upon trust for sale and to stand possessed of the net proceeds of sale after payment of costs and net rents and profits until sale subject to rates, taxes, and cost of insurance, repairs, and other outgoings, upon trust for the persons entitled under the settlement, including incumbrancers of former undivided shares, or not secured by a legal mortgage, and where an undivided share was subject to a settlement and the settlement remains subsisting in respect of other property and the trustees of the settlement are not the same persons as the trustees for sale, the settled portion of the proceeds of sale is to be handed over to the settlement trustees as capital money under the Settled Land Act, 1925 (s. 35 of the Law of Property Act, 1925). By s. 25, L. P. Act, 1925, the trustees have power to postpone the sale unless a contrary direction appears in the trust instrument. By the Law of Property (Entailed Interests) Act, entailed interests in undivided shares of land are to be treated and held as entailed interests in the proceeds of sale. As to the meaning of statutory trusts upon distribution in intestacy, in favour of the issue and other classes of relatives of the intestate per capita and per stirpes (as provided) and other matters, see s. 47 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, and WIDOW.

Statuto stapulæ, the ancient writ that lay to take the body to prison, and seize upon the lands and goods of one who had forfeited the bond called statute-staple.—Reg. Brev. 151.

Statutum affirmativum non derogat communī legi. Jenk. Cent. 24.—(An affirmative statute does not derogate from the Common Law.) See ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

Statutum Hiberniæ de coharedibus (14 Hen. 3). It has been pronounced not to be a statute. In form it appears to be an instruction given by the King to his justices in Ireland, directing them how to proceed in a certain point where they entertained a doubt. It seems the justices itinerant in that country had a doubt, when land descended to sisters, whether the younger sisters ought to hold of the eldest, and do homage to her for their several portions, or of the chief lord, and do homage to him ; and certain knights had been sent over to know what the practice was in England in such a case.—1 Reeves, 259.

Statutum de mercatoribus, the statute of Acton-Burnel, which see.

Statutum sessionum (the statute-sessions), a meeting in every hundred of constables and householders, by custom, for the ordering of servants, and debating of differences between masters and servants, rating of wages, etc.—5 Eliz. c. 4.

Staunforde, the author of the Pleas of the Crown, in the reign of Philip and Mary. This book is written in French ; the method of it is perspicacious, and the matter disposed with learning and accuracy. The author is uncommonly full in his quotations, the statutes are generally given at length, and whole pages are frequently transcribed from Bracton. This is in general done with success and propriety, though sometimes his author has failed him ; as, among other instances, may be observed Bracton's definition of larceny, which was not law at the time Staunforde wrote.

As Staunforde has the praise of being our earliest writer on pleas of the Crown, so has his merit been acknowledged by those who have followed him in the same walk, they having, in general, adhered to the arrangement and divisions of his work. He treats of his subject under three heads: first, of crimes; next, of the method of bringing delinquents to justice; and lastly, of trials and punishment. The several titles into which these are subdivided have furnished the heads of nearly every book which has been written since his time on the same subject.—4 Reeves, 564.

Staying Proceedings. By the Judicature Act, 1875, s. 24 (5), the courts had power to stay proceedings in cases where an injunction or prohibition could formerly have been obtained, but in which such course, by the consolidation of the superior courts, is now put an end to. Every court has an undoubted inherent jurisdiction to stay proceedings on the ground that they are an abuse of the process of the court; see per Vaughan Williams, L.J., in Re Norton's Settlement, 1908, 1 Ch. at p. 479, approving Egbert v. Short, 1907, 2 Ch. 205. As to staying proceedings upon an appeal, see R. S. C. Ord. LVIII., r. 16, and for other cases illustrating this jurisdiction, see Annual Practice. See also the Vexatious Actions Act, 1896, and R. S. C. Ord. XXV., r. 4.

Stealing. See LARCENY.

Stealing Children. See KIDNAPPING.

Steam Engines. As to the negligent use of the furnaces of these, see the Steam Engine Furnaces Act, 1831; and as to damaging or obstructing them, see Malicious Damage Act, 1861, ss. 29, 35, 36. See also ss. 114–116 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and the Railway Fires Act, 1905, as amended by 13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 27; Martin v. G. E. Ry. Co., 1912, 2 K. B. 406. See ENGINE; ROAD TRAFFIC.

Steam Launch includes, on the Thames, 'any vessel propelled by steam, electricity, or other mechanical power, not being used solely as a tug or for the carriage of goods and not being certified by the Board of Trade as a passenger steamer to carry 200 or more passengers,' and must be registered, display lights after sunset and before sunrise, etc.—Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. clxxxvii.), ss. 3, 138, 147, 148; see now the consolidating Thames Conservancy Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. xxxvii.); Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Thames.'

Steam Whistles. The use of steam whistles in certain manufactories is regulated by the Steam Whistles Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 61).

Steel-bow Goods, corn, cattle, straw, and implements of husbandry, let or delivered by a landlord to a tenant, by which the tenant is enabled to stock and work a farm; in consideration of which he becomes bound to return articles, equal in quantity and quality, at the expiration of the lease.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Stellionate [stellionatus], a kind of crime which is committed by a deceitful selling of a thing; as if a man should sell as his own estate that which is another's.

In the Roman law, the making a second mortgage without giving notice of the first; but the crime was not committed if the land were equal in value to all the charges upon it.—Dig. 13. See the Clandestine Mortgage Act (4 & 5 W. & M. c. 16).

Sterbreche, Strebrich, the breaking, obstructing, or straitening of a way.—Termes de la Ley.

Sterling, genuine; money; standard-rate. Derived from the Easterlings who came to England from Germany in the thirteenth century, and coined good money. See Skeat's Etymological Dictionary, where it is said that the term 'sterling was first applied to the English penny, and then to standard current coin in general, and that Wedgewood cites from Ducange a Statute of Edward I., in which we meet with "denarius Anglie, qui vocatur sterlingus." And see Co. Litt. 207 b, Harg. note (1).

Stet processus, an order of the court to stay proceedings. Strictly, it can only be made with the consent of the parties; but where the ends of justice will be better answered by this course, it is authoritatively recommended by the court. Each party pays his own costs. See DISCONTINUANCE.

Stethe, or Stede, betokeneth properly a bank of a river, and many times a place.—Co. Litt. 4 b.

Stevodore [fr. estivar, Sp., to stow], a person employed to stow a cargo on board a ship. See the Merchant Shipping (Stevadores and Trimmers) Act, 1911.

Steward [seneschallus, Lat.], a ward or keeper; one appointed in the stead of another. See HIGH STEWARD.

Steward of Household. See MARSHAL-SEA.

Steward of Manor, the lord's deputy, who transacts all the legal and other business connected with the estate, and takes care of the Court-rolls. The office is usually held by the lord's solicitor. The office has been deprived of much of its importance in consequence of the abolition of copyhold tenure by the Law of Property Act, 1922 (see COPYHOLDS). The scale of compensation to the steward of the manor if he was appointed before the 29th June, 1922, is provided for by the 14th Sched. of the Law of Property Act, 1922, and see the L. P. (Amendment) Act, 1924. See also the L. P. Act, 1922, and the Enfranchised Land (Stewards' Fees) Regulations, S. R. & O., 1926, No. 3, as to fees payable to stewards upon extinguishment of manorial incidents and upon the compulsory production of assurance of former copyholds to him. Upon a vacancy for three months in the office and on other occasions the Lord Chancellor may upon default of the lord of the manor transfer the duties of the office to H.M. Land Registry (s. 129, ibid.). The following notes have been retained, as they are material to the devolution of titles to formerly copyhold land and the extinguishment of manorial incidents.

Should there be joint stewards, one may act without the other (1 Scriv. 130). In other manors the chief steward is usually appointed by deed, though he may be appointed by parol; but corporations must always appoint by deed under their corporate seal.

The appointment of a steward is generally during the lord's pleasure; it may, however, be for years or for life, forfeitable by abuser, misuser, nonuser, or refuser. The steward's remedy for a disturbance of his office is an action on the case for consequential damages. The King's Bench Division of the High Court will, upon a proper case made out, grant a writ of mandamus to restore a steward to his office. A steward may depurate or authorize another to hold a court; and the acts done in a court so holden will be as legal as if the court had been holden by the chief steward in person. So an under-steward or deputy may authorize another as sub-deputy, pro hac vice, to hold a court for him, such limited authority not being inconsistent with the rule 'delegatus non potest delegare.'

This deputy, or under-steward, may be appointed either in writing, or by parol, although the appointment of the chief steward do not contain an express authority for that purpose. See COPYHOLD.

Stews. 1. Certain brothels anciently permitted in England, suppressed by Henry VIII. 2. Breeding place for tame pheasants.

Stickler. 1. An inferior officer who cuts woods within the royal parks of Clarendon; an arbitrator. 2. An obstinate contender about anything.

Stilleddium, the water that falls from the roof of a house in scattered drops.—Civ. Law.

Stint, Common without; common sans nombre, i.e., without number. See COMMON.

Stipend, a salary; settled pay; a provision made for the support of the clergy.

Stipendiary Estates, i.e., feuds, estates granted in return for services, generally of a military kind.—1 Steph. Com.

Stipendiary Magistrates, paid magistrates appointed in the Metropolis under the Metropolitan Police Courts Act, 1839; in municipal boroughs, on petition by the council to the Secretary of State, under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, s. 161, reproducing s. 99 of the repealed Municipal Corporations Act, 1835; in places of 25,000 inhabitants or more, on like representation by the local board, etc.; under the Stipendiary Magistrates Act, 1863; and in some other places, e.g., Manchester, by special Act of Parliament. They must be barristers of at least seven years' standing in the metropolis and municipal boroughs; under the Stipendiary Magistrates Act, 1863, they may be of five years' standing. By the Stipendiary Magistrates Act, 1868, they may do alone all acts authorized to be done by two justices of the peace. A stipendiary magistrate cannot sit at general or quarter sessions. As to deputies, see 32 & 33 Vict. c. 34 and 6 Edw. 7, c. 46. See JUSTICES; METROPOLITAN POLICE.

Stipendium [fr. stips, a piece of money, and pendo, to weigh, Lat.], wages; pay. Before silver was coined at Rome, the copper money in use was paid by weight, and not by scale.

Stipulated Damage, liquidated damage, which see.

Stipulation, bargain; also, a recognizance of certain fidejussors in the nature of bail, taken in the Admiralty Courts.

It is the highest and most authentic contract known to the Civil Law, entered into before the magistrate or public officer, through the medium of interrogatories and answers calculated to explain the nature and extent of the undertaking, to put the parties entering into it on their guard, and to show it to be their mature and deliberate act. It could not be impeached except for fraud or deceit, and could not be released or discharged except by an equally solemn proceeding, conducted by question and answer before the public functionary, called an acceptance.—Vinnus, 677; Sand. Just., 7th ed. 332.

Stiremannus, a pilot or steersman.—Domesday.

Stirpes. See PER STIRPES.

Stock, a race, lineage, or family; also, the public funds (for definition, see National Debt Act, 1870, Part VII., and 20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 28, s. 49 (1)), considered merely as perpetual annuities redeemable at the pleasure of the Government; also, the capital of a public company, as to which see SHARES.

Stockbroker, one who buys and sells stock as the agent of others. 7 Geo. 2, c. 8 (known as Sir John Barnard's Act), required a stockbroker to keep a book called the broker's book, to enter all contracts for stock made by him on the same day, with the names of the parties and the day, and to produce such book when lawfully required; but this Act has been repealed by 23 Vict. c. 28. See BROKER.

Stock Certificates. By the National Debt Act, 1870, it is provided that a holder of British Government Stock may obtain a stock certificate; that is to say, a certificate of title to his stock or any part thereof, with coupons annexed, entitling the bearer of the coupons to the dividends on the stock (s. 26); that a certificate shall not be issued in respect of any sum of stock not being 50*l.*, or a multiple of 50*l.*, or exceeding 1000*l.* (s. 28); that a trustee of stock shall not apply for or hold a stock certificate, unless authorized to do so by the terms of his trust (s. 29); that no notice of any trust in respect of any certificate or coupon shall be receivable (s. 30); that where a stock certificate is outstanding the stock represented thereby shall cease to be transferable in the Bank books (s. 31); that a stock certificate, unless a name is inscribed thereon, shall entitle the bearer to the stock therein described, and shall be transferable by delivery (s. 32). The Act also contains many other provisions in regard to stock certificates (see ss. 33–42).

Stock Exchange, a society of stockbrokers and dealers (or stockjobbers) for the conduct of the sale or purchase, on behalf of non-members, of Government securities and stocks or shares in public companies. See COMPANY. The members of the 'House' (as it is called) must be re-elected annually and pay a substantial annual subscription. In the transaction of business they are governed by certain usages, and by rules framed by the Committee of the Stock Exchange which bind their outside employers, if reasonable, but not otherwise.—See Neilson v. James, (1882) 9 Q. B. D. 546 (C. A.), in which a custom to disregard Leeman's Act (see LEEMAN'S ACTS) was held unreasonable; Chitty on Contracts; and the works of Melsheimer and Lawrence, Brodhurst, and Stutfield. Also, the place where they meet to transact business. See BROKER.

Perhaps the most important of the London Stock Exchange Rules are Rules 66 and 75. by which:—

66. The Stock Exchange does not recognize in its dealings any other parties than its own members; every bargain, therefore, whether for account of the member effecting it, or for account of a principal, must be fulfilled according to the rules, regulations and usages of the Stock Exchange.

75. No member or authorized clerk shall carry on business in the double capacity of broker and dealer.

Stockjobber, a dealer in stock; one who buys and sells stock on his own account on speculation. See STOCK EXCHANGE.

Stockjobbing Act (7 Geo. 2, c. 8) (made perpetual by 10 Geo. 2, c. 8), which was repealed by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 28. Gambling transactions in stockjobbing are now subject only to the same law as is applicable to wagers.

Stocks. Two boards each with semi-circular holes, fitting together within posts, and padlocked together so as to confine the legs of a person just above the feet, anciently maintained at a public spot in every parish as a mode of ignominious confinement for petty offences. For drunkenness it was prescribed in default of distress for a fine, by 21 Jac. 1, c. 7, s. 4 (not repealed until 1872 by the Licensing Act of that year), and similarly for Sunday trading by the Sunday Observance Act, 1677 (still unrepealed). See SUNDAY.

The punishment of the stocks began to be disused about the beginning of the nineteenth century, but has not been expressly abolished; and stocks have been preserved in some country villages and towns; e.g., at Woodeaton in Oxfordshire and in the Town Hall of Much Wenlock in Shropshire.

Stolen Goods. As to restitution, see Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 45, and Arch Cr. Pr., 1934, pp. 293 et seq.

Where goods have been stolen and the offender is prosecuted to conviction, the property in the goods so stolen reverts in the person who was the owner of the goods or his personal representative, notwithstanding any intermediate dealing with them, whether by selling in market overt (see that title) or otherwise; but if obtained by fraud, etc., not amounting to larceny, aliter.—Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 24.

Sect. 102, Larceny Act, 1861, prohibits advertising a reward for the return of any property either lost or stolen and intimating that no questions will be asked, without apprehension of the person returning the property, under a penalty of 50*l*.

As to the crime of 'receiving' goods knowing them to have been stolen, see RECEIVER OF STOLEN PROPERTY.

Stop Order. If any person entitled, in expectancy or otherwise, to any share of any stocks or funds, standing in the name of the Paymaster-General (formerly the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery: see Chancery Funds Act, 1872) to the general credit of any cause, or to the account of any class or classes of persons, assign his interest in such stock or funds, the assignee (although not a party to the cause in which the fund is standing) may apply by summons for a stop order to prevent the transfer or payment of such stock or funds, or any part thereof, without notice to him. And a person having a lien on a fund in court may obtain a stop order. See R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XLVI.; and consult Dan. Ch. Pr.: Seton on Judgments.

Stoppage in transitu. 'When the buyer of goods becomes insolvent, the unpaid seller who has parted with the possession of the goods has the right of stopping them in transitu; that is to say, he may resume possession of the goods as long as they are in course of transit, and may retain them until payment or tender of the price.'—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (see that title), s. 44, embodying the law of Lickbarrow v. Mason, (1787) 6 East, 21; 1 Sm. L. C.

Stouthrief, forcible depredation within or near a house.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Stowage, money paid for a room where goods are laid; housage; the mode of lading a ship. See Stevens on Stowage.

Stowe [Sax.], properly, a bank of a river; a place.—Co. Litt. 4 b. Also a village.—Domesday.

Stradling v. Stiles. A burlesque report of an argument in banco, published in Martinus Scribelus's works. It is, in part, the work of Fortescue, an eminent lawyer who subsequently became a baron of the Exchequer.

Stramineus homo, a man of straw, one of no substance, put forward as bail or surety.

Stranding, the running of a ship on shore or on a beach. By reason of the memorandum always inserted in policies of insurance (see INSURANCE), it is of the greatest importance to define what is a stranding.

On this much diversity of opinion has been entertained. It would appear that merely striking against a rock, bank, or shore is not a stranding; the ship must be upon the rock, etc., for some time.

Stranger in Blood, a person in no degree of relationship to another. See schedule to the Stamp Act, 1815 (Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Death Duties'), by which 10 per cent. duty is payable on a legacy 'to or for the benefit of any stranger in blood to the deceased' testator. An illegitimate child is treated by the Inland Revenue authorities as a 'stranger in blood' within the Act; but see May and August numbers of the Law Magazine and Review of 1905. Aliter as to legitimated children, see Legitimacy Act, 1926, s. 7.

Stratoeracy [fr. στρατός, Gk., an army; and κράτος, power], a military government.

Strator, or Stretward, a surveyor of the highways.—Dugd. Mon., tom. 2, p. 187.

Straw, Man of, a man of no substance. A transfer of shares, in a company, to such a man is good, subject to its regulations, so as to relieve the transferor from liability to pay calls upon the shares, if the transferee be sui juris, and there be no resulting trust for the transferor (see De Pass's case, (1859) 4 De G. & J. 544), and unless the Stannaries Act, 1869, s. 35, applies; and see CONTRIBUTORY. Likewise the assignee of a lease may escape liability on the covenants after assignment by 'assigning over' to a man of straw.

Street, in the Public Health Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 49), by s. 343, includes any highway, including a highway over any bridge, and any road, lane, footway, square, court, alley or passage, whether a thoroughfare or not; and see A.-G. v. Laird, 1925, Ch. 318.

Street Betting. The suppression of this is provided for by the Street Betting Act, 1906. See BETTING.

Street Musician (London). See MUSICIAN.

Street Offences. For list of these, see Town Police Clauses Act, 1847 (Chit. Stat., tit. 'Police'), s. 28 (applied among ss. 21–29 to urban districts by s. 171 of the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55) (Chit. Stat., tit. 'Public Health')), and s. 54 of the Metropolitan Police Acts of 1839 and 1867 (Chit. Stat., tit. 'Police (Metropolis)'). Thirty kinds of offences are specified in the Act of 1847, and seventeen in the Act of 1839. The offences specified in each Act comprise riding or driving furiously, loitering by common prostitute for prostitution, sliding on ice or snow, disturbance by ringing doorbell, discharging firearms, making bonfires, or setting fire to fireworks, and allowing ferocious dogs to be at large. The Act of 1847 also includes keeping swine, and obstructing footways. The Act of 1839 also includes bill posting on buildings without consent of owner, 'blowing horns or any other noisy instrument for the purpose of calling persons together, or of announcing any show, or for the purpose of hawking, selling, distributing, or collecting any article whatsoever, or of obtaining money, or alms,' and wilfully disregarding police regulations, 'after having been made acquainted with them,' for regulating routes during divine service, and for preventing obstructions during public processions.

The penalties under each Act are up to 40s., with liability to apprehension by a constable without warrant, the Act of 1847 authorizing imprisonment without the option of a fine.

See also COLLECTIONS, STREET; Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 12); and Vann v. Eastough, 52 T. L. R. 14.

Strict Settlement, a settlement of land, the object of which was, usually, to keep the estates as far as possible in the male line, the eldest son taking in fee or in tail with successive limitations in tail to the exclusion of the younger children, who are provided for by means of portions charged on the property. The limitations vary according to the circumstances of each particular case, but the following may be taken as usual limitations in the case of an ordinary settlement on marriage before 1926: To the use of the husband for life, remainder, subject to a jointure rent-charge to the wife and a term for raising portions for younger children, to the first and other sons in tail-male, remainder to the first and other sons in tail general, remainder to the daughters as tenants in common in tail with cross remainders between them, remainder to the husband in fee. Where the estate also comprised copyholds and leaseholds, these were conveyed to trustees upon trusts to correspond with the uses declared concerning the freeholds. Trustees were appointed for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts, and provision was made for the application of rents during minorities by reference to the Conveyancing Act, 1881; and such other powers and provisions are inserted as the case might have required. For the modern method of strict settlement, see SETTLED LAND. Consult Key and Elphinstone or Prideaux Conveyancing Precedents.

Strictissimi juris [Lat.] (of the most strict law).

Strictum jus [Lat.] (mere law in contradiction to equity).

Strike. The Trade Disputes and Trade Unions Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 22), by s. 8 provides:—

The expression 'strike' means the cessation of work by a body of persons employed in any trade or industry acting in combination, or a concerted refusal under a common understanding of any number of persons who are or have been so employed, to continue to work or to accept employment;

The expression 'lock-out' means the closing of a place of employment or the suspension of work, or the refusal by an employer to continue to employ any number of persons employed by him in consequence of a dispute, done with a view to compelling persons employed by him to accept terms or conditions or conditions of or affecting employment; a strike or lock-out shall not be deemed to be calculated to coerce the Government unless such coercion ought reasonably be expected as a consequence thereof.

As to the legality of strikes generally, see Jose v. Metallic Roofing Co. of Canada, 1903, A. C. 514; Russell v. Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners, 1912, A. C. 421. See TRADE DISPUTE.

Sect. 1 provides:—

- (1) (a) that any strike is illegal if it—
  - (i.) has any object otherwise or in addition to the furtherance of a trade dispute within the trade or industry in which the strikers are engaged; and
  - (ii.) is a strike designed or calculated to coerce the Government either directly or by inflicting hardship upon the community; and
- (b) that any lock-out is illegal if it—
  - (i.) has any object other than or in addition to the furtherance of a trade dispute within the trade or industry in which the employers locking out are engaged; and
  - (ii.) is a lock-out designed or calculated to coerce the Government either directly or by inflicting hardship upon the community.
- (4) The provisions of the Trades Disputes Act, 1906, shall not, nor shall the several provisions to sub-section (1) of section two of the Emergency Powers Act, 1920, apply to any act done in contemplation or furtherance of a strike or lock-out which is by the Act declared to be illegal, and any such act shall not be deemed for the purposes of any enactment to be done in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute. See TRADE DISPUTE.

Striking, e.g., special jury, a method of selection, see Juries Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 77), s. 17. For practice, see Arch. Cr. Pl. and Short and Mellor Cr. Pr.

Striking Off the Roll. Removing the name of a solicitor from the rolls of the Court, and thereby disintitling him to practise. See SOLICITORS.

Striking-out Defence. This may now be done as a punishment for default in making discovery or allowing inspection after an order to do so. See R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXI., r. 21.

Strokehaul, a device for catching fish, the use of which is prohibited for taking or killing salmon, trout, or freshwater fish (Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1923, s. 1).

Stupration [fr. stupro, Lat.], rape, violation.

Stuprum, every union of the sexes forbidden by morality.—Civ. Law.

Sturgeon, a royal fish, which, when either thrown ashore or caught near the coast, is the property of the sovereign.—1 Bl. Com. 290.

Sturges Bourne's Acts. (1) 58 Geo. 3, c. 69, the Vestries Act, 1818 (Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Vestries'), as to notice of vestries, qualification for vestry meetings, etc. (repealed as to rural parishes by the Local Government Act, 1894), preservation of parish books and other matters; and (2) 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, the Poor Relief Act, 1819 (Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Poor'), by which the inhabitants of any parish, in vestry assembled, were enabled to commit the management of its poor to a committee of the parishioners appointed for that purpose and called a 'select vestry,' to whose orders the overseers were bound to conform (this portion of the Act, being superseded by the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834, is repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1873). See now Poor Law Act, 1930, and POOR LAW.

Style, to call, name, or entitle one; the title or appellation of a person. See also CALENDAR, and NEW YEAR'S DAY.

Suable, that may be sued.

Subah, a province such as Bengal. A ground division of a country, which is again divided into circars, chucklas, pergunnahs, and villages.—Indian.

Subahdar, the holder of the subah, the governor, or viceroy.—Ibid.

Subahdary, the office or jurisdiction of a subahdar.—Ibid.

Sub-bols. Coppice-wood.—2 Inst. 642. See SYLVA CÆDUA.

Subinfeudation, where the inferior lords, in imitation of their superiors, began to carve out and grant to others minuter estates than their own, to be held of themselves, and were so proceeding downward in infinitum till they were stopped by legislative provisions. See TENURE, and Addenda.

Subject (logic), that concerning which the affirmation in a proposition is made; the first word in a proposition.—Mill's Logic. See PREDICATE.

Subject to Contract. See as to the meaning of these words in contracts for sale of land, Hussey v. Horne Payne, (1878) 4 A. C. 311, as explained in Curtis Moffatt Ltd. v. Wheeler, 1929, 2 Ch. 244.

Subjects, the members of a community under a sovereign.

Submission. See ARBITRATION.

Submit, to propound, as an advocate, a proposition for the approval of the Court.

Sub modo, under condition or restriction.

Subnervare, to ham-string by cutting the sinews of the legs and thighs. It is said to have been a custom of semi-civilized savages, meretrices et impudicas mulieres subnervare.

Subnotation, a rescript, which see.

Subordinate Clause. See CO-ORDINATE.

Subordinate Integer. In Patent Law, any part of a whole patentable machine or thing which is itself independently patentable.

Suborn. See next title.

Subornation, the crime of procuring another to do a bad action. See PERJURY.

Subpœna [from sub, Lat., under, and pœna, penalty], a writ commanding attendance in court under a penalty. It bears a close analogy to the citation, or vocatio in jus of the Civil and Canon Laws. There are several kinds of subpœna.

At Common Law there are two to compel the attendance of witnesses:—

(1) Subpœna ad testificandum, the common subpœna, which is personally served upon a witness, in order to compel him to attend the trial or inquiry, to give evidence.

(2) Subpœna duces tecum: this is personally served upon a person, who has in his possession any written instrument, etc., the production of which in evidence is desired. Such a person need not be sworn, and in that case he cannot be cross-examined. See DUCES TECUM.

These subpœnas are also used in criminal proceedings; four witnesses can be included in one subpœna, whether in civil or criminal cases.

For rules as to service, etc., of subpœna, see R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXVII., rr. 26–34, and for the different forms of subpœna, see Appendix J. of R. S. C. 1883. The Court can set aside the subpœna in criminal as well as civil proceedings if it is not required bonâ fide and is an abuse of process (R. v. Baines, 1909, 1 K. B. 258).

Subpoena Office in Chancery. Abolished, and its duties transferred to Clerks of Records and Writs.—15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 28.

Sub pede sigilli [Lat.] (under the foot of the seal).

Subreption, the obtaining a gift from the Crown by concealing what is true.

Subrogation. The doctrine in the law of insurance whereby, as between insurer and insured, the insurer is entitled to the advantage of every right of the insured, connected with the insurance which was effected between them. See Assicurazioni Generali de Trieste v. Empress Assurance Corporation, 1907, 2 K. B. 814. The doctrine is not confined to insurance, but extends in equity to many other cases, e.g., where money has been borrowed without authority but applied in payment of existing debts; in such cases the quasi-lender is entitled to stand in the shoes of the creditors thus paid. See Re Wrexham, etc., Railway, 1899, 1 Ch. 440; see INDEMNITY; GUARANTY.

Subsequens matrimonium tollit peccatum præcedens. Reg. Jur. Civ.—(A subsequent marriage removes a previous offence.) See LEGITIMATION.

Subsequent Condition. See CONDITION SUBSEQUENT.

Subsidy, an aid, tax, or tribute granted to the Crown for the urgent occasions of the kingdom, to be levied on every subject of ability, according to the value of his lands or goods.

Sub silentio, in silence.

Substituted Executor, one appointed to act in the place of another executor, upon the happening of a certain event, e.g., if the latter should refuse the office.

Substituted Service, of a writ of summons, service on some person representing the defendant, instead of on the defendant personally. See R. S. C. 1883, Ord. X. Leave is given sometimes to effect the substituted service by means of advertisement.

Substitution. In the Civil Law a conditional appointment of a heres. See Cum. C. L. 143; Sand Just.

In Scots law the enumeration or designation of the heirs in a settlement of property. Substitutes in an entail are those heirs who are appointed in succession on failure of others.

Subtraction, neglecting or refusing to perform any suit, service, custom, or duty, or to pay rent, service, tolls, etc.—3 Bl. Com. 230.

Suburban, husbandmen.

Succession, the power or right of coming to the inheritance of ancestors. See CANONS OF INHERITANCE; DISTRIBUTION.

Succession Duties. The Succession Duty Act, 1853, amended by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 21, ss. 12–15, and by the Customs and Inland Revenue Acts, 1881, 1888, and 1889, imposed a new set of duties, varying in amount from 1 per cent. in the case of a child succeeding a parent to 10 per cent. in the case of succession to a stranger in blood, upon real or personal property to which any person succeeds on the death of another. The duty is calculated on the capitalized value for the life of the successor of the property succeeded to, in accordance with a table schedule to the Act of 1853; e.g., if a person aged fifty succeed to property worth 100*l.* a year, he pays succession duty upon 1242*l.* 19*s.* 6*d.*

Succession duties are payable as a rule at the same rate as legacy duty in respect of all property liable to be administered by any Court in Great Britain and Northern Ireland—unlike legacy duty, it falls on property passing by death (succession), under disposition by deed or other instrument (inter vivos) as well as by will or on an intestacy. The liability to duty arises on creation of the succession—it becomes leviable if and when the property falls in possession. As to liability on land charged, see Law of Property Act, 1925, ss. 16 and 17, and Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 10, Class D (1).

The Act of 1881, by s. 41, abolished the duty of 1 per cent. payable by lineal ancestors or descendants, in cases where the duty on affidavit for probate had been paid; and the Finance Act, 1894, by s. 1 directed that this duty should not be levied in respect of property chargeable with estate duty (see that title).

The Act of 1888 imposed an additional duty of 10*s.* per cent. where the successor is the lineal issue or ancestor of the predecessor, and of 1*l.* 10*s.* per cent. in other cases; merged in estate duty by the Finance Act, 1894.

The Act of 1889 (s. 12) exempts purchasers and mortgagees from liability to succession duties, after the expiration of six years from certain notices to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, and imposed an additional 1 per cent. duty on estates exceeding 10,000*l.* in value; also merged in estate duty by the Finance Act, 1894.

By the Finance (1909–10) Act, 1910, succession duty, in the case of successions arising as mentioned in s. 58 (4) of the Act, is payable at the amended rates mentioned in that section, and, subject to the provisions of sub-s. 2 thereof, is payable on the death of a tenant for life, notwithstanding that the successors are husband or wife or lineal descendants and that estate duty is payable.

The Acts apply to both personal and real property, but one of the principal changes effected by the Act of 1853 was that real property became for the first time dutiable upon a succession after death, as no probate duty was then payable in respect of it. Consult Hanson; Rouse's Practical Man., 19th ed.; and see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Death Duties.' See DEATH DUTIES and LEGACY DUTY.

Successor, one that follows in the place of another. The correlative of predecessor in the succession.—Succession Duty Act, 1883. See PREDECESSOR.

Succurritur minori : facill est lapsus juvenutis. Jenk. Cent. 47.—(A minor is assisted : a mistake of youth is easy.) See INFANT.

Sucken, the whole lands astricted to a mill, the tenants of which are bound to grind there.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Sudbury Borough, disfranchised by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 53.

Sudder, the best; the fore-court of a house; the chief seat of government, contradistinguished from mofussil, or interior of the country; the presidency.—Indian.

Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, the chief civil court of justice held at the presidency.—Ibid.

Sue, to prosecute by law, to claim a civil right by means of legal procedure.

Sue and Labour Clause. The name given to a clause in a policy of marine insurance which was introduced to make it clear that the assured and his agents or servants, e.g., master and crew, can take every step to recover insured property in peril without loss of the rights under the insurance and to be repaid any expenditure which may be incurred by the assured or his agents to avert the loss. The clause does not cover general average losses and contributions and salvage charges.—Marine Insurance Act, 1906, s. 78 (2), and see Aitchison v. Lohre, (1879) 4 A. C. 755. The clause is usually in the following form :—

'And in case of any loss or misfortune, it shall be lawful to the Assured, their Factors, Servants and Assigns, to sue, labour, and travel for, in, or about the Defence, Safeguard and Recovery of the said Goods and Merchandises and Ship, etc., or any part thereof, without prejudice to this insurance : To the charges whereof, we, the assurers, will contribute, each one according to the Rate and Quality of his sum herein insured.'

It is the duty of the assured so to act. See s. 78 (4), Marine Insurance Act, 1906. Consult Arnould on Marine Insurance.

Suez Canal. By agreement ratified by the Suez Canal Shares Act, 1876, 176,602 shares in the Suez Canal Company were acquired by the Crown by purchase from the Khedive of Egypt for about 4,000,000*l.* sterling.

Sufferance, Tenancy at. This is the least and lowest estate which can subsist in realty. It is in strictness not an estate, but a mere possession only. It arises when a person after his right to the occupation, under a lawful title, is at an end, continues (having no title at all) in possession of the land, without the agreement or disagreement of the person in whom the right of possession resides. Thus if A. is a tenant for years, and his term expires, or is a tenant at will, and his lessor dies, and he continues in possession without the disagreement of the person who is entitled to the same, in the one and the other of these cases he is said to have the possession by sufferance—that is, merely by permission or indulgence, without any right : the law esteeming it just and reasonable, and for the interest of the tenant, and also of the person entitled to the possession, to deem the occupation to be continued by the permission of the person who has the right, till it is proved that the tenant withholds the possession wrongfully, which the law will not presume. As the party came to the possession by right, the law will esteem that right to continue either in point of estate or by the permission of the owner of the land till it is proved that the possession is held in opposition to the will of that person.

An under-tenant, who is in possession at the determination of the original lease, and is permitted by the reversioner to hold over, is a quasi-tenant at sufferance.

Lord Coke tells us (in 2 Inst. 134) this diversity is to be observed, that where a man cometh to a particular estate by the act of the party, there, if he hold over, he is a tenant at sufferance; but where he cometh to the particular estate by act of law, as a guardian, for instance, there, if he hold over, he is no tenant at sufferance, but an abator. The same doctrine is laid down in 1 Inst. 271.

This tenancy is created only by construction of law, and cannot originate in the agreement of the parties. For the agreement of the parties would pass either an estate at will, or for a term, or from year to year, according to their intention. There exists no privity between the tenant at sufferance (who has but a mere possession, without privity) and the person entitled to the possession; yet such occupancy is not adverse to the title of the person who possesses the right of entry, unless he choose to consider it so; but an adverse possession will take place on an entry and perception of the profits of the land by a person, without the reversioner's consent, after the death of a tenant at sufferance. This estate cannot be the subject of conveyance or transfer.

Since laches or neglect can never be imputed to the sovereign, a lessee of Crown lands, holding them over after the determination of his interest in them, is never considered a tenant by sufferance, but he is deemed a bailiff of his own wrong, and so accountable to the Crown, but after office found he becomes absolute intruder.

This estate is put an end to whenever the true owner actually enters upon the lands, by which he declares the continuance of the tenant tortious and wrongful, or demands possession, or brings his action of ejectment to recover possession, which he may do without any previous demand.—Woodfall, L. and T.

Sufferance Wharves are wharves on which goods may be landed before any duty is paid. They are appointed for the purpose by the Commissioners of the Customs. See s. 288 of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36).

Sufferentia pacts, a grant or sufferance of peace or truce.—Rot. Claus., 16 Edw. 3.

Suffragan. Bishops are styled suffragan, a word signifying deputy, in respect of their relation to the archbishop of their province. But formerly each archbishop and bishop had also his suffragan to assist him in conferring orders, and in other spiritual parts of his office within his diocese. These are called suffragan bishops, and resemble the chorepiscopi, or bishops of the country, in the early times of the Christian Church. How this inferior order of bishops may be appointed and consecrated for twenty-five towns therein specified (including Thetford, Grantham, and Gloucester) is regulated by 26 Hen. 8, c. 14, which enacts that every archbishop and bishop disposed to have a suffragan should name to the king 'two honest and discreet spiritual persons, being learned and of good conversation,' and that each of them should request the king to appoint one of them. Notwithstanding this statute, it was not until very recent years, when the suffragans were appointed for a few of the specified towns, usual to appoint them. The Suffragans Nomination Act, 1888, however, empowers the King by Order in Council to add towns to those specified in the Act of Henry VIII., and to change the sees of suffragans appointed before the passing of the Act, and the Suffragan Bishops Act, 1898, allows existing bishops to be made suffragans. Many bishops suffragan, as of Stepney, Kensington, etc., have been appointed. The Act of Henry VIII., by s. 7, allows a suffragan, 'for the better maintenance of his dignity,' to have two benefices with cure.

Suffragans should not be confounded with the coadjutors of a bishop, the latter being appointed, in case of a bishop's infirmity, to superintend his jurisdiction and temporalities, neither of which was within the interference of the former.—Co. Litt. 94 a, Harg. note (3).

Suffrage [fr. suffragium; etymology uncertain], vote; elective franchise; voice given in a controverted point; aid; assistance. See ELECTORAL FRANCHISE.

Suffragette. A woman who agitated for woman-suffrage in the later years preceding the European War. See now Representation of the People Acts, 1918 and 1928.

Sugar Subsidy. The British Sugar (Subsidy) Act, 1925 (15 Geo. 5, c. 12), provided for a subsidy on sugar and molasses manufactured in Great Britain in the 10 years, 1st October, 1924-34 (extended to 31st August, 1936, by amending Acts), from beet grown in Great Britain, and for excise duties on the products manufactured in Great Britain and Northern Ireland from beet grown there.

Suggestio falsi [Lat., a representation of untruth], one of the branches of fraud, sometimes 'suppressio veri, suggestio falsi.' Consult Addison on Torts.

Suggestion, a surmise or representing of a thing; an entry of a fact on the record.

Suicide. (1) Self-slaughter; (2) a self-slaughterer. See FELONY DE SE.

Sui juris [Lat.] (of his own right). A person who is neither a minor nor insane, nor subject to any other disability, is said to be sui juris.

Suit, a following. It is used in divers senses:—

(1) An action in the Supreme Court, or a proceeding by petition in the Divorce branch of that Court; a prosecution; a petition to a Court, etc. See Jud. Act, 1873, s. 100. By Jud. Act, 1925, s. 225, suit includes action.

(2) Suit of Court, an attendance which a tenant owes to his lord's court.

(3) Suit Covenant, where one has covenanted to do suit and service in his lord's court.

(4) Suit Custom, where service is owed time out of mind.

(5) Suithold, a tenure in consideration of certain services to the superior lord.

(6) The following one in chase, as fresh suit.—Cowel.

Suitor, or Sutor, one that sues; a petitioner; a suppliant; a wooer.

Suitors' Fee Fund, a fund in the Court of Chancery into which the fees of suitors were paid, and out of which were defrayed the salaries of various officers of that Court.

Suit-silver, or Suter-silver, a small rent or sum of money paid in some manors to excuse the freeholders' appearance at the courts of their lord.

Sulh Ælmyssan, plough arms.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Sullery, a plough-land.—Co. Litt. 5 a.

Sumage, toll for carriage on horseback.—Cowel.

Summary, an abridgment, brief compendium; summary application, one made to a court or judge without the formality of a full proceeding. See PLENARY.

Summary Judgment, under R. S. C. Ord. III., Rule 6, and Order XIV., extended to recovery of land for non-payment of rent by R. S. C. of January, 1902. This procedure has been very largely followed in recent years. See LEAVE TO DEFEND.

Summary Jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of a court to give a judgment or make an order itself forthwith, e.g., to commit to prison for contempt, to punish malpractice in a solicitor, or, in the case of justices of the peace, a jurisdiction to convict an offender themselves instead of committing him for trial by a jury. The mode of exercising this latter jurisdiction, which is given in particular instances by very numerous particular statutes, is generally regulated by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 1848 and 1879. Several amendments have been made in the law by the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, and Criminal Justice Act, 1925; see also HUSBAND AND WIFE. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Justices' and Stone's Justices Manual; and also SESSIONS OF THE PEACE.

Summary Jurisdiction, Court of, 'means' in an Act of Parliament 'any justice or justices of the peace, or other magistrate by whatever name called, to whom jurisdiction is given by, or who is authorized to act under, the Summary Jurisdiction Acts' (Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 13, sub-s. 11); but does not include justices at a licensing meeting: see Boulter v. Kent Justices, 1897, A. C. 556, reversing and overruling decisions of the Court of Appeal.

Summer-hus Silver, a payment to the lords of the wood on the Wealds of Kent, who used to visit those places in summer, when their under-tenants were bound to prepare little summer-houses for their reception, or else pay a composition in money.—Customale de Newington juxta Sittingburn, M.S.

Summer Time. See TIME.

Summing up. The recapitulation of evidence or parts of it by a judge to a jury, with directions as to what form of verdict they are to give upon it.

Summoneas, a writ-judicial of great diversity, according to the divers cases wherein it was used. Obsolete.

Summoners, petty officers, who cite and warn persons to appear in any court.—Fleta, l. 9.

Summonitiones aut citationes nullæ liceant fieri intra palatium regis. 3 Inst. 141.—(Let no summonses or citations be served within the king's palace). See Att.-Gen. v. Dakin, (1869-70) L. R. 4 H. L. 338; Combe v. De la Bere, (1881-82) 22 Ch. D. 316.

Summonitores Scaccarii, officers who assisted in collecting the revenues by citing the defaulters therein into the Court of Exchequer.

Summons [fr. the writ called summones—Pegge's Anecd. of the Eng. Lang., 2nd ed. 173], a call of authority, admonition to appear in court, a citation.

1. To commence Action in High Court.—By R. S. C. Ord. II., r. 1 (see Annual Practice):—

Every action in the High Court shall be commenced by a writ of summons, which shall be indorsed with a statement of the nature of the claim made, or of the relief or remedy required in the action, and which shall specify the Division of the High Court to which it is intended that the action should be assigned.

See also SUMMARY JUDGMENT.

2. To Judges' or Masters' Chambers.—The means by which one party brings the other before a judge (or a master) to settle matters of detail in the procedure of a suit; as, for directions; to modify pleadings when inconvenient, to require security for costs, to change the venue, etc. There is an appeal from the decision of a master to the judge, and from the judge's decision to the Court of Appeal.

3. To Court of Summary Jurisdiction.—See s. 1 of Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Justices'), for summons to answer charge which justices may themselves deal with, and s. 9 of Indictable Offences Act, 1848, for summons on charge which justices cannot deal with; and see Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 86), ss. 31 and 32.

4. To a County Court.—After the issue of a plaint, a summons is issued requiring the defendant to attend on a given date to answer the plaintiff's claim. See County Court Rules, 1936, Ord. VIII., and DEFAULT SUMMONS. The attendance of witnesses is enforced by summons (Ord. XX., r. 8).

Summum jus, summa injuria. Summa lex, summa crux. Hob. 125.—(Extreme law is extreme injury. Strict law is strict punishment).

Sumner, or Sumpnour, one who cites or summonses.

Sumptuary Laws, those in restraint of luxury, excess in apparel, etc., as the Statute of Nottingham (10 Edw. 3, stat. 3), de cibariis utendis, repealed by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 64. They were mostly repealed by 1 Jac. 1, c. 25.—2 Hall. Mid. Ages, c. 9, pt. 2, p. 493.

Sunday [fr. sunnan daeg, Sax., the day of the sun], the first day of the week, the Lord's Day, termed in the Sunday Observance Act, 1677 (29 Car. 2, c. 7, infra), 'the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday.' It is a dies non juridicus, but an arrest for crime can be effected on this day; and bail can arrest their principal, and a sergeant-at-arms can apprehend; but no other law proceedings can be taken. By the Sunday Observance Act, 1677, it is enacted that:—

No tradesmen, artificers, workmen, labourers, or other person whatsoever shall do or exercise any worldly labour, business, or work of their ordinary callings [barbers are not within the enactment: Palmer v. Snow, 1900, 1 Q. B. 725] upon the Lord's Day, or any part thereof (works of necessity and charity only excepted).

The Hairdressers and Barbers Shops (Sunday Closing) Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 35), prohibits opening on Sundays (Jewish hairdressers may open on Sunday but must close on Saturday).

The Shops (Sunday Trading Restrictions) Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 53), restricts the opening of shops and trading on Sunday, with certain exceptions, amongst which are: sale of intoxicating liquors, meals or refreshments, flowers, fruit and vegetables, milk and cream, medicines, tobacco, newspapers, etc. (see the First Schedule). There are special provisions for holiday resorts and for persons observing the Jewish Sabbath; such Jewish shops to be closed on Saturday. Also provisions respecting shop assistants serving in those shops which are exempted from closing on Sunday. See title SHOPS.

By the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (s. 13 (2)), a bill of exchange, and therefore both a cheque (s. 73), and a promissory note (s. 89), may be dated on Sunday; but Sunday is a 'non-business' day (s. 92 (a)). By the Sunday Observation Prosecution Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 87)—a temporary Act, continued from time to time by successive 'Expiring Laws Continuance Acts'—prosecutions for offences under the Act of Charles II. may only be commenced with the consent in writing of the chief officer of police, or of two justices of the peace, or a stipendiary magistrate; the consent must be given before information laid (Thorpe v. Priestnall, 1897, 1 Q. B. 159). Rent is payable on a Sunday (Child v. Edwards, 1909, 2 K. B. 753, where it was held that at Common Law Sunday is not a dies non).

Sunday entertainments open to the public for money are forbidden under heavy penalties by the Sunday Observance Act, 1871 (as to which see Warner v. Brighton Aquarium Co., (1875) L. R. 10 Ex. 291); amended by the Remission of Penalties Act, 1875, which allows the Crown to remit the penalties under the Act of 1871 only. Tarling v. Rome, 52 T. L. R. 220 (All-in wrestling and advertisement).

As to Sunday cinemas, see R. v. L. C. C., Ex parte Entertainments Protection Assoc., 1931, 2 K. B. 215, after which the Sunday Entertainments Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 51), was passed, which allows Sunday opening upon certain conditions having been complied with.

The Sunday Observance Acts, 1625, 1677, 1780, 1833, as amended, inter alia prohibit extra-parochial sports and exercise of a carrier's trade on Sunday.

The sale of liquors on Sundays is much restricted: see Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, s. 3, and Sched. VI. As to a 'six-day licence,' which requires entire Sunday closing, see ss. 58 and 60.

The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, by ss. 34, 47 and 48, prohibits Sunday employment of women, young persons and children, with exemption for Jews.

By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LXIV., where any limited time less than six days from or after any date or event is appointed or allowed for doing any act or taking any proceeding, Sunday, Christmas Day, and Good Friday are not to be reckoned in the computation of such limited time (r. 2). See also Milch v. Frankau, 1909, 2 K. B. 100.

Sunday Schools are exempted from poor and other rates by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 40, s. 1.

Sunnud, a prop or support, a patent, charter or written authority, for holding either land or office.—Indian.

Sunrise. In Tutton v. Darke, (1860) 5 H. & N. 647, the question will be found raised whether the time of sunrise is to be reckoned from the first appearance of the beams of the sun above the horizon, or from the time when the entire sun has emerged.

Super altum mare [Lat.] (upon the high sea).

Superannuation Acts, 1834–1835, for pensioning the civil servants of the Crown or public authorities.

The principal Act is the Superannuation Act, 1859 (4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 42), which as amended by the Superannuation Acts, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 10), and 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 44), fixes the scale of pension at  $\frac{1}{10}$ ths and  $\frac{1}{10}$ ths for entrants after 30th September, 1909, of the average annual salary of the three years before retirement, and see (in the specified cases) s. 4 of the 1935 Act, on retirement after ten years' service, and gives an additional  $\frac{1}{10}$ th or  $\frac{1}{10}$ th for every additional year of service up to the fortieth year.

As to local authorities, see Local Government and other Officers Superannuation Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 59), an adoptive Act; schools (elementary), School Teachers (Superannuation) Acts, 1918–1924; others, Teachers (Superannuation) Acts, 1918–1935. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Pensions,' and PENSIONS.

Supercargo, an officer in a ship whose business is to manage the trade. A person employed by commercial owners to take charge of the cargoes exported, to sell them abroad to the best advantage, and to purchase commodities for importation. He goes out and returns home with the ship, thus differing from factors, who have a fixed residence.

Superficiarius, a builder upon another's land under a contract.—Civ. Law.

Superficies, the alienation by the owner of the surface of the soil of all rights necessary for building on the surface, a yearly rent being generally reserved; also a building or erection.—Sand. Just.

Superfluous Lands, lands acquired by a public company under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), but not required for the purposes of the undertaking of the company. Such lands must, by ss. 127 and 128 of the Act, be sold within ten years after the time limited for the completion of the undertaking, the person entitled to the lands from which they were originally severed, or, if he refuse, the adjoining owners, having a right of pre-emption; and if the lands are not so sold, they vest in the adjoining owners.

The Town and Country Planning Act, 1932, 3rd Sched., excepts the operation of ss. 127 to 132 of the L. C. C. Act, 1845, from purchases under the Act of 1932, and see Housing Act, 1936. The law of this subject has given rise to much litigation, the leading case being Great Western Railway Company v. May, (1874) L. R. 7 H. L. 283. See also Dunkhill v. N. E. Ry Co., 1896, 1 Ch. 121; and A.-G. v. Sunderland Corporation, 1930, 1 Ch. 168.

Super-institution, the institution of one in an office to which another has been previously instituted; as where A. is admitted and instituted to a benefice upon one title, and B. is admitted and instituted on the title or presentment of another.—2 Cro. 463.

A church being full by institution, if a second institution is granted to the same church this is a super-institution; concerning which two things have been resolved:—

(1) That the super-institution, as such, is properly triable in the spiritual court; (2) that it is not triable there, in case induction has been given upon the first institution.

The advantage of a super-institution is, that it enables the party who obtains it to try his title by ejectment, without putting him to his quare impedit; but many inconveniences thence following (e.g., the uncertainty to whom tithes shall be paid, and the like), this method has been discouraged.—Mirehouse on Advowsons, 189.

Superintendent Registrar, an officer who superintends the registers of births, deaths, and marriages. There was one in every poor law union in England and Wales. The office was filled as of right by the clerk to the guardians of the union, if he was duly qualified and accepted it. He is now a salaried officer in every registration district, with a registrar in every approved sub-district appointed by the local authority (replacing the guardians); the authorities are county and county boroughs, and, in London, common council, and metropolitan borough councils (Loc. Gov. Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 17)). They were under the supervision of the Registrar-General and (now) of the Ministry of Health. See Births and Deaths Registration Acts, 1836 to 1929.

Superior, the grantor of a feudal right to be held of himself. See Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Superior Courts, the Courts of Chancery, King's (or Queen's) Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, at Westminster, were so called. See these Courts treated of under the proper titles; and see titles HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE; SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE.

Super-jurare, a term anciently used when a criminal endeavoured to excuse himself by his own oath, or the oath of one or two witnesses, and the crime objected against him was so plain and notorious that he was convicted on the oaths of many more witnesses; this was called super-jurare.—Jac. Law. Dict.

Superoneratione pasturæ, a judicial writ that lay against him who was impleaded in the county court for the surcharge of a common with his cattle, in a case where he was formerly impleaded for it in the same court, and the cause was removed into one of the superior courts.—Ibid. Obsolete.

Super prærogativâ regis, a writ which formerly lay against the king's tenant's widow for marrying without the royal licence.—Fitz. N. B. 174.

Supersedeas, a writ that lay in a great many cases; and signified in general a command, on good cause shown, to stay some ordinary proceedings which ought otherwise to proceed.—Fitz. N. B. 236. As to traverse and supersedeas of an inquisition in lunacy, see Lunacy Act, 1890, ss. 101–107; and Patients Estates Rules, 1934, S. R. & O., 1934, No. 269/L2, r. 16.; Mills and Poyser, Lunacy Practice.

Super statuto (1 Edw. 3, c. 12), a writ that lay against the king's tenant holding in chief, who aliened the king's land without his licence.

Super statuto de articulis clerici, a writ which lay against a sheriff or other officer who distrained in the king's highway, or on lands anciently belonging to the church.

Super statuto facto pour seneschal et marshal de roy, etc., a writ which lay against a steward or marshal for holding plea in his court, or for trespass or contracts not made or arising within the king's household.

Super statuto versus servantes et laboratores, a writ which lay against him who kept any servants who had left the service of another contrary to law.

Superstitious Uses. See CHARITIES.

Super-tax. This term was first employed in the Income Tax Act, 1918 (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 40), s. 4, to denote an additional duty of income tax which was then levied upon incomes of over 2,500*l.*, altered to 2,000*l.* by 10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 18, per annum. The duty was at the rate prescribed by Parliament in any year.

By the Finance Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 10), s. 38, super tax has ceased to become chargeable; instead, income tax is charged at a standard rate and persons whose income exceeds a stated amount pay at a higher rate in respect of the excess. The higher tax on the excess is treated as a deferred instalment of income tax and is called SUR-TAX. See ss. 38 and 40 (ibid.).

Supervisor, a surveyor or overseer.

Super visum corporis [Lat.] (upon view of the body). A coroner's inquest must generally be so held; but the Coroners Act, 1887, allows a view to be dispensed with on a second inquest.

Supplemental Answer, one which was filed in Chancery for the purpose of correcting, adding to, and explaining an answer already filed.—Sm. Ch. Pr. 334.

Supplemental Bill, an addition to an original bill in equity, in order to supply some defect in its frame and structure. See BILL IN CHANCERY and STATEMENT OF CLAIM.

Supplemental Bill, Bill in the Nature of a. This bill and the above-named bill were usually confounded together; but a prominent distinction between them seems to have been that a supplemental bill was properly applicable to those cases only where the same parties and the same interest remained before the court; whereas an original bill, in the nature of a supplemental bill, was properly applicable when new parties with new interests, arising from events which have happened since the institution of the suit, were brought before the court.—2 Dan. Chan. Pr., 5th ed. 1396–1401.

Supplemental Claim, a further claim which was filed when further relief was sought after the bringing of a claim.—Sm. Ch. Pr. 655.

Suppletory Oath, the oath of a litigant party in the spiritual and civil law courts.

Suppliant, the actor in, or party preferring, a petition of right. See PETITION DE DROIT.

Supplicavit, a writ which issued out of Chancery for taking surety of the peace, upon articles filed on oath, when one was in danger of being hurt in his body by another; it was addressed to the justices of the peace and sheriff of the county, and was grounded upon 1 Edw. 3, st. 2, c. 16, which ordained that certain persons should be appointed by the chancellor to take care of the peace, etc.—Fitz. N. B. 80.

This writ has been of late years seldom used, for when application has been made to the superior courts, they have usually taken the recognizances there, under the 21 Jac. 1, c. 8.

Supplicum, any corporal punishment; it included death.—Civ. Law.

Supply, Commissioners of, persons appointed to levy the land tax in Scotland, and to cause a valuation roll to be annually made up, and to perform other duties in their respective counties. See 19 & 20 Vict. c. 93; and Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Supply, Committee of. All bills which relate to the public income or expenditure must originate with the House of Commons, and all bills authorizing expenditure of the public money are based upon resolutions moved in a Committee of Supply, which is always a Committee of the whole House. See MONEY-BILL.

Support, to support a rule or order is to argue in answer to the arguments of the party who has shown cause against a rule or order nisi.

Support, the help which every landowner receives at the boundary of his land from his neighbour's land, which lies close to his and prevents its falling in and crumbling away, as it would do if his neighbour dug away the surface of his land to the very edge.—Goddard on Easements. The right of an owner to the support of surface in its natural position is a presumption of Common Law and not part of a grant of mines or power to work the same, and a power to let down the surface must be expressly granted in a lease (Warwickshire Coal Company v. Coventry Corporation, 1934, Ch. 488). As to the right of support for buildings, see, further, the leading case of Dakon v. Angus, (1881) 6 App. Cas. 740, in which it was held by the House of Lords that there is no natural right to lateral support for buildings. This is an easement which may be acquired by twenty years' uninterrupted, peaceable, and open enjoyment of that building. In the case of the removal of support to the surface by mining, the cause of action appears to be the damage as and when it occurs, and the Statute of Limitations is no bar however long since the cause of damage may have occurred, but depreciation in selling value caused by apprehension of future mischief gives no cause of action and the risk of future subsidence must not be taken into account (West Leigh Colliery v. Tunncliffe & Hampson, 1908, A. C. 27).

The right to support does not extend to support by underground percolating waters; abstracting these so as to let down the surface is damnum absque injuria: see Acton v. Burnell, (1843) 12 M. & W. 324.

Suppressio veri (SUGGESTIO FALSI [Lat.] (a suppression of the truth), one of the classes of fraud.

Supra, above. This word occurring by itself in a book refers the reader to a previous part of the book, like ante.

Supra Protest, after 'protest' (see PROTEST). There may be either acceptance or payment of a bill of exchange by a person other than the drawee or acceptor or other person liable, after it has been protested for non-acceptance or non-payment. The full term is 'acceptance (or payment) supra protest for honour', i.e., for the honour or in relief of the person liable. The rights and liabilities of the parties are regulated by the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, ss. 65-68; and see Byles on Bills, chs. 20, 21.

Suprema potestas selsam dissolvere potest. Bacon.—(Supreme power can dissolve itself.)

Supremacy, sovereign dominion, authority, and pre-eminence.

Supremacy, Act of (1 Eliz. c. 1), by which supreme ecclesiastical jurisdiction was 'for ever' united to the imperial Crown. See CROWN.

Supremacy, Oath of, the abolished oath prescribed for nearly 200 years, together with the oath of allegiance, was to be taken by various high officers and persons by 1 W. & M. c. 8, and also by the Bill of Rights, 1 W. & M. sess. 2, c. 2, and is to this effect:—

I, A. B., do swear that I do from my heart abhor, detest, and abjure as impious and heretical this damnable doctrine and position, that Princes excommunicated or deprived by the Pope, or any authority of the see of Rome, may be deposed or murdered by their subjects or any other whatsoever. And I do declare that no foreign prince, person, prelate, state or potentate hath or ought to have any jurisdiction, power, superiority, pre-eminence or authority, ecclesiastical or spiritual, within this realm. Se help me God.

This oath had to be taken by all clergy on their ordination until the passing of the Clerical Subscription Act, 1865, when a single oath, as prescribed by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 48, was substituted for the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, to the effect inter alia to maintain the Protestant succession to the Crown and declaring that 'no foreign prince, prelate, state or potentate hath or ought to have any jurisdiction, power, superiority, pre-eminence or authority, ecclesiastical or spiritual, within this realm.'

The oath of supremacy was abolished generally by the Promissory Oaths Act, 1868, s. 9, and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 48 was expressly repealed by the revising Promissory Oaths Act, 1871. See, further, OATH.

Supreme Court of Judicature. By Judicature Act, 1925, s. 1, there shall be a Supreme Court of Judicature in England consisting of His Majesty's High Court of Justice (referred to as the High Court), and His Majesty's Court of Appeal (referred to as the Court of Appeal).

Formerly, by the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873, ss. 3 and 4 (amended by Jud. Act, 1875, s. 9), it was enacted that from the commencement of that Act (November 1, 1875: see Judicature Act, 1875, s. 2) the Court of Chancery of England, the Court of Queen's Bench, the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, the Court of Exchequer, the High Court of Admiralty, the Court of Probate, and the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, should be united and consolidated together, and should constitute one Supreme Court of Judicature in England; the said Supreme Court to consist of two permanent Divisions, being 'Her [now His] Majesty's High Court of Justice' and 'Her [now His] Majesty's Court of Appeal.'

See, further, HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE and APPEAL, COURT OF.

The Supreme Court of Judicature Acts, 1873 and 1875 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), and (38 & 39 Vict. c. 77), are commonly referred to as 'The Judicature Acts,' and are herein cited as 'Jud. Act, 1873,' and 'Jud. Act, 1875.' The Consolidating Judicature Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49), has repealed both these Acts (except ss. 25 (2), 46, 64, 66 of the Judicature Act, 1873), re-enacting them with amendments.

The following were the more important provisions of those Acts, in addition to those constituting the High Court and Court of Appeal:—The High Court was divided into five divisions, representing the courts whose jurisdiction was transferred thereto (see DIVISIONS); the Court of Appeal received jurisdiction to hear, with a few specified exceptions, appeals from any judgment or order of the High Court; power was given to each division to administer law and equity concurrently, with preference for the rules of equity, where they should be found to be in conflict with the rules of law; district registries were established in various parts of the country for the transaction of litigious business up to actual trial; counter-claims, and the power of a defendant to bring in 'third parties,' were introduced; new rules of pleading, intending to combine the brevity of the Common Law system with the specific character of equity drafting, were substituted for those previously existing; special power was given under 'Order XIV,' to a plaintiff to sign judgment for a liquidated demand unless the defendant could obtain leave to defend; four 'official referees,' with power to report to the Court upon questions of fact, were appointed; and the Chancery practice of leaving costs (which at Common Law 'followed the event' of an action) largely in the discretion of the judge was adopted for all the branches of the High Court.

The Act of 1875 contained a very lengthy schedule of Rules of Practice, taken, with many alterations and additions, from the Common Law and Equity Procedure Acts, the spirit of the two Acts being to adopt for the one new practice what was best in the two old ones. These rules, which had been much amended from time to time, were consolidated, with further amendments in 1883, by the 'Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883,' abbreviated 'R. S. C. 1883.' See RULES.

The Judicature Act of 1925, in the preamble states is an Act to consolidate the Judicature Acts, 1873 to 1910, and other enactments relating to the Supreme Court of Judicature in England and the administration of justice therein. See the Yearly Practice (or the Red Book, where there is a comparative table, showing how the various enactments repealed have been dealt with).

Surcharge, an overcharge of what is just and right; exceeding one's powers or privileges; a declaration by an auditor that a person is personally liable to refund a particular part of public money illegally expended by him (see, e.g., the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 247 (7)); a second or further mortgage. See AUDIT.

Surcharge and Falsify, a mode of taking accounts in Chancery, where the court treats the account as a stated account, but gives liberty to challenge any particular items. 'I am not now upon a question arising on an open general account, but barely upon a liberty given to the plaintiff to surcharge and falsify. The onus probandi is always on the party having that liberty; for the court takes it as a stated account, and establishes it; but if any of the parties can shew an omission, for which credit ought to be [given], that is a surcharge; or if anything is inserted, that is a wrong charge, he is at liberty to show it, and that is falsification': Pit v. Cholmondeley, (1754) 2 Ves. Sen. p. 565, per Lord Hardwicke, L.C. See R. S. C. Ord. XXXIII., r. 5.

Sur cui in vita. See CUI IN VITA.

Sur Disclaimer, Writ of Right of, abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27.

Surety, hostage, bondsman; one that gives security for another; one that is bound for another. A surety who discharges the liability of the principal debtor is entitled to an assignment of all the securities held by the creditor, and is entitled to contribution from his co-sureties (see Steel v. Dixon, (1881) 17 C. D. 825).

In the case of fidelity guarantees the security is discharged if a material alteration takes place in the risk, e.g., change of duties (Pybus v. Gibb, (1856) 6 E. & B. 902), or upon non-disclosure by the person to whom the guarantee is given of a matter affecting the contract, such as dishonesty of the employee (see Phillips v. Foxall, (1872) L. R. 7 Q. B. 666), and see Partnership Act, 1890, s. 18; also MERCANTILE LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1856; GUARANTEE.

Surgeon [corrupted fr. chirurgion], is properly one who cures diseases or injuries by manual operation. See MEDICAL PRACTITIONER and PHYSICIAN.

The Royal College of Surgeons in England was incorporated by charter of the 14th September in the seventh year of Queen Victoria. It had, however, been previously incorporated.

As to the power of the college to make bye-laws, see 38 & 39 Vict. c. 43.

Surname [fr. surnom, Fr.] It is a great dispute whether we should write surname or surname; on the one hand, there are a thousand instances in court rolls and other ancient muniments where the description of the person is written over the Christian name, this only being inserted in the line; and the French always write surnom. There is, however, no impropriety to say surname, since these additions are so apparently taken from our sires, [or fathers], the family name; the name over and above the Christian name.—Encyc. Londin. The part of a name which is not given in baptism; the last name; the name common to all members of a family. Surnames were originally acquired by accident and retained by custom. They may be changed at will, provided notice be given by advertisement or otherwise so as to prevent fraud or mistake, or by royal licence from the Heralds' Office. See NAME.

Surplice Fees, fees payable on ministerial offices of the Church, such as baptisms, funerals (see MORTUARY), marriages, etc.

Surplus, Surplusage, a supernumerary part, an overplus, what remains when everything is satisfied.

Surprise. When the evidence produced by the one side is such as from the nature of the circumstances could not have been reasonably expected by the other side, and there is reason to believe that this evidence, if foreseen, might have been rebutted, contradicted, or explained, the Court grants a new trial, on such conditions as to costs as seems fit. See also NONSUIT and TRIAL.

Surrebutter. This was the last pleading hearing a name at Common Law; a plaintiff's answer to a defendant's rebutter. See now PLEADING and REJOINDER.

Surrejoinder, an answer to a rejoinder; a pleading by the defendant. See now PLEADING and REJOINDER.

Surrender [fr. sursum redditio], an assurance restoring or yielding up an estate, the operative verbs being 'surrender and yield up.' The term is usually applied to the giving up of a lease before the expiration of it: it generally means the giving up of a lesser estate to a greater; a release is the giving up of a greater to a less interest, enlarging the latter.

The effect of a surrender is to pass and merge the estate of the surrenderor to, and into, that of the surrenderee.

By the combined operation of s. 3 of the Statute of Frauds, and the Real Property Act, 1845, s. 3, now replaced by ss. 51 to 55 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, every express surrender must be in writing, and every express surrender of a more than three years' term must be by deed. As to surrenders of leases by mortgagors or mortgagees, in possession, see s. 100, L. P. Act, 1925. But there may be an implied surrender or, as it is called in the Statute of Frauds, a surrender 'by act and operation of law'—that is, as defined by Phene v. Popplewell, (1862) 12 C. B., N. S. 334, by anything which amounts to an agreement by the tenant to abandon and by the landlord to resume possession of the demised premises, e.g., by the delivery and acceptance of keys, by the entering of the parties into a new contract of tenancy, or by the landlord accepting a new tenant. See Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant.

Surrender of Copyholds. The following note affects the title to copyholds, as it existed before their abolition by the Law of Property Act, 1922. Copyholds were not, as a general rule, alienable by any of the Common Law assurances. A surrender (which is vocabulum artis) is the yielding up of a legal tenancy in a copyhold estate, either by express words or operation of law, by the tenant after admittance, or by his lawful appointed attorney, either in or out of court, to the lord of the manor in person, his chief steward, or under-steward; or, by special custom, to the bailiff, beadle, or reeve, or to certain tenants of the manor, either as a relinquishment or resignation of such estate, or as the medium of conveying or transferring it to another. Surrenders were made in various forms—in some manors by a rod, in others by a straw, in others by a glove, or some other symbol, which is delivered by the surrenderor to the steward or other person taking the surrender in the name of seisin. When a copyholder surrendered for a valuable consideration, the land was bound both at law and in equity, and he was prevented from surrendering to any other person; but the whole legal estate remained in him, and he had a right to retain the possession, subject to his accounting for the mesne profits should the surrenderee be afterwards admitted; and if the surrenderor died, the estate devolved upon his customary heir, but he was a trustee for the surrenderee. A surrender is not affected by the death of the parties, and the transfer may notwithstanding be completed.

Surrenders of copyholds were governed by the same rules as Common Law conveyances.

An equitable interest in copyholds was not the subject of surrender, except in the instance of a surrender for the purpose of barring an entail, but it was assignable. The assignee of an equitable estate, on taking a surrender from the person in whom the legal copyhold interest was vested, might compel an admission upon the payment of a single fine.—Consult Scriven or Elton on Copyholds.

Surrender of Fugitives. Penal laws of foreign countries are strictly local, and affect nothing more than they can reach and can be seized by virtue of their authority. A fugitive who passes hither comes with all his transitory rights. He may recover money held for his use, and stock, obligations, and the like; and cannot be affected in this country by proceedings against him in that which he has left, beyond the limits of which such proceedings do not extend. 'The lex loci must needs govern all criminal jurisdiction, from the nature of the thing and the purpose of the jurisdiction.'—Warrender v. Warrender, (1834) 9 Bligh, at p. 119. See EXTRADITION.

Surrenderee, Surrenderor, the persons to or by whom surrender is made.

Surreptitious, fraudulent, stealthy. For the difference between surreptitious and obreptitious fraud, see Sanchez de Matrimonio.

Surrise, to forbear or neglect.—Bract. l. 5.

Surrogate, one that is substituted or appointed in the room of another, as by a bishop, chancellor, judge, etc., especially an officer appointed to dispense licences to marry without banns.—2 Steph. Com.

By the Legal Practitioners Act, 1877 (repealed by, and see now Part IV. of the Solicitors Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 37)), any surrogate, not being 'a qualified practitioner,' i.e., a barrister, solicitor, etc., who for a fee prepares papers on which to found a grant of probate, etc., is liable to a penalty.

Sursum redditio [Lat.], a surrender.

Survey (Ordinance). See ORDNANCE SURVEY.

Surveyor, one who has the overseeing or care of another person's land or works. See HIGHWAYS. There are local authority surveyors, see, e.g., Loc. Gov. Act, 1933, s. 104.

A Court of Surveyors was erected by 33 Hen. 8, c. 39, for the benefit of the Crown. The Court had long fallen into disuse, when the sections of that Act (of which many sections relating to Crown debts are still upon the Statute Book) relating to the Court were repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1863.

Survivorship, the living or one of two or more persons after the death of the other or others. See COMMORIENTES; JOINT TENANCY. In questions of construction of wills the difficulty generally arises in regard to the persons or class of or from whom the survivor is to be ascertained and whether the word has a natural or stipital meaning (see, e.g., Gilmour v. MacPhillamy, 1930, A. C. 712).

Suspend, to forbid an attorney or solicitor or ecclesiastical person from practising for an interval of time.

Suspense, Suspension, a temporary stop or hanging up as it were of a right for a time; also a censure on ecclesiastical persons, during which they are forbidden to exercise their offices or take the profits of their benefices.

Suspension, Pleas in, were those which showed some matter of temporary incapacity to proceed with the action or suit.—Steph. on Plead., 7th ed., 45. See ABATEMENT.

Suspensory Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 88), an Act which suspended the operation of the Government of Ireland Act, 1914, and the Welsh Church Act, 1914, in consequence of the war with Germany.

Sus. per coll. When indictments were in Latin, this abbreviation for suspendatur per collum—‘let him be hanged by the neck’—was the usual indorsement by the clerk of arraigns in the case of a capital sentence. At the present day indorsements are in English, and no special form of words is used.

Suthdure, the south door of a church, where canonical purgation was performed, and plaints, etc., were heard and determined.

Swans. A swan, it is said, is a royal fowl, and all swans which have no other owner belong to the King by his prerogative. See Case of Swans, 7 Rep. 16 a. The Game Act, 1831, s. 24, imposes a penalty not exceeding 5s. on any person who takes a swan's egg on land where he has not the right of killing game. See Protection of Birds Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 52), and ANIMALS.

Swarf-money, warth-money or guard-money, paid in lieu of the service of castleward.

Swear, to put on oath, to administer an oath to. See OATH.

Swearing, the act of declaring upon oath, as to which, see OATH.

Profane swearing and cursing is an offence against God and religion, punishable summarily by fine under the Profane Oaths Act, 1745 (19 Geo. 2, c. 21), of 1s. for every day-labourer, soldier, or seaman; 2s. for every other person under the degree of a gentleman; and 5s. for every person of or above the degree of a gentleman. In Reg. v. Scott, (1863) 33 L. J. M. C. 15, a cumulative penalty of 2l., being for twenty oaths in one day, was held good.

There is also a penalty of 40s. for profane language in the streets, by the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, s. 28, and the Metropolitan Police Act, s. 12.

Swearing the Peace, showing to a judge that one has just cause to be afraid of another in consequence of his menaces, in order to get him bound to keep the peace.

Sweepstakes. The Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 58), subject to the provisions of the Act, all lotteries are illegal, but certain lotteries are exempted (s. 23) small lotteries incidental to certain entertainments; (s. 24) private lotteries; (s. 25) lotteries of Art Unions.

A sweepstake as usually run is a lottery (see Allport v. Nutt, (1845) 14 L. J. C. P. 272; Hardwick v. Lanes, 1904, 1 K. B. 204); as to the scheme promoted by the Duke of Atholl, see 97 J. P. 778. See Lush on Betting and Lotteries, and see LOTTERY.

Sweinnote, Court of, one of the forest-courts, which was anciently held before the verderers as judges, by the steward, thrice in every year, the sweins or freeholders within the forest composing the jury. The principal jurisdiction of this Court was first to inquire into the oppressions and grievances committed by the officers of the forests; and secondly, to receive and try presentments, certified from the court of attachments, against offenders in vert and venison.—4 Inst. 289.

Swimming Baths may be provided by local authorities under the Baths and Wash-houses Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 18), in the same manner as ordinary baths, repealed with its amending Acts and replaced by Part VIII. of the Public Health Act, 1936, ss. 221 to 234. See BATHS AND WASH-HOUSES.

Swoling of Land, so much land as one's plough can till in a year; a hide of land.

Sworn Brothers [fratres jurati, Lat.], persons who, by mutual oaths, covenant to share in each other's fortunes. See Sedg. Edw. Conf. c. 35.

Sworn Clerks in Chancery. These offices are abolished by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103.

Syb and Som, peace and security.—Termes de la Ley.

Syllogism, the full logical form of a single argument. To a legitimate syllogism it is essential that there should be three, and no more than three, propositions—namely, the conclusion, or proposition to be proved, and two other propositions which together prove it, and which are called the premises. There must be three terms—viz., the subject and predicate of the conclusion, and another called the middle term, which must be found in both premises, since it is by means of it that the other two terms are to be connected together, e.g., all men are mortal; John is a man; therefore John is mortal. Consult Jevon's or Mill's or Bain's Logic.

Sylva cædua [subbois, Fr.], wood under twelve years' growth.—45 Edw. 3, c. 23.

Symbolæography, the art or cunning rightly to form and make written instruments. It is either judicial or extra-judicial; the latter being wholly occupied with such instruments as concern matters not yet judicially in controversy, such as instruments of agreements or contracts, testaments or last wills.—West's Symbol. See Dav. Prec. in Conv., vol. i., pp. 1 et seq.

Symbolic Delivery. See SEISIN, LIVERY OF.

Symbolum animæ [Lat.], a mortuary.

Symond's Inn, formerly an Inn of Chancery.

Synallagmatical, that which involves mutual and reciprocal obligations and duties.

Synchronize, to concur in time.

Syncope, to cut short, or pronounce things so as not to be understood.—Cowel.

Syndic, an advocate or patron; a Burgess or recorder; an agent or attorney who acts for a corporation or university; an actor or procurator, an assignee.—Civ. Law. See In the Goods of Eliz. Darke (deceased), (1860) 29 L. J. (Prob. M. & A.) 71.

Syndicate. A body of persons taking part jointly in some venture or undertaking; commercially, a body of persons associated temporarily for the purpose of buying a private business or other property and selling it at a profit—usually to a limited company. Private companies formed to carry out and complete some pending operation or transaction, or some contemplated operation or transaction, are commonly called Syndicates.—Palmer's Co. Prec., pt. I.

Syngraph, a deed, bond, or writing, under the hands and seals of all the parties.—Civ. Law.

Synod, a meeting or assembly of ecclesiastical persons concerning religion; being the same thing in Greek as convocation in Latin.

As to authority of synods in the Church of England, see Canons 139–141.

A synod in Scotland is composed of three or more presbyteries.

Synodal, a tribute or payment in money paid to the bishop or archdeacon by the inferior clergy at the Easter visitation.—25 Hen. 8, c. 10.

Synodales testes, synods-men (corrupted into sidesmen), were the urban and rural deans, now the churchwardens. See SIDESMEN.

T.

T, every person who was convicted of felony, short of murder, and admitted to the benefit of clergy, was at one time marked with this letter upon the brawn of the thumb. The practice is abolished—7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27. See BENEFIT OF CLERGY.

Tabard [fr. tabardum, Low Lat.], a short gown; a herald's coat; a surcoat.

Tabarder, one who wears a tabard or short gown; the name is still used as the title of certain bachelors of arts on the old foundation of Queen's College, Oxford.

Tabellio, a Roman officer who reduced contracts and wills into proper form, and attested their execution.

Tables, under the Companies Act, 1929, First Schedule:—

"A." The model form of Articles of Association for a company limited by shares. See ASSOCIATION, and ss. 8, 115, 333, 379 and 380.

"B." The model form of a Memorandum of Association of a company limited by shares. See ASSOCIATION, and ss. 11 and 379.

"C." The model form of Memorandum and Articles of Association of a company limited by guarantee and not having a share capital. See COMPANY, and ss. 11 and 379.

"D." The same of a company limited by guarantee and having a share capital (ss. 11 and 379).

Table Rents, payments which used to be made to bishops, etc., reserved and appropriated to their table or housekeeping.

Tabula in naufragio [Lat.] (a plank in a shipwreck). See TACKING; ATTENDANT TERM.

Tabulæ nuptiales, a written record of a marriage; or the agreement as to the dos.—Civ. Law.

Tabularius, a notary.—Civ. Law.

Tacfree, exempt from rent, payments, etc.

Tacit relocation, a silent or understood reletting of premises after the expiration of a lease, upon the same terms, etc., as those of such lease.—Scots Term.

Tack, a lease or contract of location; also an addition, supplement; also cattle taken in by a tenant on agistment.

Tack Duty, rent reserved upon a lease.

Tacking. Before 1926 the law was that, 'if a third mortgagee buys in the first mortgage, though it be pendente lite, pending a bill brought by the second mortgagee to redeem the first, yet the third mortgagee having obtained the first mortgage and got the law on his side, and equal equity, he shall thereby squeeze out the second mortgagee.'—Brace v. Duchess of Marlborough, (1728) 2 P. Wms. 491, per Jekyll, M.R. This process was called 'tacking.' But the third mortgagee could not tack unless he made his original advance without notice of the mesne incumbrance: see Marsh v. Lee, (1669) 2 Vent. 337; 1 Ch. Cas. 162; 1 W. & T. L. C. The tacking mortgagee gained this right by virtue of his legal title under the first mortgage, and by the operation of the rule that where the equities (as those under the second and third mortgage) are equal the law shall prevail. 'Tacking' must not be confounded with 'consolidation' of mortgages. See that title.

By the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, s. 7, tacking was abolished, but that section was in the next session repealed by the Land Transfer Act, 1875, s. 129. Tacking has been abolished by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 94, except in the case of further advances made by a prior mortgagee. See MORTGAGE; FURTHER ADVANCE.

Tail [fr. tailleur, Fr., to prune]. An estate-tail was formerly a freehold of inheritance and is now an equitable interest which may be created after 1925 in respect of personality as well as realty by way of trust and which (if not barred or disposed of by will after 1925) will devolve in equity on the person who would have taken realty as heir of the body or as tenant by the curtesy if the Law of Property Act, 1925, had not been passed (s. 130 (4) (ibid.)).

An estate-tail in land now constitutes a settlement (Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 1).

With this and other statutory modifications under the Law of Property Act, 1925, the rules relating to this form of estate are still applicable (a) in the investigation of all titles to land in existence on the 31st December, 1925; (b) in the construction of equitable interests into which these were converted on the 1st January, 1926, or created after that date. An estate-tail, or more accurately now, an equitable interest in tail, is an estate limited to a person and the heirs of his body general or special, male or female, and was the creature of the statute De Donis. The estate, if the entail be not barred, reverts to the donor or reversioner, if the donee die without leaving descendants answering to the conditions annexed to the estate upon its creation, unless there be a limitation over to a third person on default of such descendants, when it vests in such third person or remainder-man.

Before 1926, in order to create an estate-tail by deed, the word 'heir' or 'heirs' must be used (White v. Collins, (1719) 1 Comyns' Rep. 289, 301; 2 Prest. Est. 475), unless the deed was executed since the Conveyancing Act, 1881, when the words 'in tail' without the words 'heirs of the body' might be used: see s. 51. Subject to this Act, the deed must contain, either in direct terms or by reference, words of procreation, to describe the body from whom the heirs are to proceed, or the person by whom they are to be begotten.

By the Legitimacy Act, 1926, s. 3, in tracing descents under entailed interests created after the date of legitimation, a legitimated person will rank according to seniority next after all children born legitimate on the day of his or her legitimation, as if he or she had been born on that day.

In a will technical terms of limitation were before 1926 not necessary, if upon construction it appeared that the words were terms of limitation and not gifts to children or issue as purchasers or otherwise; thus a devise

To A. and his issue; or

To A. and his seed; or children; or sons; or

To A. and his heirs male; or

To A. and his heirs lawfully begotten; or
To A., and if he die before issue, or not having issue, or not having a son, then to another, would have given an estate-tail.

By s. 130 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, an interest in tail or in tail male or in tail female or in tail special (in the Act referred to as an 'entailed interest') may be created by way of trust in any property real or personal, but only by the like expressions as those by which before 1926 a similar estate-tail could have been created by deed not being an executory instrument in freehold land (see s. 60 (4) (b) and (c) of the L. P. Act, 1925, reproducing s. 51 of 1881). It is necessary now either to limit to the heirs of the body etc. (but see s. 131 ibid., and SHELLEY'S CASE), or in tail, i.e., to create the interest. Informal limitations which would have created an entail in wills or executory instruments but would not have created an estate tail by deed before 1926, coming into operation after 1925 will be construed for this purpose according to their effect if the limitations had been limitations before 1926 of personal property (L. P. Act, 1925, s. 130 (2), except personalty settled by reference to land (s. 130 (3)).

Sub-s. (4) of s. 130 provides for the devolution of unbarred estates-tail according to the general law in force before 1926, and by sub-s. (6) an entailed interest shall only be capable of being created by a settlement of real or personal property or the proceeds of sale thereof (including the will of a person dying after 1925), or by agreement for a settlement in which the trusts to affect the property are sufficiently declared.

Subject to his powers and duties as tenant for life under the Settled Land Act, 1925, if a tenant-in-tail grant the fee-simple in the property to another person and his heirs without barring the entail, only a qualified or base fee will pass, commensurate with the estate-tail, capable, however, of being rendered absolute by barring the entail, but until so barred, defeasible by the entry not only of the reversioner, or remainder-man, when he becomes entitled to enter into possession of the estate, but also of the issue-in-tail upon the death of the tenant-in-tail. After 1925 a devise by a tenant-in-tail in possession (but not after possibility of issue extinct and other exceptions) of the estate tail operates as a bar of the entail and passes the fee (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 176; see infra).

This estate or equitable interest possesses the following incidents and privileges:—

(1) It was like a fee-simple formerly subject to curtesy and dower (if not barred); see now s. 130 (4), and see DOWER.

(2) With the exception of a tenant-in-tail after possibility of issue extinct who may be liable for equitable waste, the owner may commit waste upon it without being impeachable for it, and so it is said may his grantee.—3 Leon. 121, but see now L. P. Act, 1925, s. 135, as to equitable waste.

(3) It is liable to every kind of debt to the extent of the debtor's interest in the estate and a trustee in bankruptcy may bar the entail, see Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), ss. 69 et seq., and now by s. 176, L. P. Act, 1925, a tenant-in-tail in possession may after 1925 dispose of the whole estate by will either expressly or by general reference to his entailed estates, and in that case it passes to his personal representatives and is liable for his debts.

(4) It might have been lost by escheat;

by forfeiture for treason or felony (but such forfeiture is now abolished by the Forfeiture Act, 1870); or by extinguishment.

(5) As 'estate owner,' having an inheritable freehold, he has a right to the title-deeds which equity will secure to him; see also s. 98 (3), S. L. Act, 1925.

(6) Although a tenant-in-tail must generally keep down the interest, yet, having only a particular interest, he is not bound to pay off any charge or incumbrance affecting the estate; if, however, he do so, the presumption is that he meant to exonerate the estate (for he might, if he pleased, have acquired the fee-simple), unless he evince the contrary intention by taking an assignment of the incumbrance to a trustee in trust for himself, or by some other express act. As to his powers as tenant for life in regard to the employment of capital money or otherwise to discharge incumbrances, see S. L. Act, 1925, ss. 16 (2), 69, 73.

(7) The donee, if in possession, may exercise the powers of a tenant for life under the Settled Land Acts (S. L. Act, 1925, s. 20).

(8) This estate could not be merged, surrendered, or extinguished by the accession of the fee-simple of the tenant-in-tail except by tenant-in-tail after possibility of issue extinct.—Co. Litt. 27 b; Halsbury, L. E., 'Real Property.'

(9) The issue-in-tail is not bound to complete, either at law or in equity, any contract made by his ancestor as tenant-in-tail, since he claims from the original grantor, and not from his immediate ancestor. If, however, he do any act towards completing such a contract, equity will then compel its performance. See now ss. 63 and 90 of the Settled Land Act, 1925, replacing s. 6, S. L. Act, 1890, in regard to his powers as 'estate owner.'

(10) Neither was such issue bound to pay off his ancestor's incumbrances, nor to keep down the interest thereon; but he is liable to Crown debts under 33 Hen. 8, c. 39, s. 75.

(11) A tenant-in-tail might cut timber and dispose of it, without barring the entail; but if he sold the growing trees, the buyer must sever them during his life, otherwise the issue-in-tail would have been entitled to them as part of the inheritance; and the buyer, though obliged to pay the purchase-money, would not then have been allowed to sever them. These rights have not been impaired by the Settled Land Act, 1925.

(12) If a tenant-in-tail grant estovers, or the vesture of his woods, to another, the grant determines with his death ; for being a charge upon the inheritance, it necessarily ceases when his power is determined.

(13) It may be barred by the tenant-in-tail in possession or by the remainder-man in tail with the consent of the protector of the settlement, though not by the issue-in-tail, except as a base fee (q.v.), under the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74) ; but the entail of offices or dignities cannot be barred.

Before the statute De Donis Conditionalibus, the donee could, after issue born, have alienated the land, whereby the issue would have been disinherited and the donor deprived of his right of reversion. This being the case, the statute declared that the will of the donor should be observed ; and that an estate granted to a man and the heirs of his body should descend to the issue (he not having power to alienate the estate), and that in default of issue, the land should revert to the donor or his heirs. Estates-tail were thus made inalienable, and neither the issue nor the remainder-man could be barred. And many other inconvenient consequences were produced, which quickened the ingenuity of the judicature, until it produced, at length (in its efforts to recover the liberty of alienation), the complicated machinery of fines and recoveries. See FINE ; DONIS CONDITIONALIBUS ; and RECOVERY.

The modes, then, of barring an estate-tail were two : viz., a fine, according to the statute law (which was a compromise of a fictitious action), giving a base fee commensurate with the existence of the issue upon whom the estate-tail would (if unbarred) have devolved, and a recovery at the Common Law (which was a real action carried on to judgment), giving the fee-simple absolute. These were abolished by the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833, here described in consequence of its importance.

The Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833, entitled 'An Act for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries, and for the Substitution of more Simple Modes of Assurance,' which received the royal assent August 28, 1833, and has not been repealed by the land legislation of 1925, abolished all the fictions together with their cumbrous technicality (see RECOVERY). The F. and R. Act, 1833, effected the virtual repeal of the Statute of Westminster 2, and the recognition of the right of barring estates-tail, prescribing and simplifying the mode of disposition.

The general enabling clause (s. 15) enacts, that 'after December 31st, 1833, every actual tenant-in-tail, whether in possession, remainder, contingency, or otherwise, shall have full power to dispose of (by deed enrolled, etc., see ss. 40 et seq., ibid.), for an estate in fee-simple absolute, or for any less estate, the lands entailed, as against all persons claiming the lands entailed by force of any estate-tail which shall be vested in, or might be claimed by, or which, but for some previous Act, would have been vested in, or might have been claimed by, the person making the disposition, at the time of his making the same, and also as against all persons, including the King's most excellent Majesty, his heirs and successors, whose estates are to take effect after the determination, or in defeasance of any such estate-tail ; saving always the rights of all persons in respect of estates prior to the estate-tail in respect of which such disposition shall be made, and the rights of all other persons except those against whom such disposition is by this Act authorized to be made.'

Enrollment has been abolished for deeds executed after 1925 (L. P. Act, 1925, s. 133).

In order to prevent a son tenant-in-tail defeating a strict family settlement, against the wish of his father, the tenant for life, the legislature has introduced a reasonable but unaccountable agent, denominated 'the protector of the settlement,' who is, in many respects, but not in all (as will presently be seen), analogous to the abolished 'tenant to the praepice' (q.v.). The office of the protector is to grant or withhold his consent, which is required to enable a tenant-in-tail in remainder, expectant on an estate of freehold, to bar as well his own issue as also those in remainder, to the same extent as might have been effected by a recovery. It is to be observed that an expectant tenant-in-tail may bar his own issue only, under this Act, without the consent of the protector.

The procedure (now further simplified) is that every disposition of lands by a tenant-in-tail is to be effected by some one of the assurances evidenced by deed (not being a will or a contract either expressed or implied) used for the conveyance of fee-simple estates. If the tenant-in-tail be a feme covert (under coverture which began before 1883) (Law Reform (M. W. and T.) Act, 1935, s. 4, and Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 167), her husband's concurrence only is necessary, but her deed required acknowledgment under the F. and R. Act, 1833, s. 40, if executed before 1926 (L. P. Act, 1925, s. 167).

These modes of assurance of a fee-simple were feoffment (at the Common Law), bargain and sale, covenant to stand seised, a release (under the Statute of Uses), or grant, which is the best mode of assurance, and which must be adopted, if the estate be incorporeal, and now by deed; s. 51, L. P. Act, 1925, replacing Real Property Act, 1845, s. 2, and Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 49; or will (supra).

As to the protector's consent, it may either be given by the same assurance by which the disposition is effected, or by a deed distinct from the assurance, executed either on or at any time before the day on which the assurance is made, otherwise the consent will be void; if the protector consent by a distinct deed, such consent will be deemed absolute and unqualified, unless he refer to the particular assurance, and confine his consent to the disposition thereby made. His consent once given cannot be revoked. A married woman, being a protector, gives her consent in the same manner as if she were a feme sole in respect of her separate estate either by limitation or statute (ss. 42, 43, 44, 45), otherwise if still under a coverture which began before 1883 she and her husband are the 'protector' (F. and R. Act, 1883, s. 24). As to disentailing assurances, see K. and E. under that title and ss. 17 and 18, Settled Land Act, 1925, as to discharge of trustees and freeing the property from the provisions of the S. L. Act, 1925. As to undivided shares see L. P. (Amendment) Act, 1932. See PROTECTOR; RECOVERY, and SETTLED LAND.

Tail after Possibility of Issue Extinct, Tenant in. This estate arises out of a special entail as to the parentage of the issue, when the express condition has become impossible by reason of death. Thus, if an estate be granted to husband and wife, and their issue, male or female, if either of them die without issue, the survivor is tenant-in-tail after possibility of issue extinct; and even if there have been issue, yet if the issue die without issue, then the surviving parent is also such a tenant; and also if an estate be entailed upon a man and his issue from a particular wife, if she die without issue, the interest of the husband becomes reduced to a tenancy-in-tail after possibility of issue extinct. Only a donee in tail-special can become such a tenant, for if the entail be general, such a tenancy can never arise; for whilst he lives he may have issue, the law not admitting the impossibility of having children at any age. As an estate-tail is originally carved out of a fee-simple, so this estate is carved out of a special entail.

There may be tenant-in-tail after possibility, etc., of a remainder as well as of a possession. And thus, if a lease for life be made, remainder to husband and wife in special tail, and the husband die without issue, now is the wife tenant-in-tail after possibility, etc., of this remainder; and if the tenant for life surrender to her, as he may (an estate for one's own life being greater than an estate for the life of another), now she is tenant-in-tail after possibility, etc., in possession.—Lewis Bowles's case, (1616) 11 Rep. 81 a.

This estate must be created by death; it cannot arise out of any arrangement of parties, but ex dispositione legis, and not ex provisione hominis; if, therefore, an estate be given to husband and wife, and the heirs of their bodies, should they afterwards be divorced causâ præcontractûs vel consanguinitatis vel affinitatis, their estate is converted into a joint estate for life, and not into a tenancy-in-tail after possibility of issue extinct, because their estate has been altered by their own act, and not by the act of God. Such a tenancy can endure only for the life of the surviving donee-in-tail, who has no power under the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74), s. 18, to bar the remainders or reversion over, and if he convey his interest to another, such other will be only a tenant pur autre vie, and will be punishable for waste. Apparently, impossibility will not be presumed on account of age.—Co. Litt. 28 a.

The attributes of this estate are these:—

(1) The tenant is dispensable for waste; he may, therefore, not only commit it, but also convert to his own use the property wasted. Equity, however, will restrain him from committing wilful waste.

(2) The estate is liable to forfeiture.

(3) It will merge in a fee-simple or fee-tail, immediately expectant thereon.

(4) The reversioner or remainder-man shall be received upon the tenant's default.

(5) The tenant has the powers of a tenant for life under the Settled Land Act, 1925; see s. 20 (i.).

Tallage [fr. taller, Fr.], a piece cut out of the whole; a share of one's substance paid by way of tribute; a toll or tax.—Covel.

Talle, the fee which is opposed to fee-simple, because it is so minced or pared that it is not in the owner's free power to dispose of it, but it is, by the first giver, cut or divided from all other, and tied to the issue of the donee—in short, an estate-tail. See TAIL.

Tailzie, or Entail, an arbitrary line of succession laid down by a proprietor, in substitution of a legal line of succession.—Scots term. A deed of tailzie creates a Scots entail by which, until 11 & 12 Vict. c. 36, and succeeding Acts, an estate might be tied up for ever. See the Case of the Queensberry Leases, (1819) 1 Bligh, 339; 20 R. R. 61. No entails can now be executed (Entail (Scotland) Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 43)).

Tales de circumstantibus. If a sufficient number of jurors do not appear upon a trial, or if by means of challenges or exemptions a sufficient number of unexceptionable ones do not remain, either party may pray a tales; which is a supply of such men as are summoned upon the panel, in order to make up a deficiency. See County Juries Act, 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. 50), s. 37, and JURY.

Talesman, a person summoned to act as a juror from amongst the bystanders in the court.

Tallfourd's Act. (1) The (repealed) Copyright Act, 1842. See COPYRIGHT.

(2) Giving a mother the custody of children under seven; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54, repealed and replaced by 35 & 36 Vict. c. 12, which extends the age to sixteen. See INFANT.

Tallon, law of retaliation. See LEX TALIONIS.

Tallage, taxation. See DE TALLAGIO NON CONCEDENDO.

Tallagers, tax or toll-gatherers; mentioned by Chaucer.

Tallagium facere, to give up accounts in the Exchequer, where the method of accounting was by tallies.

Talley, or Tally, a stick cut into two parts, on each whereof is marked, with notches or otherwise, which is due between debtor and creditor. It was the ancient mode of keeping accounts; one part was held by the creditor, and the other by the debtor. The use of tallies in the Exchequer was abolished by 23 Geo. 3, c. 82, and the old tallies ordered to be destroyed by 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 15, and destroyed they were in a fire which led to the burning down of the Houses of Parliament.

Tallia, commons in meat and drink.

Tallage. See TAILAGE.

Tally Man, Tally Trade, a system of dealing by which dealers furnish certain articles on credit, upon an agreement for the payment of the stipulated price by certain weekly or monthly instalments.—McCull. Comm. Dict.

W.L.L.

A tally was a common security for money in the days of Edward I. 2 Reeves, ch. 11, p. 253, n. (b). See PEDLARS.

Talookdar, a holder of a talook, which is a small portion of land; a petty land agent.—Indian.

Taltarum's Case, Y. B. 12 Edw. IV. 19 (translated in Tudor's Leading Cases on Real Property), decided that an estate tail could be barred by a common recovery (q.v.).

Tam quam, writ of error from inferior Courts, when the error is supposed to be as well in giving the judgment as in awarding execution upon it. (Tam in redditione judicii, quam in adjudicatione executionis.)

Tangible Property, corporeal property.

Tanistry, or Tanistria, an ancient municipal law or tenure, which allotted the inheritance of lands, castles, etc., to the oldest and most worthy and capable house of the deceased's name and blood, without any regard to proximity. This, in reality, was giving it to the strongest, and naturally occasioned bloody wars in families, for which reason it was abolished in the reign of James I.—Encyc. Londin.; see 3 Hall. Const. Hist., c. xviii., p. 377; Dav. Rep. 28.

Tannahdar, a petty police officer.—Indian.

Tare and Tret. See ALLOWANCE.

Tariff [Span.], a cartel of commerce, a book of rates, a table or catalogue, drawn up usually in alphabetical order, containing the names of several kinds of merchandise, with the duties or customs to be paid for the same, as settled by authority or agreed on between the several States that hold commerce together.

The Customs Tariff Act, 1876, consolidated the then Customs Duties, and some of the duties imposed by that Act are still in force.

In 1932 there was a change in the fiscal policy of this country. By the Import Duties Act, 1932 (22 Geo. 5, c. 8), a general ad valorem customs duty of 10 per cent. was imposed on all imports with additional duties on special classes or descriptions of goods. But imports from Dominions were subject to special agreements and the Ottawa Agreements. The 1932 Act set up an Advisory Committee to make recommendations to the Treasury as to additional customs duties. Since this Act several further duties have been imposed. See CUSTOMS.

Tasmania, formerly called Van Diemen's Land; the name of Tasmania was substituted by Order in Council of July 21, 1855. For union with Australian Colonies, see AUSTRALIA; and for early statutory history.

see 9 Geo. 4, c. 83, and 13 & 14 Vict. c. 59.

Tath. In Norfolk and Suffolk the lords of manors anciently claimed the privilege of having their tenants' flocks or sheep brought at night upon their own demesne lands, there to be folded for the improvement of the ground, which liberty was called by the name of the tath.—Spelm.

Tau, a cross.—Selden.

Tauri liberi libertas, a common bull, because he was free to all the tenants within such a manor, liberty, etc. See BULLS.

Tautology, describing the same thing twice in one sentence in equivalent terms; a fault in rhetoric. It differs from repetition or iteration, which is repeating the same sentence in the same or equivalent terms: the latter is sometimes either excusable or necessary in an argument or address; the former (tautology) never.

Tax [fr. tāsg, Wel.; taxe, Fr. and Dut.], an impost; a tribute imposed on the subject; an excise; tallage.

Some general principles of taxation have been said to be:—

(1) The subjects of every State ought to contribute to the support of the Government as nearly as possible in proportion to their respective abilities; that is, in proportion to the revenue which they respectively enjoy under the protection of the State. In the observation or neglect of this maxim consists what is called the equality or inequality of taxation.

(2) The tax which each individual is bound to pay ought to be certain and not arbitrary. The time of payment, the manner of payment, the quality to be paid, ought all to be clear and plain to the contributor, and to every other person.

(3) Every tax ought to be levied at the time, or in the manner, in which it is most likely to be convenient for the contributor to pay it.

(4) Every tax ought to be so contrived as both to take out and keep out of the pockets of the people as little as possible over and above what it brings into the public treasury of the State.

Taxes are either direct or indirect. A direct tax is one that is demanded from the very persons who are intended or desired to pay it. Indirect taxes are those which are demanded from one person, in the expectation and intention that he shall indemnify himself at the expense of another, such as the excise or customs. Taxes may be laid on any one of the three sources of income (rent, profits, or wages); or a uniform tax on all of them.—Smith's Wealth of Nat., b. 5, ch. ii.; Mill's Pol. Econ., b. 5, chs. iii, iii.

All duties of Inland Revenue are collected by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue (Inland Revenue Regulation Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 21)), subject to the direction of the Treasury, of excise, by the Commissioners of Customs and Excise: see Finance Act, 1908, s. 4, and Orders in Council made thereunder. As to the collection of taxes for a limited period under the authority of a mere resolution of the House of Commons, see the Provisional Collection of Taxes Act, 1913 (3 Geo. 5, c. 3). See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Revenue.' See also DEATH DUTIES; ESTATE DUTY; INCOME-TAX; LAND-TAX.

Taxatio Ecclesiastica, the valuation of ecclesiastical benefices made through every diocese in England, on occasion of Pope Innocent IV. granting to King Henry III. the tenth of all spirituals for three years. This taxation was first made by Walter, Bishop of Norwich, delegated by the Pope to this office in 38 Hen. III., and hence called Taxatio Norwicensis. It is also called Pope Innocent's Valor.

Taxation of Costs. The mode by which certain officers of the various courts allow or disallow the sums claimed by solicitors from their clients, or by the one party in an action from the other. In the High Court taxation is carried out by Taxing Masters who are Masters of the Supreme Court (R. S. C. Ord. LXI., r. 1b), and in county courts by the registrars.

As between party and party a taxation of costs is always had, and the costs disallowed cannot be recovered by the successful from the unsuccessful party, but must be paid by such successful party to his solicitor unless they be disallowed as between solicitor and client.

Costs as between solicitor and client can be recovered by a public authority from an unsuccessful defendant by virtue of s. 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893; and also in an action for the infringement of a patent by the plaintiff, if in a prior action he has obtained a certificate of the validity of his patent, under s. 35 (as amended) of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907.

Taxation as between solicitor and client, which may be had whether the business be transacted in court or not, is only obtained upon the application of the party chargeable by a signed bill of costs, until the expiration of a month from the delivery of which the solicitor is disabled, by the Solicitors Act, 1932, s. 65, from suing the client upon such bill. The mode of taxation is pointed out by that enactment, and in particular it is provided (with an exception for 'special circumstances') that if the bill when taxes be less by a sixth part than the bill delivered, the solicitor must pay the costs of the taxation, but if otherwise, the party chargeable must pay them (s. 66 (5)).

The Taxing Master's Certificate can be reviewed by application within fourteen days to a judge in chambers (R. S. C. Ord. LXV., r. 27 (4)), but there is no further appeal except by leave (Re Jerome, 1907, 2 Ch. 145). See Costs, and consult Ann. Pract.; Morgan and Wurtzburg on Costs.

Taxers, two officers yearly chosen in Cambridge to see the true gauge of all the weights and measures.

Taximeter. By s. 6 of the London Club and Stage Carriage Act, 1907 :—

The expression 'taximeter' means any appliance for measuring the time or distance for which a cab is used, or for measuring both time and distance, which is or for the time being approved for the purpose by or on behalf of the Secretary of State.

The relationship between a taxi-cab driver and the company owning the taxi-cabs is not usually that of master and servant (Doggett v. Waterloo Taxi-Cab Co., 1910, 2 K. B. 336).

Taxing Masters, officers of the Supreme Court, who examine and allow or disallow items in bills of costs. As to their powers and duties, see R. S. C. Ord. LXV., r. 27, Regs. 25 et seq.

Tax-ward, an annual payment made to a superior in Scotland, instead of the duties due to him under the tenure of ward-holding. Abolished.

Taylor's (Michael Angelo) Act (57 Geo. 3, c. xxix.), for paving certain streets of London. See MICHAEL ANGELO TAYLOR'S ACT.

Tea. The Sale of Food (Weights and Measures) Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 63), makes it an offence to sell tea otherwise than by net weight and in multiples of ounces and pounds. Tea was first taxed in 1660 (12 Car. 2, c. 23) as a beverage at 8d. a gallon, and afterwards in the leaf at 5s. per lb. in 1688 (1 W. & M. Sess. 2, c. 6).

Team, or Theame [fr. tyman, Sax., to teem or bring forth], a privilege granted by royal charter to a lord of a manor, for the having, restraining, and judging of bondmen and villeins, with their children, goods, and chattels, etc.—Glan. i. 5, c. 2.

Teamster, a waggoner who carries goods for hire.

Technical Instruction. By the repealed Technical Instruction Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 76), technical instruction, i.e., by s. 8, instruction in the principles of science and art applicable to industries, but not including the teaching the practice of any trade or industry or employment, might be provided by local authorities at the expense of the ratepayers; and by the repealed Technical Instruction Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 4), a local authority might provide for a supply of such instruction in a school outside its own district, so far as necessary for the requirements of its own district, in cases where similar provision could not be so advantageously made by aiding a school within its own district; but these Acts are superseded by the Education Act, 1921, Part VI., and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 35), ss. 83 and 113.

Teding-penny, Tething-penny, Tithing-penny, a small duty to the sheriff from each tithing, towards the charge of keeping courts, etc., from which some of the religious houses were exempted by royal charter.

Teep, a note of hand, a promissory note given by a native banker or money lender to zemindars and others, to enable them to furnish government with security for the payment of their rents.—Indian.

Tehsildar, one who has charge of the collections; a native collector of a district acting under a European or zemindar.—Indian.

Teind-masters, those entitled to tithes.

Teinds, tithes. See addenda.

Teinland, thaneland, which see.

Telegraphizæ, written evidence of things past.—Blount.

Telegraphs. See the Telegraph (Construction) Acts, 1863 to 1925, by which provisions are made for transferring telegraphs to the Postmaster-General. Telegraph means a wire or wires used for the purpose of telegraphic communication, with any casing, coating, tube, or pipe inclosing the same, and any apparatus connected therewith for the purpose of telegraphic communication, and any apparatus for transmitting messages or other communications by means of electric signals (Acts of 1863, s. 3, and 1869, s. 3). This definition includes telephones. The destruction or removal of an electric telegraph or the obstruction of messages is a misdemeanour by the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, ss. 37, 38, and as to offences in regard to telephones, see Post Office Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 15). See WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY. As to the monopoly possessed by Government by means of the exclusive privileges given by the Acts to the Postmaster-General, see Postmaster-General v. National Telephone Co., 1909, A. C. 269.

As to disputes, see RAILWAY AND CANAL COMMISSION.

Telephone. See TELEGRAPHS, and the Telephone Transfer Act, 1911, and the amending Act of the same year, 1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 56, and later amending Acts.

Teller, one who numbers; a numberer; four officers in the Exchequer, whose offices were abolished by 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 15. In Parliament two tellers are appointed to count the votes on a division in either House of Parliament.

Telligraphum [fr. tellus, Lat., land; and γράφω, Gk., to write], an Anglo-Saxon charter of land.—1 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, c. 1, p. 10.

Tellwork, that labour which a tenant was bound to do for his lord, for a certain number of days.

Tementale, or Tenementale, a tax of two shillings upon every ploughland; a decenary. See that title.

Temple, two Inns of Court, thus called because anciently the dwelling-place of the Knights-Templars. On the suppression of that Order, they were purchased by some professors of the Common Law, and converted into hospitia, or inns of court. They are called the Inner and Middle Temple, in relation to Essex House, which was also a part of the House of the Templars, and called the Outer Temple, because situated without Temple-bar. The Inner and Middle Temples are now within the assessment area of the City of London by the Loc. Gov. Act, 1929, s. 18(h). Encyc. Londin. Consult Addison's Hist. of the Knights Templars; Bellot's Inner and Middle Temple. See INNS OF COURT.

Temporal Lords, the peers of the realm; the bishops are not in strictness held to be peers, but merely lords of parliament.—2 Steph. Com.

Temporality, or Temporals, secular possessions, as distinguished from ecclesiastical rights; such revenues, lands, and tenements as archbishops and bishops have had annexed to their sees by the kings and others, from time to time, as they are barons and lords of Parliament.

Temporality, the laity; secular people.

Temptatio, or Tentatio, a trial or proof.

Tempus personis, mast-time in the forest, which is about Michaelmas to St. Martin's Day, November 11.—Cowel.

Tempus semestre, half a year, and not six lunar months.—West. II. c. 5.

Tena, a coil worn by ecclesiastics.

Tenancy [fr. tenentia, law Lat.], the condition of a tenant; the temporary possession of what belongs to another by his consent.

Tenancy in Common. Legal estate in undivided shares in land has been abolished by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 1, which reduced the interest of tenants-in-common to that of a cestui que trust under a trust for sale of land. The following notes have been kept verbatim to explain titles as they existed immediately before 1926. This estate is created when several persons have several distinct estates, either of the same or of a different quantity, in any subject of property, in equal or unequal shares, and either by the same act or by several acts, and by several titles, and not a joint title. A tenancy-in-common will, as a rule, be construed to exist wherever the instrument creating it indicates that the land is to be held in shares, equally, or in moieties, or the nature of the transaction is such as to preclude the intention of survivorship such as an acquisition of land by partners for the purposes of their business.

A tenancy-in-common differs from a joint-tenancy in this respect: joint-tenants have one estate in the whole, and no estate in any particular part; they have the power of alienation over their respective aliquot parts, and by exercising that power, may give a separate and distinct right to their particular parts. Tenants-in-common have several and distinct estates in their respective parts which may be in unequal shares and for estates of unequal duration; hence the difference in the several modes of alienation and assurance by them. Each tenant-in-common has, in contemplation of law, a distinct tenement and a distinct freehold.

Tenants-in-common hold by unity of possession, because neither of them knows his own severalty, and therefore they all occupy promiscuously. This is the only unity belonging to the estate; for since the tenants may hold different kinds of interest, so there exists no necessary unity of interest, and there is no unity of title, for one may claim by descent, and another by purchase; also the estate may vest in each tenant at different times. There being no entirety of interest among tenants-in-common, each is seised of a distinct though undivided share ; they hold neither ' per mie ' (not at all) nor ' per tout ' and consequently the jus accrescendi does not apply to them.

This estate is subject to curtesy and dower. It is dissolvable—

(1) By a voluntary deed of partition ;

(2) By the union of all the titles and interests in one tenant by grant, devise, surrender, or otherwise, which reduces the whole estate to a severalty ;

(3) By compulsory partition.

See PARTITION ; UNDIVIDED SHARES.

Tenancy, Joint. See JOINT TENANCY.

Tenant, one that holds land of any one inclusive of the sovereign ; it is therefore applicable to every subject holding land in this country ; but the word is always used relatively, and as the relation to the sovereign is seldom called in question, it more commonly signifies one who holds of another subject, as (formerly) of the lord of a manor, or of a landlord : the owner is seldom characterized as tenant except where it is necessary to particularize the quantity of his estate. The term is frequently used to denote a lessee.

Tenant at Sufferance. See SUFFERANCE.

Tenant at Will. See WILL, ESTATE AT.

Tenant by Copy, i.e., by copy of the Court Roll, a copyholder. See COPYHOLDS.

Tenant by the Curtesy. See CURTESY OF ENGLAND.

Tenantable Repair. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Tenant-right, in England—(1) a custom ensuring to an out-going tenant compensation from his landlord for not being able to reap the full benefit of labour or improvements expended or made during the tenancy ; or (2) the money due in pursuance of the custom. There is an implied contract by the landlord to pay this (Fovell v. Gaskoin, (1852) 7 Ex. 273), and a custom throwing liability on the incoming tenant is bad (Bradburn v. Foley, (1878) 3 C. P. D. 129), though as a matter of fact and for convenience the incoming tenant generally pays the compensation by agreement with the landlord.

Also the name given to tenures in ancient demesne in the North of England.

See also CUSTOM OF THE COUNTRY and AGRICULTURAL HOLDINGS ; MARKET GARDEN.

In Ireland, also a custom either ensuring a permanence of tenure in the same occupant without liability to any other increase of rent than may be sanctioned by the general sentiment of the community ; or entitling a tenant of a farm to receive purchase-money, amounting to so many year's rent, on its being transferred to another tenant. It has long prevailed in Ulster.—1 Mill's Pol. Econ. 385. See 33 & 34 Vict. c. 46 (the Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act, 1870), 44 & 45 Vict. c. 49 (the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881), and 19 Geo. 5, c. 14 (the Northern Ireland Land Act, 1929).

Tenants-in-Common with Cross Remainders in Tail. Each of the tenants-in-common takes his or her (now equitable) share in tail. On failure of his or her issue that share falls to the remaining grantees or devisees as tenants-in-common in tail. On failure of issue of any of the remaining grantees or devisees, that share goes to the then remaining tenants-in-common in tail in the same way and so on until only one line of the original grantees or devisees is left. In wills, cross remainders in tail are generally implied if there is a gift to a class as tenants-in-common in tail with a gift over, but not if the grant is by deed.

Tenants' Compensation Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 57), repealed by and see now the Allotments Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 57), ss. 1 and 4 (2). At Common Law a mortgagor, and therefore any tenant of his becoming such after mortgage without concurrence of the mortgagee, is a mere trespasser, liable to ejectment without notice, and so liable to lose all his growing crops, etc., without compensation from the mortgagee. The Tenants' Compensation Act, to remedy this hardship, provided that where a person occupies land under a contract of tenancy (whenever made) with the mortgagor, which is not binding on the mortgagee, the occupier shall, as against the mortgagee who takes possession, be entitled to such compensation for crops, improvements, or other matters whatever, under the custom of the country, or the Agricultural Holdings Act, as would be due to him but for the mortgagee taking possession ; and further gives such occupier a right to six months' notice, before being deprived of possession by the mortgagee otherwise than in accordance with the contract of tenancy. The provisions of the Act are incorporated in s. 15 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923 (see that title). The Act itself was repealed by the Allotments Act, 1922. See Jackson or Aggs on Agricultural Holdings.

As to the respective statutory rights of mortgagors and mortgagees in possession to grant leases and accept surrendors, see Conveyancing Acts, 1881, s. 18; 1911, s. 3, replaced in regard to mortgages effected after 1925 by s. 99, Law of Property Act, 1925.

Tende, to tender or offer.—O. N. B. 123.

Tender, offer; proposal for acceptance.

A tender of satisfaction is allowed to be made in most actions for money demands. It need not be made by the debtor personally to the creditor personally; it may be made through an authorized agent, and a tender to one of several joint creditors is sufficient. A tender must be absolute and unconditional, and the money must be actually produced at the time of the tender, unless that be dispensed with by the creditor; but a tender under protest is good in law, so long as no condition is imposed (Greenwood v. Sutcliffe, 1892, 1 Ch. 1—C. A.).

If a defence set up tender, the money alleged to be tender must be paid into court.—R. S. C. Ord. XXII.—r. 1; Cty. Ct. R. Ord. X., r. 20.

By the Coinage Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 10), s. 4, it is provided that a tender of payment of money, if made in coins legally issued by the Mint in accordance with the provisions of that Act, and not called in, and not become materially diminished in weight, shall be legal tender:—

‘In the case of gold coins for payment of any amount; in the case of silver coins for a payment of an amount not exceeding 40s., but for no greater amount; and in the case of bronze coins for the payment of an amount not exceeding 1s., but for no greater amount.’

Bank of England notes under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 98, including notes for 1l. and for 10s. issued by the Bank of England under the Currency and Bank Notes Act, 1928, (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 13), are legal tender for a payment of any amount.

Tender of Amends. See AMENDS.

Tenement [fr. teneo, Lat., to hold], in its vulgar acceptation, is only applied to houses and other buildings, but in its original, proper, and legal sense, it signifies everything that may be holden, provided it be of a permanent nature, whether it be of a substantial and sensible, or of an unsubstantial, ideal kind. Thus liberum tenementum, frank tenement, or freehold, is applicable not only to lands and other solid objects, but also to offices, rents, commons, advowsons, franchises, peerages, etc.—2 Bl. Com. 16. ‘Tenement’ may denote the estate in as well as the land. Halsb. L. E., tit. ‘Real Property.’

Local authorities sometimes refer to separately rated parts of houses or flats as tenements.

Tenementary Land, the outlands of manors, granted to tenants by the Saxon thanes, under arbitrary rents and services.

Tenementis legatis, an ancient writ, lying to the City of London, or any other corporation (where the old custom was, that men might devise by will lands and tenements, as well as goods and chattels), for the hearing and determining any controversy touching the same.—Reg. Brev. 244.

Tenendas, that clause of a charter by which the particular tenure is expressed.

Tenendum, that clause in a deed wherein the tenure of the land is limited. See DEED.

Tenentibus in assisá non onerandis, a writ that formerly lay for him to whom a disseisor had alienated the land whereof he disseised another, that he should not be molested in assize for damages, if the disseisor had wherewith to satisfy them.—Reg. Brev. 214.

Tenheded, or Tienheofed [Sax.], a dean.

Ten Hours Act. The popular name for 10 & 11 Vict. c. 29, which first limited the time of work for women and children in mills and factories—repealed by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, itself repealed by the Act of 1901. See FACTORY.

Tenmentale, or Tenmantale, the number of ten men, which number, in the time of the Saxons, was called a decennary; and ten decennaries made what we call a hundred. Also a duty or tribute paid to the Crown, consisting of two shillings for each ploughland.—Encyc. Londin.

Tenne, tawny, orange, or brusk; orange colour.

In engravings it should be represented by lines in bend sinister crossed by others barways. Heraldic who blazon by the names of the heavenly bodies call it dragon's head, and those who employ jewels, jacinth. It is one of the colours called stainand.—Heraldic term.

Tennis, Game of, legalized by the Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 109).

Tenor, Action of Proving the, an action in Scotland to prove the contents of a lost or mislaid document.

Tenor (spelt ‘tencour’ in s. 88 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (see MAKER)), sense contained; general course or drift. Tenor implies that a correct copy is set out, but the word effect alone implies that the substance only is set out.

Where the appointment of an executor is not express, but only constructive, upon construction of the will or codicil, he is usually called 'executor according to the tenor'; see Williams on Executors; In the Goods of Lush, (1887) 13 P. D. 20.

Tenore est qui legem dat feudo. Craig Jus. Feud., 3rd ed. 66.—(It is the tenor of the feudal grant which regulates its effect and extent.)—Broom's Leg. Max.

Tenore indictamenti mittendo, a writ whereby the record of an indictment, and the process thereupon, was called out of another court into the King's Bench.—Reg. Brev. 69. See CERTIORARI.

Tenore præsentium, by the tenor of these presents; i.e., the matter contained therein, or rather the intent and meaning thereof.—Cowel.

Tenserise, a sort of ancient tax or military contribution.

Tentates panis, the essay or assay of bread.—Blount.

Tenths [decimæ, Lat.], tithes; also the tenth part of the annual value of every spiritual preferment, paid in early times to the pope, transferred from the pope to the Crown by 26 Hen. 8, c. 3, and from the Crown, for the augmentation of small livings, to the Church by 2 Anne, s. 8. See also FIRST FRUITS; BOUNTY OF QUEEN ANNE.

Tenure, the mode of holding property. The only tenures in land now existing with a few unimportant exceptions are (1) free and common socage in fee-simple, including enfranchised copyhold, which is subject to paramount incidents; and (2) a term of years absolute (see LAND). The idea of tenure or holding is said to derive from feudalism, which separated the dominium directum (the dominion of the soil), which it placed mediately, or immediately, in the Crown, from the dominium utile (the possessory title), the right to use the profits in the soil, designated by the term 'seisin,' which is the highest interest a subject can acquire. As to tenures generally, see 2 Bl. Com. 59 et seq.

Without tracing the origin of tenure back into remote antiquity, it is ascertained that there were originally two modes of holding land, viz.:—(1) Allodial (from los, signifying lot), over which the owner had entire and irresponsible dominion, which he could dispose of at his own pleasure, or transmit as an inheritance to his children. The land was also attachable to answer the owner's debts, and could also be made available for commercial enterprise. Such tenure was acquired by the distribution of lands by lot among the Franks. (2) Feudal (from od, possession, or estate, and feo, wages, pay), over which the owner had but a conditional dominion, acknowledging a superior lord, upon whose pleasure the tenure precariously depended, and without whose consent nothing could be done. And this is the groundwork of the feudal system, which displaced the laws obtaining in this country at the time of the Norman Conquest.

Out of feudalism arose the maxim, that all lands in this kingdom were originally granted by our kings, and held mediately or immediately of the king, as lord paramount, in consideration of certain services to be rendered by the holder. There is then no allodial land in England. Those who held immediately from the king were called tenants in capite (in chief), which was the most honourable tenure. This was of two kinds, either ut de honore, where the land was held of the king as proprietor of some honour, castle, or manor, or ut de coronâ, where it was held of him in right of the Crown itself. When these tenants granted portions of their lands to inferior persons they were called mesne (middle) lords or barons, with regard to such inferior holders, who were styled tenants paravail, the ultimate tenant in possession, because they were supposed to make avail or profit of the land. The lands were called feuds (feoda), either proper, which were purely military, given militiæ gratiâ to persons qualified for military service; or improper, which did not, in point of acquisition, services, and the like, strictly conform to the nature of a mere military feud, such as those that were sold and bartered for any equivalent, or granted free from all circumstances, or in consideration of any certain services.

Knight service proper, or tenure in chivalry, was the original and most honourable species of tenure created by a determinate quantity of land called a knight's fee. Its extent was twelve ploughlands, that is, as much land as could be reasonably ploughed in one year by twelve ploughs, or, according to other authorities, 800 acres of land, and others say 680, and its value in those times was 20*l. per annum*. This tenure was granted by words of pure donation, dedi et concessi (I have given and granted); transferred by investiture, i.e., by a solemn and public delivery of the very land itself by the lord to a vassal, in the presence of his other vassals, and perfected by homage and fealty; homage being the acknowledgment of tenure, and fealty the solemn oath made by the vassal of fidelity and attachment to the lord.

The owner of a knight's fee was bound to attend the lord to the wars on horseback, armed as a knight, for forty days in every year, if called upon, and this attendance was his rent or service for the land he held, but the service was usually commuted by payment in the form of escuage or scutage. Among the incidents of this tenure were reliefs or payments upon succession, aids, or contributions to the lord, wardships and marriage of heirs succeeding in infancy and escheat.

Grand serjeanty was another species of tenure which some writers think was superior to knight-service, whereby the tenant was bound, instead of serving the king generally in the wars, to do him some special, certain, and honorary service in person, as to be marshal of his host, or high steward of England, or to carry his banner or his sword, or to be his butler, champion, or other officer at his coronation. In most other respects it was similar to knight-service, only he was not bound to pay aid or escuage; and when a tenant by knight-service paid 5*l.* for a relief, a tenant by grant serjeanty paid one year's value of his land, were it much or little.

At last these military tenures, together with all their grievances, were destroyed at the Restoration. The statute 12 Car. 2, c. 24, enacted that the court of award and liveries, and all wardships, liveries, *primer seisin*s and ouster-lemains, values, and forfeitures of marriage, by reason of any tenure of the king or others, be totally taken away. And that all fines for alienations, tenures by homage, knight-service, and escuage, and also aids for marrying the daughter or knighting the son, and all tenures of the king in capite, be likewise taken away; and that all sorts of tenures held of the king or others be turned into free and common socage, save only tenures in frankalmoigne, tenures by copy of court roll, and honorary services of grand serjeanty; and that all tenures which shall be created by the king, his heirs or successors, in future shall be free and common socage.

The other subdivision of frank tenement is free socage [soca, Lat.], which, most probably, means plough-service. It is distinguished from knight-service in this respect, that it is held by a certain determinate duty; whereas we have seen that the tenure in chivalry or knight-service was uncertain and indeterminate. These free socage tenures are said by some persons to be the relics of Saxon liberty, which were left untouched by the oppressive hand of the Norman.

Included among free socage tenures were petit serjeanty, tenure in burgage, and gavelkind.

(1) Petit serjeanty [parva serjeantia, Lat.] greatly resembles grand serjeanty, for as the latter is a personal service, the former is a rent or render, both tending to some purpose concerning the king's person. The service in petit serjeanty is the rendering annually to the king some small implement of war, as a sword, a buckler, a bow without a string, or the like. Both the tenures in serjeanty must be held from the Crown. The lands and property which were granted to the Dukes of Marlborough and Wellington for their brilliant military services are held in petit serjeanty, each rendering annually a small flag or ensign, which is deposited in Windsor Castle. Existing incidents of tenures in grand and petit serjeanty have been saved as incidents in free and common socage by the Law of Property Act, 1922, s. 136.

(2) Tenure in burgage [burgus, Lat.] (now abolished, see infra) is where houses, or lands which were formerly the site of houses, in an ancient borough are held of some lord by a certain rent. There were a great many customs affecting these tenures, the most remarkable of which was the custom of borough-English, evidently of Saxon origin, and so named to distinguish it from the Norman customs. See BOURGH-ENGLISH.

(3) Gavelkind (gyfe-eal-kyn, given to all the kindred]. See GAVELKIND (now abolished, see infra).

The other great class of tenements was villanage, which was subdivided into pure and privileged villanage.

Pure villanage was the origin of the present copyhold tenures, or tenure by copy of court roll, at the will of the lord. See MANOR; COPYHOLD; HERIOT.

Privileged villanage, sometimes called villain-socage, is where lands have been held of the Crown from the Conquest. This was an exalted species of copyhold, held according to custom, and not according to the mere will of the lord. It subsisted until 1926 under the name of tenure in ancient demesne, which consisted of those lands or manors that appeared in Domesday Book to have been actually in the possession of the Crown in the reign of Edward the Confessor or William the Conqueror. These tenants were esteemed highly privileged, for they could not be compelled to relinquish their lands at the will of their superior, et ideo dicuntur liberi. This tenure was not abolished by the 12 Car. 2, c. 24.

Tenures in ancient demesne were, it has been said, of three kinds :—

(1) Tenures in ancient demesne (properly so called), which was a free holding by grant from the Crown. The tenants were bound, in respect of their lands, to perform some of the better sort of certain villein services, which were commuted into money rents.

(2) Privileged copyholds, customary freeholds or free copyholds, held of a manor, which was ancient demesne, according to the custom of the manor, but not of the lord's will. These lands were in fact copyholds, and therefore the term customary freeholds is not strictly correct; for although the tenants had an interest nearly as good as freehold, yet they had not a freehold interest.

(3) Copyholds of base tenure were lands of a manor, which was ancient demesne, but held merely at the lord's will.

There is, however, a good deal of confusion in the books as to ancient demesne; see ANCIENT DEMESNE, and the authorities there referred to.

The old Saxon ecclesiastical tenures, which were continued under the Normans, are these :

(1) Frankalmoigne [free alms], by which religious corporations and their successors held lands of the donor, without any service other than the praying for the souls of the donor and his heirs. See FRANK-ALMOIGNE.

(2) Tenure by divine service, to which was annexed some special divine service, as to sing so many masses, to distribute a certain sum in alms, etc., which were contradistinguished from free alms; for if unperformed the lord could distrain without complaining to the visitor.

The statute 12 Car. 2, c. 24, excepts these spiritual tenures from abolition, so that many were subsisting in 1925, but only the Crown could create them in modern times.

The Law of Property Acts, 1922 and 1925, extinguished the customs of borough-English and gavelkind and all tenures which were not immediately before the 1st January, 1926, freehold or leasehold, grand or petty serjeanty, or frankalmoigne and converted them nominally, subject to the provisions of these Acts, into free and common socage, or leasehold, and in the case of copyholds, excepting and reserving to the lord his property and rights, if any, to mines and minerals, franchises and privileges, etc., set out in the 12th Sched., s. 5, of the Law of Property Act, 1925. See COPYHOLD; ESCHEAT.

Terce, thirds; Soots term. See WIDOW'S TERCE.

Term Fee, a certain sum, which a solicitor is entitled to charge to his client, and the client to recover, if successful, from the unsuccessful party who has to pay costs to him; it is payable for every term commencing on the day the sittings in London and Middlesex of the High Court of Justice commence, and terminating on the day preceding the next such sittings, in which a proceeding in the cause or matter by or affecting the party, other than the issuing and serving the writ of summons, shall take place. See App. N. to R. S. C. ad fin. See TERMS.

Term in Gross. A term which would have been attendant on the inheritance if it had been assigned by a purchaser of settled land to a trustee for himself, and while outstanding and not merged it was kept in existence upon an implied trust for the parties entitled according to their estates and interests.—Halsb. L. E., title 'Real Property,' etc. See ATTENDANT TERM; OUTSTANDING TERM.

Term of Years Absolute, defined for the purposes of the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 205 (1) (xxvii.), as a term of years in possession or reversion whether or not at a rent with or without impeachment for waste, subject or not to another legal estate and either certain or liable to determination by notice, re-entry, operation of law, or by a provision for cesser of redemption or in any other event (other than the dropping of a life or the determination of a determinable life interest, but does not include any term of years determinable with life or lives or with the cesser of a determinable life interest, nor if created after 1925 a term of years which is not expressed to take effect in possession within twenty-one years where required by the Act to take effect within that period (i.e., leases at a rent or in consideration of a fine and not being leases of a reversion on a term, see s. 149 of the Act); and in that definition, term of years includes terms for less than years or from year to year; and see LAW OF PROPERTY ACT.

Terminal Charges of a railway company, those made at either terminus, in addition to the charges for carriage, as for warehousing, loading, unloading, cartage to or from station, etc. The special Act of each company, in prescribing a maximum rate, usually excepts from such rate 'a reasonable sum,' for, e.g., 'loading, covering, and unloading of goods at any terminal station of such goods, and for delivery and collection and any other services incidental to the duty or business of a carrier, where such services are or any of them is performed by the company'; and the Railway and Canal Traffic Commission has jurisdiction to determine what is a reasonable sum in case of dispute. See Hodges on Railways.

The Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, which by s. 24 directs railway companies to prepare revised classifications of traffic and schedules of maximum rates, and to state therein the nature and amount of all 'terminal charges,' by s. 55 defines the term 'terminal charges' as including 'charges in respect of stations, sidings, wharves, depots, warehouses, cranes, and other similar matters, and of any services rendered thereat.' See the Railways Act, 1921, especially Part III. and Schedules 4 and 5; also Aggs & Knowles on Railways; and RAILWAYS.

Terminating Building Societies, societies where the members commence their monthly contributions on a particular day, and continue to pay them until the realization of shares to a given amount for each member, the society advancing the capital of the society to such members as require it by mortgage to secure the payment of interest as well as principal by them, and so as to ensure such realization within a given period of years, when the society terminates. See Building Societies Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 42), s. 5, and BUILDING SOCIETY. Consult Wurtzburg or Davis on Building Societies.

Termor, he that holds lands or tenements for a given number of years or for life.

Terms, the periods during which the superior courts at Westminster were open.

The legal year consists of four terms: Michaelmas, Hilary, Easter, and Trinity (which see), the year beginning with Michaelmas Term.

The commencement and duration of the terms were fixed by 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 70, s. 6, and 1 Wm. 4, c. 3, s. 3. By the first of these enactments Hilary Term began on the 11th and ended on the 31st of January; Easter Term began on the 15th of April and ended on the 8th of May; Trinity Term began on the 22nd of May and ended on the 12th of June; and Michaelmas Term began on the 2nd and ended on the 25th of November. Vacations in the Equity Courts were regulated also by Cons. Ord. V.

By the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 26, now repealed, it was provided that the division of the legal year into terms should be abolished so far as relates to the administration of justice. But in all other cases in which, under the law previously existing, the terms into which the legal year is divided were used as a measure for determining the time at or within which any act was required to be done, the same continues to be referred to, for the same or the like purpose, unless and until provision is otherwise made by any lawful authority (see now, e.g., R. S. C. Appx. N. 201). The same section provided that, 'subject to rules of Court,' the High Court and Court of Appeal may sit at any time. See R. S. C. Ord. LXIII., and SITTINGS.

Our university terms are different from the law terms; and the dining terms at the Inns of Court are the terms of the old law, and do not correspond with the sittings.

Terms (to be under terms), conditions on which indulgence is granted by the Court, as to take short notice of trial, etc.

Terms for Years. An estate for years is denominated a term, because its enjoyment is strictly fixed, for by 'term' is meant not only the interest which passes, but also the period for which it is held. It is a chattel real: chattel, because the estate passes to the owner's executors at his death, and did not pass to his heir-at-law, and so far partaker of the nature of personality; real, because it is an interest in lands, and therefore partakes of the nature of real property.

A term is usually created by a deed or specialty contract, called a lease or demise under the Common Law (see LEASE), and the appropriate operative verbs therein are 'demise,' or 'grant, lease, and to farm let'; but any words showing the intent of the parties that the one (the lessor) shall divest himself of the possession, and the other (the lessee) come into it for a determinate time, are generally sufficient for the purpose.

Terms could not be limited in succession or by way of remainder except by way of trust or by will as executory devises and an estate tail could not be limited in a term at all. It vested in the first tenant-in-tail in possession absolutely: see now Law of Property Act, 1925, ss. 130 et seq. See also TERM OF YEARS; LEASE; LEASES, RENEWAL OF.

Termes (Les) de la Ley. See RASTELL.

Terminum, a day given to a defendant.

Terminus a quo, the starting point.

Terminus ad quem, the terminating point.

Terminus annorum certus debet esse et determinatus. Co. Litt. 45 b.—(A term of years ought to be certain and determinate.)

Terminus et feodum non possunt constare simul in una eademque personâ. Plow. 29.—(A term and the fee cannot both be in one and the same person at the same time.)

Terra, arable land.—Kennett's Gloss.

Terra affirmata, land let to farm.

Terra boscalis, woody land.

Terra culta, cultivated land.

Terra debilis, weak or barren land.—Inq. 22 R. 2.

Terra dominica, or Indominicata, the demesne land of a manor.

Terra excultabilis, land which may be ploughed.—Dugd. Mon. i. 426.

Terra extendenda, a writ addressed to an escheator, etc., that he inquire and find out the true yearly value of any land, etc., by the oath of twelve men, and to certify the extent into the chancery.—Reg. Brev. 293.

Terra frusca, or frisca, fresh land, not lately ploughed.

Terra hydata, land subject to the payment of hydage.—Selden.

Terra lucrabilis, land gained from the sea or enclosed out of a waste.

Terra Normanorum, land held by a Norman.—Paroch. Antiq. 197.

Terra nova, land newly converted from wood ground or arable.

Terra putura, land in forests held by the tenure of furnishing food to the keepers therein.—4 Inst. 307.

Terra sabulosa, gravelly or sandy ground.

Terra testamentalis, gavelkind land, being disposable by will.—Spelm.

Terra vestita, land sown with corn.—Covent.

Terra wainabilis, tillable land.

Terra warrenata, land that has the liberty of free-warren.

Terræ dominicales regis, the demesne lands of the Crown.

Terrages, an exemption from all uncertain services.

Terrarius, a landowner.—Leg. William 1.

Terre-tenant, Tertenant, he who is in the actual possession and enjoyment of land.—2 Bl. Com. 91.

Terrier, or Terrar, a register or survey of land. As to when it is evidence, see 3 Price, 380.

Terris bonis et catallis rehabendis post purgationem, a writ for a clerk to recover his lands, goods, and chattels, formerly seised, after he had cleared himself of the felony of which he was accused, and delivered to his ordinary to be purged.—Reg. Brev.

Terris et catallis tentis ultra debitum levatum, a judicial writ for the restoring of lands or goods to a debtor who is distrained above the amount of the debt.—Reg. Judic.

Terris liberandis, a writ that lay for a man convicted by attaint, to bring the record and process before the king, and take a fine for his imprisonment, and then to deliver to him his lands and tenements again, and release him of the strip and waste.—Reg. Brev. 232. Also, it was a writ for the delivery of lands to the heir, after homage and relief performed, or upon security taken that he should perform them.—Ibid. 293.

Territorial Army. A body of men first created as the Territorial Force by the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907, to replace the Yeomanry and Volunteers. As to the position of the Militia, see that title. The scheme upon which the Act is based is the organization of the Force by counties through County Associations (ss. 1-5). Enlistment is generally for four years, and with a right to the soldier to obtain his discharge earlier on giving three months' notice, paying a sum not exceeding 5*l.*, and giving up arms, clothing, etc., in good condition, except that he loses this right when the Army Reserve has been called out on permanent service. All ranks are subject to military law when serving, and officers, other than members of the permanent staff, if on the active list, at all times (Army Act, 1881, s. 175 (3) ((A), as amended by the Territorial Army and Militia Act, 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 4 (1)), and Army Act, 1881, s. 176 (6) (A)). The Force may be called out immediately upon the issue of a proclamation ordering the Army Reserve (q.v.) to be called out on permanent service. Service is only within the United Kingdom, unless a man offer himself for foreign service (s. 13, Act of 1907).

Territorial Waters. This expression is used with regard to that portion of the sea, up to a limited distance, which is immediately adjacent to the shores of any country, and over which the sovereignty and exclusive jurisdiction of that country extends. The generally recognized limit is three miles, which was the range of cannon in the seventeenth century (see Grotius). Territorial waters are considered as territory to the extent that fishing in such waters is reserved for the exclusive benefit of the subjects of the adjacent country. See the Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 73), passed in consequence of the decision in R. v. Keyn, (1876) 2 Ex. D. 63.

Tertius interveniens, one who voluntarily interposes in a suit depending between others, with a view to the protection of his own interests.—Civ. Law.

Test: (1) To bring one to a trial and examination; or to ascertain the truth. (2) A criterion. (3) A declaration preliminary to admission to an office or corporate body. See UNIVERSITY.

Test Act (25 Car. 2, c. 2), by which it was provided that all persons having any offices, civil or military (with the exception of some few of an inferior kind), or receiving pay from the Crown, or holding a place of trust under it, should take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, subscribe a declaration against transubstantiation, and receive the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper according to the usage of the Church of England. The Test Act, after having been extended by 1 Geo. 1, st. 2, c. 13, 2 Geo. 2, c. 31, and 9 Geo. 2, c. 26, was repealed by 9 Geo. 4, c. 17.

Testa de Nevill, an ancient document in two volumes, in the custody of the King's Remembrancer in the Exchequer, more properly called Liber Feodorum.

These books contain principally accounts (1) of fees holden either immediately of the king, or others who held of the king in capite, and if alienated whether the owners were infeoffed ab antiquo or de novo, as also fees holden in frankalmoigne, with the values thereof respectively; (2) of serjeanties holden of the king, distinguishing such as were rented or alienated, with the values of the same; (3) of widows, and heiresses of tenants in capite, whose marriages were in the gift of the king, with the values of their lands; (4) of churches in the gift of the king, and in whose hands they were; (5) of escheats, as well of the lands of Normans as others, in whose hands the same were, and by what services holden; (6) of the amount of the sums paid for scutage and aid, etc., by each tenant.

These volumes were printed in 1807, under the authority of the commissioners of the records of the realm.

Testament, a disposition of personal property to take place after the owner's decease, according to his desire and direction. See WILLS.

As to the modes of making a testament according to the Civil Law, see Sand. Just.; Cum. C. L. 117; Maine's Anc. Law.

Testamenta latissimam interpretationem habere debent. Jenk. Cent. 81.—(Wills ought to have the broadest interpretation.)

Testamentary, given by will; contained in a will.

Testamentary Causes, proceedings in the Probate Branch of the High Court of Justice relating to the proving and validity of wills and intestacies, over which it has acquired exclusive jurisdiction, by the Court of Probate Act, 1857, amended by the Court of Probate Act, 1858. See PROBATE.

Testamentary Expenses include the costs of an administration action (Penny v. Penny, (1879) 11 Ch. D. 440). As to whether the expression includes estate duty, see Porte v. Williams, 1911, 1 Ch. 188, and cases there cited. Generally, it includes estate duty on personalty (Re Trenchard, 1905, 1 Ch. 82), and primarily, in respect of land, subject to payment as provided by ss. 16 to 18 of the Law of Property Act, 1925. Under the Intestates Estates Act, 1890, s. 6, now repealed, it included expenses of letters of administration and of administration generally (Re Twigg, 1892, 1 Ch. 579).

Testamentary Guardian, one appointed by a father's will over his child, pursuant to 12 Car. 2, c. 24. See GUARDIAN.

Testamenti factio, the ceremony of making a testament, either as a testator, heir, or, witness.—Civ. Law.

Testamentum, i.e., testatio mentis, facta nullo præsente metu periculi, sed solâ cogitatione mortalitatis. Co. Litt. 322 b.—(A testament, that is, the witnessing of the mind, made not in fear of present danger, but only by the thought of death.)

Testamentum omne morte consummatur. Ibid.—(Every will is perfected by death.)

Testate, having made a will.

Testation, witness, evidence.

Testator, a man who makes a will or testament. See WILLS.

Testatoris ultima voluntas est perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam. Ibid.—(The last will of a testator is to be thoroughly fulfilled according to his real intention.)

Testatrix, a woman who makes a will or testament.

Testatum, the witnessing part of a deed or agreement. See DEED.

Testatum Writ, a process of execution which was issued into a different county than that in which the venue was laid in the declaration; it must have been founded on a writ ejusdem generis, issued into the county of the venue, and returned nulla bona, etc. It was abolished by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 21. See GROUND WRIT.

Teste [being witness], the witnessing part of a writ, warrant, or other proceeding which expresses the date of its issue.

Tested, to bear the teste. A writ is issued in the name of the sovereign, and the Lord Chancellor is supposed to witness it. All writs are, by R. S. C. 1883, Ord. II., r. 8, tested in the name of the Lord Chancellor. They were before the Judicature Acts tested in the name of the Lord Chancellor if issuing from the Court of Chancery, or of the Lord Chief Justice if issuing from the Queen's Bench, etc.

Testes ponderantur, non numerantur.—(Witnesses are weighed, not numbered.) See UNUS NULLUS RULE.

Testes qui postulat debet dare eis sumptus competentes. Reg. Jur. Civ.—(Whosoever demands witnesses must find them in competent provision.) See CONDUCT MONEY.

Testimolignes, witnesses.—Law French.

Testimonial Proof, parol evidence.—Civ. Law.

Testimony, evidence given; proof by a witness. See EVIDENCE and PERPETUATING TESTIMONY.

Testing Clause. In Scotland, the final clause of attested documents, indicating the designation of signatories; place and date of attestation; and names and designation of the witnesses.

Text-book, a legal treatise which lays down principles or collects decisions on any branch of the law—e.g., Mayne on Damages; Chitty on Contracts, etc.; Dart on Vendors and Purchasers. They are, of course, not binding on the Court, but some of them are by general consent treated as guiding authorities: see Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Parr, 1894, 2 Q. B. p. 428, per Lord Esher, M.R. Text-books written by living authors who are practising barristers are not cited in the courts as authorities, although passages therefrom may be adopted as part of an argument.

Textile Factory. Any premises wherein or within the close or curtilage of which steam, water, or other mechanical power is used in preparing, etc., wool, cotton, etc. (Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, s. 149 (1)). See FACTORY.

Thames. See Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. clxxxvii.); defined in s. 3 as meaning and including:—

So much of the rivers Thames and Isis respectively as are between the town of Cricklade and an imaginary straight line drawn from the entrance to Gantlet creek in the county of Kent to the City stone opposite to Canvey Island in the county of Essex and so much of the river Kennet as is between the common landing-place at Reading in the county of Berks and the river Thames and so much of the river Lee and Bow creek respectively as are below the south boundary stones in the Lee Conservancy Act, 1868, mentioned and all locks, cuts, and works within the said portions of rivers and creeks:

Provided that no dock, lock, canal, or cut, existing at the passing of this Act and constructed under the authority of Parliament and belonging to any body corporate established under such authority, and no bridge over the river Thames or the river Kennet belonging to or vested in any county council or municipal authority or to or in any railway company shall be deemed to form part of the Thames.

The Act of 1894 repeals thirty Acts, from 21 Jac. 1, c. 32, to the Thames Preservation Act, 1885. The 'conservators' under the Act are partly elected by shipowners, dock-owners and wharfingers, and partly appointed by Water Companies. In them are vested (see s. 58) the bed and shores of the river, and they have ample powers (see s. 191) to make bye-laws for prevention of obstruction; for regulation of vessels, of persons using tow-paths, piers, etc., and of passage through locks; for regulation of bathing, fishing, and exhibition of advertisements; 'for prescribing the numbers of persons who may be carried in or on randans, wherries, skiffs, dingies, shallows, punts, canoes, rafts, and other small boats and craft however navigated on the Thames above Teddington Lock, and for preventing the overcrowding of such vessels'; and for very many other purposes. See also the Port of London Act, 1908, repealed, except as to the Upper Thames, by the Local Act of 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. clxxiii.), dealing with the Thames from and below Teddington and providing for the Port of London Authority, and SANITARY AUTHORITY; LONDON, PORT OF; and Land Drainage Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 44).

Thames Embankment, from Westminster Bridge to Blackfriars Bridge (25 & 26 Vict. c. 93; 26 & 27 Vict. cc. 45, 75). As to the Southern Embankment of the Thames, see 26 & 27 Vict. c. 75. See also Local Government Act, 1929, providing for the transfer of functions relating to the Thames Embankments to the London County Council upon Order: see S. R. & O. 1933 (No. 114) and 1934 (No. 523), and many other statutes, both public and local, indicated in Appx. VI. of the Index of Statutes in Force; and 50 & 51 Vict. c. 34 (Chelsea).

Thames Watermen.—By 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. lxxv., the watermen, wherry-men, and lightermen of the Thames were consolidated into one body corporate, in the freemen and apprentices whereof was vested, subject to certain exceptions, the exclusive right of navigating that river for hire; and see Part IV. of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (local). The powers of this body were transferred to the Port of London Authority by the (repealed) Port of London Act, 1908, s. 11. See now THAMES and LONDON, PORT OF.

Thanafe of the King, a certain part of the king's land or property, of which the ruler or governor was called 'thane.'—Cowel.

Thane [fr. thegn, Sax., a servant], an Anglo-Saxon nobleman: an old title of honour, perhaps equivalent to baron. There were two orders of thanes, the king's thanes and the ordinary thanes. Soon after the Conquest this name was disused.

Thanelands, such lands as were granted by charter of the Saxon kings to their thanes with all immunities, except the trinoda necessitas.

Thaneship, the office and dignity of a thane; the seigniorship of a thane.

Thavies Inn, an inn of Chancery. See INNS OF CHANCERY.

Theatre, a place kept for the public performance of stage-plays (see STAGE-PLAY), which expression includes 'every tragedy, comedy, farce, opera, burletta, interlude, pantomime, or other entertainment of the stage.' By the Theatres Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 68), such a place may not be had or kept without a licence from the Lord Chamberlain of the Household of the sovereign in the metropolis, and from the justices of the peace elsewhere, s. 2 of the Act enacting that:—

2. It shall not be lawful for any person to have or keep any house or other place of public resort in Great Britain, for the public performance of stage plays, without authority by virtue of letters-patent from Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, or predecessors, or without licence from the Lord Chamberlain of Her Majesty's household for the time being, or from the justices of the peace as hereinafter provided; and every person who shall offend against this enactment shall be liable to forfeit such sum as shall be awarded by the Court in which or the justices by whom he shall be convicted, not exceeding twenty pounds for every day on which such house or place shall have been so kept open by him for the purpose aforesaid, without legal authority.

Hiring, without control, is not within this enactment (Reg. v. Strugnell, (1865) L. R. 1 Q. B. 93), but allowing the public to enter, for payment to be devoted to charitable purposes, the house of the owner and occupier, is within it (Shelley v. Bethell, (1883) 12 Q. B. D. 11).

The licensing power of the justices is transferred to the County Councils by the Local Government Act, 1888.

By s. 12 of the Act a copy of every new stage-play intended to be acted in any theatre must be sent to the Lord Chamberlain seven days at least beforehand, and if he disallow the same, or any part thereof, the same may not be acted contrary to the disallowance, under pain (s. 15) of a penalty not exceeding 50*l.* and absolute avoidance of the licence of the theatre. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Public Entertainment.'

A picture house is not a theatre for the purpose of building restrictions applicable to a theatre (Richie v. Scottish Cinema and Variety Theatres Ltd., 1929, S. C. 350).

The Theatre and Employers Registration Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 50), and the Amendment Act, 1929 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 46), have for object to prevent persons of no substance from engaging companies and then abandoning them; all theatrical employers are to be registered. But the Act does not apply to a person or his agent who has a licence under the Theatres Act, 1843. As to cinematograph exhibitions and theatres, see CINEMATOGRAPH and Loc. Gov. Act, 1933 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 51).

Theft, larceny, which see.

Theftbote [fr. theof, Sax., thief, and bote, compensation]; compounding a felony. See COMPOUNDING and REWARD.

Theftbote est emenda furti capta, sine consideratione curia domini regis. 3 Inst. 134.—(Theftbote is the paying money to have goods stolen returned, without having any respect for the court of the king.)

Thellusson Act (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98). See ACCUMULATION.

Thelonio irrationabili habendo, a writ that formerly lay for him that had any part of the king's demesne in fee-farm, to recover reasonable toll of the king's tenants there, if his demesne had been accustomed to be tolled.—Reg. Brev. 87.

Thelonium, an abolished writ for citizens or burgesses to assert their right to exemption from toll.—Fitz. N. B. 226.

Thelonmannus, the toll-man or officer who receives toll.

Them, or Theme, the right of having all the generation of villeins, with their suits and cattle.—Termes de la Ley.

Themmagium, a duty or acknowledgment paid by inferior tenants in respect of theme or team.

Theoden, an under-thane ; a husbandman or inferior tenant.—Spelm.

Theof [prædones, Lat.], offenders who joined in a body of seven to commit depredations.—Ang.-Sax.

Theows, Theowmen, or Thews, slaves, captives, or bondsmen.—Spelm. on Feuds, cap. 5.

Therm, a hundred thousand British thermal units. A British thermal unit is the amount of heat required to raise 1 lb. of water 1 degree Fahrenheit (Gas Regulation Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 28), s. 1, subss. (2) and (7)). The Gas Undertakings Acts, 1920 to 1934, provide for orders by the Board of Trade permitting gas undertakings to sell gas at a specified maximum rate per therm. See GAS.

Thesaurus, Thesaurium, the treasury.

Thesaurus competit domino regi, et non domino libertatis, nisi sit per verba specialia. Füz. Coron. 281.—(A treasure belongs to the king, and not to the lord of a liberty, unless it be through special words.)

Thesaurus inventus, treasure-trove, which see.

Thesaurus inventus est vetus dispositio pecuniæ, etc., cujus non extat modo memoria, adeo ut jam dominum non habeat. 3 Inst. 132.—(Treasure-trove is an ancient store of money, etc., of which no recollection exists, so that it now has no owner.)

Thesmothete [fr. θεσμοθέτης, Gk.], a law-maker ; a law-giver.

Thethinga, a tithing.

Things, the subjects of dominion or property, as distinguished from persons. They are distributed into three kinds : (1) things real or immovable, comprehending lands, tenements, and hereditaments ; (2) things personal or movable, comprehending goods and chattels ; and (3) things mixed, partaking of the characteristics of the two former, as a title-deed, a term for years. The civil law divided things into corporeal (tangi possunt) and incorporeal (tangi non possunt). See CHOSE.

Thingus, a thane or nobleman ; knight or freeman.

Third-borough, or Thirdborow, an under-constable.

Thirdings, the third part of the corn growing on the land, due to the lord for a heriot on the death of his tenant, within the manor of Turfat, in Hereford.—Blount.

Third-night-awn-hinde [trium noctium hospes, Lat.]. By the laws of St. Edward the Confessor, if any man lay a third night in an inn, he was called a third-night-awn-hinde, and his host was answerable for him if he committed any offence. The first night, for-man-night, or uncuth (unknown), he was reckoned a stranger ; the second night, twa-night, a guest ; and the third night, an agen-hinde, a domestic. Bract. l. 3.

Third Party. The phrase used to introduce any one into a scene already occupied by two in a definite relation to one another, as principal and agent, guardian and ward, solicitor and client. See AS AGAINST, AS BETWEEN.

As to third-party insurance of motor vehicles ; by the Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), s. 35, users of motor vehicles are to be insured against third-party risks. See Part II. of the Road Traffic Act ; the Motor Vehicles (Third Party Risks) Regulations, 1933, S. R. & O., No. 311 ; and Part II. of the Road Traffic Act, 1934—the latter Act provides that even though the policy is voidable or cancelled, the third party can recover from the insurers the amount of any judgment, and is designed to safeguard the interests of insurers in certain cases ; and see Third Parties (Rights against Insurers) Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 25), and INSURANCE.

A 'third party' may be introduced into an action by a defendant who claims contribution or indemnity over against him ; see Jud. Act, 1873, s. 24, sub-s. 3 (see now Jud. Act, 1925, s. 39), and R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XVI.A.

A person may sometimes be liable for the tort even though by the intervention of a third party : see Baker v. Snell, 1908, 2 K. B. 825.

Third Penny. See DENARIUS TERTIUS COMITATUS.

Thirlage (obsol.), a servitude or tenure in Scotland, by which the occupier of certain lands was bound to carry his grain to a certain mill to be ground, for which he was bound to pay a portion of the flour or meal, varying from a thirtieth to a twelfth part, which was termed 'multitude.' This servitude was commuted for an annual payment in grain by 39 Geo. 3, c. 55. See Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Thistle. It was the custom within the manor of Halton, in Chester, that if, in driving beasts over a common, the driver permitted them to graze or take but a thistle, he should pay a halfpenny a-piece, called a 'thistle-take,' to the lord of the fee.

And at Fiskerton, in Nottinghamshire, by ancient custom, if a native or a cottager killed a swine above a year old, he paid to the lord a penny, which purchase of leave to kill a hog was also called thistle-take.

It has been held that an occupier of land has no duty towards his neighbour to prevent thistles from seeding, and is not liable to his neighbour for damage by the seeds being blown on to his neighbour's land (Giles v. Walker, (1890) 24 Q. B. D. 656).

Thornton (C. J.), author of a summa or abridgment of Bracton, containing most of the titles of the law in a concise form. Though a professed epitomiser, he omits many things in that author, and does not adhere to his method.—2 Reeves, c. 11, p. 281.

Thorp, Threp, or Trop [villa, vicus, Lat.], either in the beginning or end of the names of places, means a street or village.

Thrave, or Threave [Nor.-Fr.], twenty-four sheaves or four shocks of corn; a certain quantity of straw; also a herd, a drove, a heap.

Threats, or menaces of bodily hurt, through fear of which a man's business is interrupted, are civil injuries affecting the right of personal security. The remedy for this species of injury is in pecuniary damages.

By the Larceny Act, 1916, s. 30,

Every person who with intent—

- (a) to extort any valuable thing from any person, or
- (b) to induce any person to confer or procure for any person any appointment or office of profit or trust,
- (1) publishes or threatens to publish any libel upon any other person whether living or dead; or
- (2) directly or indirectly threatens to print or publish or directly or indirectly proposes to abstain from or offers to prevent the printing or publishing of any matter or thing touching any other person (whether living or dead), shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and on conviction thereof liable to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding two years.

See also s. 29 (ibid.), as to threats to accuse of certain serious crimes, and BLACKMAIL.

The sending of letters threatening to murder is punishable by penal servitude not exceeding ten years (Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 16). The sending of letters threatening to burn or destroy houses, buildings, ships, etc., is similarly punishable. (Malicious Damage Act, 1861, s. 50.)

Patents.—Threatening by a patentee with legal proceedings is dealt with by s. 36 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, as substituted by s. 6 of the Act of 1932 (see LETTERS-PATENT), which is as follows:—

Sect. 36 (1).—Where any person, by circulars, advertisements or otherwise, threatens any person with an action for infringement of patent or other like proceedings, then, whether the person making the threats is or is not entitled to or interested in a patent or an application for a patent, any person aggrieved thereby may bring an action against him, and may obtain a declaration to the effect that such threats are unjustifiable, and an injunction against the continuance of such threats and may recover such damage, if any, as he has sustained thereby, unless the person making the threats proves that the acts in respect of which the proceedings are threatened constitute or, if done, would constitute an infringement of a patent in respect of a claim in the specification which is not shown by the plaintiff to be invalid or an infringement of rights arising from the acceptance of a complete specification in respect of a claim therein which is not shown by the plaintiff to be capable of being successfully opposed.

(2) The defendant in any such action as aforesaid may apply, by way of counterclaim in the action, for any relief to which he would be entitled in a separate action in respect of any infringement by the plaintiff of the patent to which the threats relate.

By s. 61 the above remedy is made applicable with the necessary modifications (see s. 13 and Sched., Act of 1932) to the proprietor of a registered design.

Threnges, vassals, but not of the lowest degree, of those who held lands of the chief lord.

Threshing Machines. Steam threshing machines, by the Threshing Machines Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 12), must be fenced.

Thrithing, a division consisting of three or four hundreds.

Throw Out, to reject a Bill in Parliament; to ignore a bill of indictment.

Thrymsa, a Saxon coin worth fourpence.—Du Fresne.

Thude-wæald, a woodward, or person that looks after a wood.

Thwertnleak, the custom of giving entertainments to a sheriff, etc., for three nights.

Tieborne Case. A very celebrated case in which one Arthur Orton, for falsely swearing in 1867 and afterwards that he was Sir Roger Charles Doughty Tieborne, who had been drowned at sea in 1864, was sentenced in 1873 to fourteen years' penal servitude—being seven years (the maximum sentence for perjury) for each of two perjuries. See Best on Evidence, 10th ed., s. 517 B, where an extract from Orton's confession, sworn before a commissioner for oaths, is given; Article in Supplement to Dictionary of Biography, tit. 'Orton'; Famous Trials of the Century (19th), by J. B. Ailay, and other authorities referred to in Best on Evidence, latest book.

Ticket. For a railway passenger not to produce a railway ticket on request by an officer or servant of a railway company, or to pay his fare from the place whence he started, or to give the officer or servant his name and address, is summarily punishable by fine up to 40s. See FARE.

Tickets of Leave, licences to be at large, granted to convicts for good conduct, but recallable upon subsequent misconduct. See the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871, and Penal Servitude Acts of 1864 and 1891.

Tidal Water in the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, by s. 742 'means any part of the sea and any part of a river within the ebb and flow of the tide at ordinary spring tides, and not being a harbour.'

Tidesman, or Tidewater, a name, now obsolete, for a custom-house officer who is placed on board a merchant ship till the goods on board are examined and placed in bond or the duties paid.

Tiel, or Tel [Nor.-Fr.], such. See NUL TIEL RECORD.

Tierce, the third part of a pipe, or forty-two gallons.

Tigh [fr. tdag, Sax.], a close or inclosure.

Tignl immittendl, a servitude which is the right of inserting a beam or timber from the wall of one house into that of a neighbouring house, in order that it may rest on the latter, and that the wall of the latter may bear this weight.—Civ. Law.

Tignum, any material for building.—Ibid.

Tihler [Sax.], an accusation.

Timber, wood felled for building or other suchlike use; in a legal sense it generally means oak, ash, and elm, but in some parts of the country is used in a wider sense, which is recognized by the law.

Until extinguishment as provided by Part VI. of the Law of Property Act, 1922 (see COPYHOLD), the lord's right to timber on copyhold land remained as an incident of the enfranchised tenure. The right was the whole value if the lord could enter and remove the timber, otherwise half the value.

Co. Litt. 53 a; 1 Rol. Abr. 649. See Dashwood v. Magniac, 1891, 3 Ch. 306; Sugd. V. and P. 26; Woodf. L. and T.; TREE; and WASTE.

Carriage of Timber.—Section 61 of the Merchant Shipping (Safety and Load Line Conventions) Act, 1932 (see DECK CARGO), provides for timber cargo regulations as to how timber is to be carried.

Timberlode, a service by which tenants were bound to carry timber felled from the woods to the lord's house.

Time. Before 1751 the legal year in England began on the 25th March, therein differing from the common usage in the whole kingdom, and the legal method in Scotland. In 1751 the Gregorian, or present, calendar was substituted for the Julian Calendar by 24 Geo. 2, c. 23.

Time in Acts of Parliament (see, e.g., the definition of night in the Larceny Act) and legal instruments means, in Great Britain, Greenwich mean time, and in Ireland, Dublin mean time, by virtue of the Statute (Definition of Times) Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 9). See, however, Gordon v. Cann, (1899) 68 L. J. Q. B. 434. The effect of the Summer Time Act, 1922, continued annually, should be noted. The time for Great Britain, Northern Ireland, the Channel Islands, and the Isle of Man is one hour in advance of Greenwich time during the 'period of summer time' practically for all purposes.

The computation, etc., of time for purposes of procedure in the Supreme Court is regulated by Ord. LXIV., r. 7 of which provides that 'a Court or a Judge may enlarge or abridge the time appointed by the Rules of Court, or fixed by any order enlarging time, for doing any act or taking any proceeding, upon such terms (if any) as the justice of the case may require, and any such enlargement may be ordered although the application for the same is not made until after the expiration of the time appointed or allowed.'

As to time in County Courts, see County Court Rules, 1936, Ord. XIII., r. 5; Ord. XLVIII., r. 10.

As to computation of time under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, see s. 230 of that Act. And see FRACTION OF A DAY; LIMITATION OF ACTION OR PROSECUTION; MONTH; PRESCRIPTION; REASONABLE TIME.

Time Bargains.—Contracts for the sale of a certain amount of stock at a certain price at a future day, sometimes called putts and calls or refusals, which see.

Time for Consideration of Offer.—An offer with a limited time for acceptance may be revoked at any moment before the limited time has been reached, on the ground that the stipulation for time to consider is void for want of consideration: see Cooke v. Ozley, (1790) 3 T. R. 653; 1 R. R. 783, and the many cases in which it has been followed, especially Bristol Bread Co. v. Maggs, (1890) 44 Ch. D. 616, and Dickinson v. Dodds, (1876) 2 Ch. D. 463, C. A. In the latter case the defendant on a Wednesday by signed writing offered his house to the plaintiff for 800*l.*, adding in a P.S., 'This offer to be left over until Friday, 9 o'clock A.M., 12th June,' and a sale on Thursday to another person was held good, although on Friday about 7 A.M. the plaintiff gave notice of acceptance to the defendant.

Time Immemorial, from time whereof the memory of man is not to the contrary. See MEMORY, TIME OF LEGAL; PRESCRIPTION.

Time, when of the Essence of the Contract.—At Common Law, time was always of the essence of the contract, but the equitable doctrine now recognized in all courts since the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25 (7) (now replaced by Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 41), was that time was not of the essence of the contract unless made so either expressly or by implication; see per Chitty, J., in Dibbins v. Dibbins, 1896, 2 Ch. at p. 350. As to making time of the essence of the contract by notice, see Stickney v. Keeble, 1915, A. C. 386, and Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 10.

Timocracy [Gk.], an aristocracy of property.

Tinel le roy, the king's hall, wherein his servants used to dine and sup.—13 Rich. 2, st. 1, c. 3.

Tineman, or Tienman, a petty officer in the forest, who had the care of vert and venison at night, and other duties.

Tinet, brushwood and thorns.

Tinewald, the ancient parliament or annual convention of the people in the Isle of Man.

Tinkermen, fishermen who destroyed the young fry in the river Thames by nets and unlawful engines.

Tinpenny, a tribute paid for the liberty of digging in tin mines.

Tinsel of the Feu, the loss of an estate held in feu in Scotland, from allowing two years' feu-duty to remain unpaid.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Tippling Act. The Sale of Spirits Act, 1750 (24 Geo. 2, c. 40), s. 12, by which no person may maintain any action for any debt 'for any spirituous liquors, unless such debts shall have really been contracted at one time to the amount of 20s.'

By the Sale of Spirits Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 38), the above enactment is repealed so far only as relates to spirituous liquors sold to be consumed elsewhere than on the premises where sold, and delivered at the residence of the purchaser thereof in quantities not less at any one time than a reputed quart.

By the County Courts Act, 1934, s. 188, replacing County Courts Act, 1888, s. 182, no action may be brought in any court to recover any debt alleged to be due for ale, porter, beer, cider, or perry, consumed on the premises where sold.

Tipstaffs, or Tipstaves, constables attending courts. See 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, s. 23; and 11 & 12 Vict. c. 7, s. 5.

Tithe Commissioners, appointed under the Tithe Act, 1836, s. 2; now superseded. See LAND COMMISSIONERS and next title.

Tithe Rent-Charge. A charge on land, substituted by commutation for that charge on the produce of the land for the benefit of the Church, which was called tithe from being the tenth part of the increase yearly arising and renewing from the profits of lands, the stock upon lands, and the personal industry of the inhabitants; the first species being usually called prædial, the second mixed, the third personal.

This commutation was effected by a procedure set on foot by the Tithe Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71), amended by subsequent Acts. See Chitty's Stat., tit. 'Tithe Rent-Charge.' The amount to be paid was annually adjusted, according to the price of corn.

The commutation was effected in one of two ways—either by a voluntary parochial agreement, confirmed by the commissioners, or by the compulsory award of the commissioners. The value, either voluntarily agreed upon or awarded by the commissioners, was considered as the amount of the total rent-charge to be paid in respect of the tithes in that parish, and to be afterwards apportioned among the lands of that parish, having regard to their average tithable produce and productive quality; and such lands were absolutely discharged from the payment of all tithes, and, instead thereof, became subject to their portion of the rent-charge, thenceforth payable to the former tithe-owner, by two half-yearly payments, fluctuating according to the price of corn. An advertisement was inserted by authority in the London Gazette, in January in every year, stating the average price of wheat, barley, and oats for seven years, ending on the Thursday before Christmas then next preceding; every rent-charge then was deemed of the value of as many hundredweights of 112 lbs. of wheat, barley, and oats in equal quantities as it would have been competent to purchase according to the prices contained in such advertisement; and after every first of January it varied so as always to consist of the price of the same quantities, according to the advertisement then next preceding.

A tithe rent-charge varies in amount, and no person being personally liable to its payment, it differs from a rent-charge generally. By the Tithe Act, 1891, it was payable by the landowner to the tithe-owner. Every contract between landowner and occupier, made after that Act, for payment of it by the occupier is void, and the occupier ceased to be bound by any such contract made before that Act, being made by the Act expressly liable, however, to repay to the landowner such sum as the landowner had properly paid on account of tithe rent-charge to the tithe-owner: see Tuff v. Guild of Drapers of the City of London, 1913, 1 K. B. 40. When the rent-charge was in arrear for twenty-one days, the remedy was, until 1891, in every case by distress on the land; but the Tithe Act, 1891, effected a great change in this respect. By that Act, in the ordinary case of land being let by the owner to a tenant, the remedy of distress by the tithe-owner was extinguished, and recovery through a receiver appointed by the county court of the district was substituted for it, except where the land was occupied by the landowner, in which case an officer of the court might distrain for it. The landowner also, in case of a contract before the passing of the Act (March 26th, 1891), binding the occupier to pay tithe, might recover by distress on the occupier any sum he may have paid the tithe-owner on account of tithe. By the same Act (s. 8), a remission of tithe rent-charge for any one year exceeding two-thirds of the annual value of the land out of which it issued might be obtained from the county court, as in the case of landlord and tenant.

As to the consideration money formerly payable on the redemption of a tithe rent-charge and the discharge thereof by an annuity, see Tithe Act, 1918, and Tithe Annuities Apportionment Act, 1921, and the Tithe Act, 1925, which contained provisions (since repealed) for the stabilization of tithe rent-charge and also, by s. 3 (unrepealed), transferred to Queen Anne's Bounty all tithe rent-charges attached to benefices, and contained provisions (since repealed) for the extinguishment of Queen Anne's Bounty rent-charges at the expiration of 85 years with consequential provisions.

As to compulsory redemption of small annuities (1l. or less), and annuities on numerous plots of building land, see the Acts (9 & 10 Vict. c. 73), s. 5; (41 & 42 Vict. c. 42), ss. 3, 6; (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 54), s. 4 and Sched. I., and the Tithe Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 43).

The Tithe Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 43), has extinguished tithe rent-charge and has freed land charged therewith absolutely from the 2nd October, 1936 (s. 1). The Act creates redemption stock secured by the consolidated fund to be issued for compensation to persons interested in tithe rent-charge to yield interest equal to the gross annual value of the rent-charge less the specified deductions, the gross annual value to be taken in the case of agricultural land and ecclesiastical tithe rent-charge at 91l. 11s. 2d. per cent. of the rent-charge on the 1st April, 1936, and at 105l. per cent. of a lay tithe rent-charge not being agricultural land at the same date. The substituted charge is a 60 years' annuity at the like rates charged on the enfranchised land and payable to the Crown. A tithe redemption commission is established, consisting of a chairman and not more than four other Commissioners appointed by the Treasury after consultation with the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries. Their principal duties are (1) to determine what tithe rent-charges have been extinguished by the Act, the amount of stock to be issued and the persons to receive that stock for compensation, and (2) to determine and register the annuities charged in substitution, to apportion annuities in respect of land owned by two or more persons and to manage the annuities until the management is directed to be transferred to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue. Sect. 5 defines the particulars which owners are required to give to the Commission. All collecting lists and similar documents of tithe rent-charge are to be placed at the disposal of the Commission (s. 6). Sect. 7 relates to the issue of stock subject to specified deductions in the Third Schedule and deductions set aside to provide for liabilities to repair chancels, etc. (see s. 29), and the Bank of England is to issue the specified stock upon certificate of the Commission. Sect. 8 relates to transitional provisions. A register of annuities indicating by reference to a map of the district and the land charged is to be made, one copy to be kept at the principal office of the Commission and the other in the district as directed by the Commission (s. 9), and see s. 18 as to registration of owners in the annuities register, and s. 43 as to inspection by the public. Sect. 10 relates to apportionment of or extinguishing certain annuities. Sect. 11 relates to compulsory redemption (supra), and see s. 15, also s. 29 as to corn rents and extraordinary tithe rent-charge. The legal incidents of annuities are set out in s. 13. Sect. 14 provides for remissions where the annuity is over one-third the annual value of agricultural land. Redemption is provided for by s. 15. As to recovery of annuities (inter alia), the relevant provisions of the Tithe Act, 1891 (supra), are reproduced with necessary modifications, and powers of distress are conferred (see s. 16 (5) (a) and (b)). Sect. 17 includes a special definition of owner of the land charged, i.e. (a) the estate owner in respect of the fee-simple unless it is subject to a long lease of more than 14 years at a rent less than a rack rent (see that title), and (b) in the latter case the owner of the term, or if there are one or more successive sub-leases of the kind, the owner of the ultimate lease on which the others are reversionary. Sect. 19 is transitional. Sect. 20 relates to the recovery of arrears due before 2nd October, 1936 (see Queen Anne's Bounty v. Tithe Redemption Commission, Times, 10th July, 1937). Sect. 23 excludes tithe rent-charges extinguished by the Act from rates and future valuation lists. For the meaning of tithe rent-charge and extraordinary tithe rent-charge, see s. 47.

The Act does not affect the so-called 'tithe rent-charge' in the City of London, which is a mere rate, and see s. 47 (1), Tithe Act, 1936.

As to the custody of the tithe apportionment and map by a parish council, see Lewis v. Poole, 1898, 1 Q. B. 164; and s. 36 of the Tithe Rent Act, 1936.

Tithing, a Saxon subdivision of the hundred, replacing the name of township as the unit of local administration (see Stubbs's Constitutional History, vol. i. p. 85) in some parts of England, the name still existing in Somersetshire and Wiltshire; the number or company of ten men with their families, knit together in a society, all of them being bound to the king for their peaceable and good behaviour, the chief of whom was called the tithing-man. See TOWNSHIP.

Tithing-man, a peace-officer, an under-constable. See preceding title.

Tithing-penny. See TEDING-PENNY.

Title : 1, a general head, comprising particulars, as in a book; 2, an appellation of honour or dignity; 3, the means whereby the owner of lands has the just possession of his property—titulus est justa causa possidendi id quod nostrum est : Co. Litt. 345b.

There are several stages and degrees requisite to form a complete title to lands and tenements.

1. The lowest and most imperfect degree of title consists in the mere naked possession, or actual occupation of the estate, without any apparent right or any shadow of pretence of right to hold and continue such possession.

2. The next step to a good and perfect title is the right of possession, which may reside in one man, while the actual possession is not in himself but in another.

3. The mere right of property, the jus proprietatis, without either possession or even the right of possession. This is frequently styled the mere right, jus merum; and the estate of the owner is in such cases said to be totally divested and put to a right.

4. A complete legal title. This exists where the right of possession is joined with the right of property. See 2 Bl. Com. 196.

The principal circumstances to be attended to in drawing conclusions as to title are—

1. That there be a deduction of title to the legal estate for a period of thirty years, unless an earlier title than forty years was required under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, or the Conveyancing Acts, 1881 and 1882, as in the case of leaseholds, advowsons, titles, etc. (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 44, and see ss. 45 et seq.);

2. That the legal estate can be obtained free from any equities affecting it. A stipulation by the vendor that the purchaser of a legal estate shall accept a title made with the concurrence of an equitable beneficiary if title can be made free from equities under a trust for sale or under the Law of Property Act, 1925, or any other statute is void (L. P. Act, 1925), s. 42, and see s. 43 as to registered interests;

3. That all the particular estates either were determined before 1926, or if no vesting deed, trust for sale, probate or grant of administration, vesting or order has been executed or granted or made since 1925, enabling the vendor to deal with the whole legal estate, so that the whole estate can be conveyed under the L. P. Act, 1925, to the purchaser or his trustee free from equitable interests unless the purchaser agrees to accept it subject to a family charge (see Law of Property Amendment Act, 1926).

4. That no reversion or remainder is outstanding in the Crown, or in any stranger; and

5. That there are no registered incumbrances which the purchaser cannot procure either to be extinguished or assigned (see

s. 43, L. P. Act, 1925, as to purchaser's rights of rescission); and if there has been no dealing with the legal estate since 1925, that the purchaser can obtain the estate free from all equities which would have been registrable if they had been created or conveyed after 1925, and of which he has notice. See LAND CHARGES.

There are at least three species of doubtful titles: (1) where the title is doubtful by reason of some uncertainty in the law itself; (2) where the doubt is as to the application of some settled principle or rule of law; and (3) where a matter of fact upon which a title depends is either not in its nature capable of satisfactory proof, or, being capable of such proof, is yet not satisfactorily proved.

There is no defect which more frequently renders it impossible for a person who has a good title to prove it, and enables a party who has a bad title fraudulently to exhibit a colourable ownership, than the want of evidence of the identity of the parcels.

A good title to a freehold or leasehold estate is made whenever it appears that the legal estate in the property contracted for will become vested in the purchaser free from any equity which would be capable of being over-reached by a disposition in trust for sale made in pursuance of the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 2 (2), as amended by the amending Act of 1926 (see K. & E., Vol. I., Part I. p. 235), and free from all incumbrances not specially provided for in the contract; see ABSTRACT and CONDITIONS OF SALE, and consult Dart or Williams on Vendors and Purchasers.

See REAL REPRESENTATIVE and REGISTRATION.

The title to things personal may be acquired by: (1) Occupancy. (2) Invention. (3) Prerogative. (4) Forfeiture. (5) Custom. (6) Succession. (7) Marriage. (8) Judgment. (9) Gift or grant. (10) Contract. (11) Bankruptcy. (12) Will. (13) Administration. (14) Statute.

Title, Covenants for. In every conveyance of real or personal property expressed to be conveyed by the instrument of conveyance made on or after the 1st January, 1882, and in regard to assents by personal representatives, after 1925, of land, certain 'covenants for title' (being for the most part usually expressed in the conveyance before that date), of which the following is an abstract, are implied by virtue of the 7th section of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), replaced and extended by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 76, and 2nd Sched., but in the following cases A and B the covenants are limited, while in cases C and D they are unqualified and absolute (see David v. Sabin, 1893, 1 Ch. 523):—

(A) In a conveyance for valuable consideration other than a mortgage by a person expressed to convey as beneficial owner:—That, notwithstanding anything done, omitted, etc., by the person conveying, or anyone through whom he derives title otherwise than by purchase for value that the person conveying has the right to convey:—That the person to whom the conveyance is made shall 'quietly enjoy' the subject-matter of the conveyance without disturbance by the person conveying, or any person claiming by, through, under, or in trust for the person conveying:—That the subject-matter of the conveyance is free from incumbrances by the person conveying or anyone deriving title from him or from whom he derives title otherwise than by purchase for value, except as expressly mentioned in the conveyance:—And that the person conveying, and every person claiming through him otherwise than by purchase for value, and anyone through whom he derives title otherwise than by purchase for value will execute all such 'further assurances' for more perfectly assuring the subject-matter of the conveyance to the person to whom it is made, as from time to time may reasonably be required.

(B) In a conveyance of leasehold property for valuable consideration other than a mortgage, the further covenant, by a person expressed to convey as beneficial owner:—That notwithstanding anything done or omitted by that person or anyone from whom he derives title otherwise than by purchase for value as mentioned, the lease creating the term is valid, unforfeited, unsurrendered, and in nowise become void or voidable, and that the obligations under the lease have been performed.

In these provisions A and B purchase for value does not include a conveyance in consideration of marriage.

(C) In a conveyance by way of mortgage or charge by a person expressed to convey as beneficial owner, an unqualified covenant for right to convey, with the addition that if default be made in payment of the money intended to be secured or interest thereon, the person to whom the conveyance is made may thenceforth enter upon and enjoy the subject-matter of the conveyance, and with the benefit of the same covenants for 'freedom from incumbrance ' and ' further assurance ' as in (A).

(D) In a conveyance by way of mortgage (including charge or lien) of freehold property subject to rent or leasehold property by a person expressed to convey as beneficial owner, that without any qualification the grant or lease is valid and in full force and is nowise void or voidable, and also a covenant that the person conveying or the person deriving title under him has paid the rent and performed the covenants and will pay the rent and perform the covenants under the lease, and will keep the person to whom the conveyance is made indemnified against actions for non-payment of rent or breach of covenant.

The same section of the Act also implies a limited covenant for further assurance in a conveyance by way of settlement by a person expressed to convey as settlor; and against incumbrances in a conveyance by a trustee, mortgagee, etc., expressed to convey as trustee, mortgagee, personal representative, committee or receiver of a person of unsound mind or under an order of court, etc.

For covenants implied upon a conveyance for value made after 1925 (not being a mortgage and not being a lease for rent) of any land affected by a rent-charge and for similar covenants upon an assignment for value made after 1925 (not being a mortgage) of a lease, see s. 77, L. P. Act, 1925, and 2nd Sched. As to cross powers of distress and entry, see L. P. Act, 1925, s. 190. For covenants implied in respect of registered land, see Land Registration Act, 1925, and Land Registry Rules, r. 77.

Title-deeds. See TITLE TO LANDS, DOCUMENTS OF.

Title of Clergymen (to orders), the assurance required by the 33rd Canon, and generally given by a nomination to a curacy, that a person seeking ordination has some place where he may exercise the functions of an ordained person.

Title to Lands, Documents of. As to dealing with title-deeds as mere personal chattels, see Swanley Coal Co. v. Denton, 1906, 2 K. B. 873. Properly speaking, however, they are not chattels; Coke calls them 'the sinewes of the land' (Co. Litt. 6 a), and they are so closely connected with it that they will pass, on a conveyance of the land, without being expressly mentioned; the property in the deeds passes out of the vendor to the purchaser simply by the grant of the land itself.—Williams on Personal Property. Sect. 45 (1) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, provides that a vendor shall be entitled to retain documents of title where (a) he retains any part of the land to which the documents relate, or (b) the document consists of a trust instrument or other instrument creating a trust which is still subsisting or an instrument relating to the appointment or discharge of a trustee of a subsisting trust. As a rule the estate owner (q.v.) is entitled to possession of the documents relating to his title (see Clayton v. Clayton, 1930, 2 Ch. 12).

By the Larceny Act, 1861, s. 28, as amended, 'Whosoever shall, for any fraudulent purpose, destroy, cancel, obliterate, or conceal the whole or any part of any document of title to lands, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be kept in penal servitude for the term of three years; or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.' The term, 'document of title to lands,' includes any deed, map, paper, or parchment, written or printed, or partly written and partly printed, being or containing evidence of the title, or any part of the title, to any real estate, or to any interest in or out of real estate (s. 1). As to theft, see Larceny Act, 1916, ss. 7 and 46.

In the Forgery Act, 1913, 'document of title to lands' includes any deed, map, roll, register, or instrument in writing being or containing evidence of the title or any part of the title to any land or any interest in or arising out of any land, or any authenticated copy thereof (s. 18 (1)). See FORGERY.

Title to Lands, Registration of. See REGISTRATION.

Titles (Ecclesiastical). By the Ecclesiastical Titles Assumption Act, 1851, the assumption of the title of archbishop or bishop of a pretended province or diocese, or archbishop or bishop of a city, place, or territory in England or Ireland, not being the see, province, or diocese of an archbishop or bishop, recognized by law, was prohibited under penalties; but this Act (which was passed after great public excitement, in consequence of the division of England into Roman Catholic dioceses by Pope Pius IX., under Cardinal Wiseman, as Archbishop of Westminster) was never enforced, and has been repealed by the Ecclesiastical Titles Act, 1871.

Titles of Honour are a species of incorporeal hereditament: see Co. Litt. 20 a, and Mr. Hargrave's note (3); Earl Ferrers' Case, 2 Eden, App., p. 373. Accordingly a baronetcy was held to be 'land' within the meaning of the Settled Land Act, 1882, so that heirlooms annexed to the baronetcy could be sold with the leave of the Court (Re Rivett-Carnac, (1885) 30 Ch. D. 136, Chitty, J.).

Titulars of Erection. See LORDS OF ERECTION.

Toalla, a towel. There is a tenure of lands by the service of waiting with a towel at the king's coronation.

Tobacco. The growth of tobacco was formerly prohibited in any part of the United Kingdom, and any person growing it was liable to a penalty of 10*l.* for every rood grown, recoverable by penal action. See 12 Car. 2, c. 34 (the preamble of which shows the origin of the prohibition to have been the protection and maintenance of the colonies and plantations in America, and of the commerce of this country with them); 15 Car. 2, c. 7; and the Tobacco Cultivation Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 13). As to Ireland the Irish Tobacco Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 3), largely removed the restrictions as to growth, etc., and similar provision is now made for Scotland and England by the Finance (1909–10) Act, 1910, which repeals the two Acts of Charles II. and the Act of 1831, and by s. 83 (5) entirely removes all prohibition or restraint on the growth, making, or curing of tobacco in England and Scotland, and at the same time imposes (s. 83 (2)) an excise duty of 5*s.* for a licence to grow, cultivate, or cure tobacco.

The duties on tobacco are mainly imposed by the Manufactured Tobacco Act, 1863, as amended by subsequent Acts. As to the duty on tobacco grown for agricultural purposes, see Finance Act, 1912, s. 4.

Tobacco factories, as 'non-textile,' are subject to the restrictions of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901. See FACTORY.

By the Children Act, 1933, s. 7 (see CHILDREN), it is an offence to sell cigarettes to a person apparently under 16, or other forms of tobacco, unless the seller had no reason to believe that such tobacco was for the use of that person. There is also power for certain persons to seize any tobacco or cigarettes in the possession of a person apparently under 16 who is found smoking.

Tobago and Trinidad. See 11 & 12 Vict. c. 22; 18 & 19 Vict. c. 107.

Toft, a place where a message has stood.—2 Br. & Had. Com. 17.

Toftman, the owner or possessor of a toft.
Togati, Roman advocates.

Token : 1, a sign of the existence of a fact : 2, private money.

Tolbooth, a prison, a custom-house, an exchange; also the place where goods are weighed. The ancient Tolbooth, or city prison, of Edinburgh was commonly called 'The Heart of Midlothian.' It was built by the citizens in 1561 and removed, with the mass of buildings in which it was incorporated, in 1817.

Toleration Act (1 W. & M. st. 1, c. 18), confirmed by 10 Anne, c. 2, by which all persons dissenting from the Church of England (except Papists and persons denying the Trinity) were relieved from such of the Acts against Nonconformists as prevented their assembling for religious worship according to their own forms, or otherwise restrained their religious liberty, on condition of their taking the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and subscribing a declaration against transubstantiation; and in the case of dissenting ministers, subscribing also to certain of the Thirty-nine Articles. So much of the Toleration Act as excepted persons denying the Trinity from its benefits, and so much of the Blasphemy Act of William III. as related to persons who 'deny any one of the Three Persons in the Holy Trinity to be God,' were repealed in 1813 by 53 Geo. 3, c. 160. See the case of Lady Hewley's Charities, Shore v. Wilson, (1842) 9 Cl. & Fin. 355, and the Act was repealed, save for some minor provisions in s. 5, part of s. 8 and s. 15, by the Promissory Oaths Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 48).

Toll [fr. tollō, Lat.], to bar, defeat, or take away, as to 'toll an entry' is to deny and take away the right of entry. See Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27), s. 39.

Toll [fr. tol, Sax. and Dut. ; told, Dan. ; toll, Wel. ; taille, Fr.] has two significations :—

(1) A liberty to buy and sell within the precincts of the manor, which seems to import as much as a fair or market.

(2) A tribute or custom paid for passage. For its importance in railway law, see ss. 3, 86 and 92 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 86, providing that :—

It shall be lawful for the company to use and employ locomotive engines or other moving power, and carriages and waggons to be drawn or propelled thereby, and to carry and convey upon the railway all such passengers and goods as shall be offered to them for that purpose, and to make such reasonable charges in respect thereof as they may from time to time determine upon, not exceeding the tolls by the special Act authorized to be taken by them.

By s. 3 'toll' includes 'any rate or other payment payable under the special Act for any passenger, animal, carriage, goods, merchandise, articles, matters or things conveyed on the railway.' See RAILWAY, and Hunt v. Great Northern Railway Co., (1851) 10 C. B. 900.

County Courts have no jurisdiction over tolls (County Courts Act, 1933, s. 40).

Tollage, any custom or imposition.

Tolldish, a vessel by which the toll of corn for grinding is measured.

Toller, one who collects tribute or taxes.

Toll-gatherer, the officer who takes or collects toll.

Toll-thorough, when a town prescribes to have toll for such a number of beasts, or for every beast that goes through the town, or over a bridge or ferry belonging to it.—Com. Dig., tit. 'Toll' (C).

Toll-traverse, or Travers, toll taken for every beast driven across a man's land. He may prescribe and distrain for it viâ regis.—Cro. Eliz. 710.

Tolsester, an old excise; a duty paid by tenants of some manors to the lord for liberty to brew and sell ale.

Tolsey, the same as tolbooth, which see. Also a place where merchants meet. The Tolzey Court is a local tribunal, for civil causes, held at the Guildhall, Bristol. The Recorder of Bristol is the judge of this court, and has jurisdiction over mixed and personal actions of a judge of the King's Bench Division provided the cause of action arose within 'the city and county of Bristol,' whatever be the amount claimed.

Tolt, a writ whereby a cause depending in a court-baron was taken and removed into a county court.—O. N. B. 4.

Tolta, wrong, rapine, extortion.

Ton, 20 cwt. of 112 lbs. avoirdupois each: see Weights and Measures Act, 1878, s. 14.

Tonnage, the estimated number of tons burden that a ship will carry; as to measurement, see ss. 77 to 78 and Sched. II. of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and ss. 54, 55 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1906 (Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Shipping').

Tonnage Duties, those imposed on wines imported, according to a certain rate per ton. This, with poundage, was formerly granted to the sovereign for life by Acts of Parliament, usually passed at the beginning of each reign; but by 1 Geo. 1, c. 12, and 3 Geo. 1, c. 7 (repealed), they were made perpetual.

Tontine, a life-annuity, or a loan raised on life-annuities, with benefit of survivorship. The term originated from the circumstance that Lorenzo Tonti, an Italian, invented this kind of security in the seventeenth century, when the Governments of Europe had some difficulty in raising money in consequence of the wars of Louis XIV., who first adopted the plan in France. A loan was obtained from several individuals on the grant of an annuity to each of them, on the understanding that, as deaths occurred, the annuity should continue payable to the survivors, and that the last survivor should take the whole. This mode of raising money has more than once been adopted by the English Government (see, e.g., 29 Geo. 3, c. 41, amended by 30 Geo. 3, c. 45), and also for the purpose of private speculations, but it has almost entirely fallen into disuse.

Tools. As to their privilege from distress, see DISTRESS. In bankruptcy, Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 38, and as to execution upon tools of trade of small value, see Small Debts Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 127), s. 8.

Tools, Exportation of. This was formerly a criminal offence, but it is no longer so, since the restrictions upon trade are removed.—4 Steph. Com.

Tor, Tolra, or Tyrra, a mount or hill.

Tora Garas Huk, an annual payment or rent-charge of a fixed nature on a village jampa, made by the Bombay Government through their collectors in the different zillahs of Guzerat.—Indian.

Torrens' Act, the repealed Artisans' and Labourers' Dwellings Act, 1868. See LABOURERS' DWELLINGS.

Tort [fr. tortus, Lat.], an injury or wrong independent of contract, as by assault, libel, malicious prosecution, negligence, slander, or trespass (see those titles). Actions are divided into actions in contract and actions in tort: see as to county court jurisdiction in actions of tort when claim is under 100l. (except libel, slander, seduction). See County Courts Act, 1934, s. 40, and as to costs of actions of tort commenced in High Court which could have been commenced in County Court, see s. 47, and COUNTY COURT. An action founded on tort has been held to include—detinue (Bryant v. Herbert, (1877) 3 C. P. D. 389); an action against a carrier for loss of goods by refusal to stop in transitu (Pontifex v. Mid. Ry. Co., (1877) 3 Q. B. D. 23); and an action for injury to a railway passenger (Kelly v. Metropolitan Ry. Co., 1895, 1 Q. B. 944). The distinction between tort and contract is not a logical one and it is sometimes difficult to say whether a particular thing is a wrong or a breach of contract. If the claim of the plaintiff had been set out at large, pointing to some particular stipulation in the contract, which stipulation had been broken, the action would be founded on contract, but where it is only necessary to refer to the contract to establish the relationship between the parties and the claim goes on to aver a breach of duty arising out of that relationship, the action is one of tort—per Collins, M.R., in Sachs v. Henderson, 1902, 1 K. B. 612. Apparently if the plaintiff has suffered an injury for which, apart from the contract, he could have recovered damages, it is a tort, although it may also be a breach of contract and not less if the tort has been suffered in the execution or purported execution of the contract (Turner v. Stallibrass, 1898, 1 Q. B. 56).

A married woman cannot sue her husband for tort unless the action is for the protection and security of her separate property (Ralston v. Ralston, 1930, 2 K. B. 238). Consult Addison on Torts; Clerk & Lindsell on Torts.

Tortfeasor, a wrongdoer; a trespasser.

Tortious, anything done by wrong; an act involving a forfeiture of property. See INNOCENT CONVEYANCES.

Torture, an account of this atrocious expedient may be found in the Encyclopædia Britannica (tit. 'Torture'). Reference may also be made to Jardine's Reading on the Use of Torture in the Criminal Law of England previously to the Commonwealth (1837), and an article by Mr. Wyatt Paine in the Law Times of January 28th, 1905, at p. 294, where attention is directed to the preamble of the Act for Pirates, 27 Hen. 8, c. 4 (repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1863).

Torture is strictly the infliction of gradually increasing pain for the purpose of extracting confession, or accusation, but it is also used in the secondary sense of those 'cruel and unusual punishments' which, by the Bill of Rights of 1688, 'ought not to be inflicted.' The peine forte et dure (see that title) is also a kind of torture in the primary sense. All three kinds have long been obsolete in English law, and the better opinion is that torture in the primary sense is wholly illegal in England as declared by the judges in 1628, when it was proposed to torture Felton, the assassin of Buckingham, to make him disclose his accomplices. It was, however, frequently the practice to torture by virtue of Royal Warrant, a warrant of 1640, for instance (Jardine, p. 108), directing the Lieutenant of the Tower 'to cause John Archer to be carried to the rack, and that there yourself,' with two named 'serjeants-at-law, shall examine him upon such questions as our said serjeants shall think fit to propose to him.' It was abolished in Scotland by 7 Anne, c. 21, s. 8.

Torquemada in the Inquisition frequently employed torture, and it was only in 1816 that it was abolished by Papal Bull. See Encycl. Brit., ubi sup., sub-tit. 'The Church.'

In Athens the torture was applied to slaves. Aristotle was in favour of it. In Rome, under the Republic, only slaves could be tortured, but under the Empire it was applied to freemen in cases of læsa majestas. Cicero (pro Sulla, c. 28) emphatically denounced it as leaving no place for truth, and Seneca as forcing even the innocent to lie.

Under British rule torture is universally acknowledged to have been a most unsatisfactory mode of getting at the truth, often leading the innocent through weakness to plead guilty to crimes they had not committed.

Tory, originally a nickname for the wild Irish in Ulster. An Act of the Irish Parliament for 'better suppressing tories, robbers, and rapparees,' 7 Wm. 3, c. 21, is repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1878. Afterwards given to, and adopted by, one of the great parliamentary parties. See WHIG.

Totidem verbis [Lat.] (in so many words).

Toties quoties (as often as occasion shall arise).

Totted. A good debt to the Crown is by the officer in the Exchequer noted for such by writing the word 'Tot' to it.—Jac. Law Dict.

Toujours et encore presz [Nor.-Fr.] (always and still ready).

Tourn, the sheriff's tourn or rotation. See SHERIFF'S TOURN.

Tout temps presz encore est [Nor.-Fr.] (always was and is at present ready).

Towage, money paid for towing.

Town, ville [fr. tun, Sax.], a tithing or vill; any collection of houses larger than a village. A place 'cannot be a towne in law, unless it hath, or in time past hath had, a church, and celebration of divine service, sacraments, and burials' (Co. Litt. 115 b). 'And it appeareth by Littleton, that a towne is the genus, and a borough is the species; for hee saith that every borough is a towne, but every towne is not a borough' (ibid.). In London and South Western Ry. Co. v. Blackmore, (1879) L. R. 4 H. L. 611, it was said that where there is such a continuous occupancy of houses that persons living in them may be said to be living in the same town, there the place may be said to be a town. Town, for the purposes of the Licensing Consolidation Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 24), and see Sched. VI., is a borough or urban district with at least 1,000 inhabitants and any adjacent collection of houses so declared by order.

Town Clerk, a fit person (usually, but not necessarily, a solicitor) from time to time appointed by the council of a municipal borough to manage their legal business. He may not be a councillor, and holds office during the pleasure of the council. In case of his illness or absence, the council may appoint a deputy.—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 17 (repealed, except as to London); see Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), ss. 106, 115, 122, 279 (2).

Town Council, the council of a municipal borough, elected by the burgesses to act for the corporation. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.

Town Crier, an officer in a town whose business it is to make proclamations. The time-honoured summons is 'Oyez' (hear ye), repeated three times, accompanied by ringing a bell or blowing a horn.

Town Hall, the hall where the public business of a town is transacted, and on or near the door of which, in the case of a municipal borough, public notices are directed to be fixed by s. 232 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (repealed except as to London). See Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 288.

Town and Country Planning Acts. See IMPROVEMENT OF TOWNS, and Addenda.

Town Police Clauses Acts, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 89), and 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 14). Adoptive Acts. The Act of 1847 related to obstructions and nuisances in streets, fires, places of public resort, hackney carriages, and public bathing and other matters for the order and good government of towns and other districts. The Act of 1847 is still in force as amended; the Act of 1889 was repealed by the Road Traffic Act, 1930; see also Public Health Acts, 1875 to 1936, and Road Traffic Acts, 1930 to 1934.

Township, the district of a town, tithing, or vill, which three are of the same signification in law.—Steph. Com., vol. 1, Introduction. The township is the unit of the early constitutional machinery in England (Stubbs's Constitutional History of England, vol. 1, p. 82), and the boundaries of the parish, and the township or townships with which it coincides, are generally the same (ibid.), 'parish' being properly the ecclesiastical term, and 'township' the civil one.

Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 34). An Adoptive Act. The provisions of this Act relating inter alia to 'naming streets and numbering houses,' 'improving line of streets,' etc., 'ruinous and dangerous buildings,' and 'precautions during construction and repair of sewers, streets, and houses,' are 'for the purpose of regulating such matters in urban districts.' See also the Public Health Acts, 1875 to 1936.

Traction Engine. This expression is generally used with regard to any locomotive used upon a highway—it may be a light locomotive if over 7½, and not exceeding 11½ tons, or a heavy locomotive if over 11½ tons weight unladen; see Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 2, and the Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations, 1931, S. R. & O., No. 4 (see LOCOMOTIVE; MOTOR CAR); Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Highways.' They are frequently employed to draw other vehicles, and if their user occasions extraordinary traffic, the owner will be liable in damages: see Kent County Council v. Gerard (Lord), 1897, A. C. 633; Bromley Council v. Croydon Corporation, 1908, 1 K. B. 353.

Trade [fr. tratta, Ital.], traffic; intercourse; commerce; exchange of goods for other goods, or for money.

As to contracts in restraint of trade, see RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Trade, Board of. The Board of Trade is in theory a committee of the Privy Council, and by s. 12 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, the expression means 'The Lords of the Committee for the time being of the Privy Council appointed for the consideration of matters relating to trade and foreign plantations.' The constitution of the Board rests on an Order in Council of the 5th March, 1784, by which amongst the members composing it are the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Speaker of the House of Commons, the Paymaster-General and the Master of the Mint.

The Board as so constituted has in fact never met, but in practice is an ordinary administrative Government Department, presided over by a President whose salary is determined by Parliament under the Board of Trade Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 23); see also President of Board of Trade Act, 1932 (21 & 22 Geo. 5, c. 21). Its powers include supervision over the following matters:

shipping, railways, mines, companies, bankruptcy and insolvency, assurance, companies, explosives inquiries, and other matters relating to trade.

As to the responsibility of members of the Board, see Kain v. Farrer, reported in The Times, 1st to 5th April and 8th to 12th May, 1879.

Trade Boards. The Trade Boards Act, 1909, as amended by the Trade Boards Act, 1918, applies to certain trades specified in the Schedule, and to such others as are brought within the Act by Order of the Board of Trade or by special Order of the Minister of Labour. The Board of Trade can establish Trade Boards with respect to such trades, and the Boards when established must fix minimum rates for both timework and piecework. Notice must be given of the minimum rates established, and such rates are obligatory on employers, who are placed under penalties if they fail to pay in accordance with such rates. Section 11 gives the constitution and proceedings of Trade Boards under this section :

(1) The Board of Trade may make regulations with respect to the constitution of Trade Boards, which shall consist of members representing employers and members representing workers (in this Act referred to as representative members) in equal proportions and of the appointed members. Any such regulations may be made so as to apply generally to the constitution of all Trade Boards, or specially to the constitution of any particular Trade Board or any particular class of Trade Boards.

And the Board of Trade may make regulations with respect to the proceedings and meetings of Trade Boards as provided by the Act.

Trade Description means ' any description, statement, or other indication, direct or indirect, (a) as to the number, quantity, measure, gauge, or weight of any goods, or (b) as to the place or country in which any goods were made or produced, or (c) as to the mode of manufacturing or producing any goods, or (d) as to the material of which any goods are composed, or (e) as to any goods being the subject of an existing patent, privilege, or copyright, and the use of any figure, word, or mark which, according to the custom of the trade, is commonly taken to be an indication of any of the above matters.' A " false trade description " means a trade description which is false in a material respect as regards the goods to which it is applied, and includes every alteration of a trade description, whether by way of addition, effacement, or otherwise, where that alteration makes the description false in a material respect, and the fact that a trade description is a trade mark, or part of a trade mark, shall not prevent such trade description being a false trade description within the meaning of this Act.' See also the Merchandise Marks Acts, 1894, 1903 and 1911 ; and the Acts 1914 and 1916 (Port and Madeira), and 1926. These Acts provide penalties for infringement.

By the Merchandise Marks Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 53), imported goods bearing the name or trade mark of a British manufacturer or trader are not to be sold unless accompanied by indication of origin, and the prohibition is extended to any other imported goods referred to by Order in Council after inquiry (see s. 2 (ibid.)). Local authorities are authorized to execute the Act in relation to foodstuffs, except in respect of importation (s. 9). Origin may be indicated by the words ' foreign ' or ' Empire,' as the case may be, or by a clear indication of the country of manufacture or production.

Trade Dispute. This expression is defined in s. 5 (3) of the Trade Disputes Act, 1906, as follows :—

' Trade dispute ' means any dispute between employers and workmen, or between workmen and workmen, which is connected with the employment or non-employment or the terms of the employment, or with the conditions of labour, of any person, and the expression ' workmen ' means all persons employed in trade or industry whether or not in the employment of the employer with whom a trade dispute arises.

By s. 1, ' An act done in pursuance of an agreement or combination by two or more persons shall, if done in contemplation of a trade dispute, not be actionable unless the act, if done without any such agreement or combination, would be actionable.' But the provisions of the Act shall not apply to any act done in contemplation or furtherance of a strike or lock-out which is by the Trade Disputes and Trade Unions Act, 1927 (see s. 1 (1), (4) ), declared to be illegal, and any such act shall not be deemed to be done in furtherance of a trade dispute. The Act does not apply to illegal strikes or lock-outs within the meaning of the Trade Disputes and Trade Unions Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 22). See STRIKE, and also PICKETING ; TRADE UNION ; Conway v. Wade, 1909, A. C. 506 ; Larkin v. Long, 1915, A. C. 814.

Trade Facilities Acts, 1921 to 1926. By these Acts the Treasury was authorized to guarantee (after consultation with advisory committees before 31st March, 1927), up to a maximum of 75 million pounds, the capital or interest of any capital expenditure loan, raised by any Government, public authority or company, for purposes calculated to promote employment in the United Kingdom.

Trade Libel. See LIBEL.

Trade Marks. By the Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 3 :—

A 'mark' shall include a device, brand, heading, label, ticket, name, signature, word, letter, numeral or any combination thereof.

A 'trade mark' shall mean a mark used or proposed to be used upon or in connexion with goods for the purpose of indicating that they are the goods of the proprietor of such trade mark by virtue of manufacture, selection, certification, dealing with, or offering for sale.

A 'registrable trade mark' shall mean a trade mark which is capable of registration under the provisions of this Act.

Subject to the Trade Mark Acts, the owner of a trade mark has a right to its use in connection with the goods associated with it, whether or not it is registered or registrable by him, and if that right is infringed by a sale of other goods under his mark, or a colourable imitation or otherwise so as to be calculated to deceive a purchaser that those goods are goods of his manufacture, sale or mark, the owner is protected by the common law action of passing off, one of the forms of deceit, and see title TRADE DESCRIPTION.

The Trade Mark Acts, 1905 to 1919, provide a further protection. Trade Marks may be registered in the Register of Trade Marks, of which the Comptroller-General of Patents is the Registrar under Part A or B of the Register. The effect of registration under A (see ss. 38 to 45 of the Act of 1905 as amended by the 1909 Act (2nd Sched.)) is, that, subject to the statutory provisions, the registered trade mark in itself becomes the exclusive and assignable property of the owner in connection with the class of goods for which it is registered, for the infringement of which the statutory remedies are available. No unregistered owner can avail himself of any such remedy for infringement of a trade mark (apart from passing off) unless the mark was in use before 13th August, 1875, and has been refused registration by the Registrar (s. 42 of 1905). The effect of registration in Part B of the Register is that the registration affords prima facie evidence only that the registered proprietor has the exclusive right to use the trade mark but that it is open to the defendant in an action for infringement to prove that the user of which the plaintiff complains is not calculated to deceive or to lead to the belief that the goods, the subject of such user, were goods manufactured, selected, certified, dealt with or offered for sale by the proprietor of the mark.

As a rule trade marks must be registered within twelve months after application. After seven years, registration under Part A is conclusive. For the general law relating to application, inquiries, opposition and registration, etc., see the Acts. A trade mark can only be assigned in connection with the goodwill of the business in the goods for which it has been registered (s. 22 of 1905); and see Addenda.

A county court may not entertain an action for infringement (Bow v. Hart, 1905, 1 K. B. 693).

As to the marking of Irish hand-woven goods, see the Irish Handloom Weavers Act, 1909. See also Trade Mark Rules, 1920 (S. R. & O. 1920, No. 397) and 1925 (S. R. & O. 1925, No. 1057), and consult Kerly on Trade Marks.

Trader, one engaged in trade or commerce. See BANKRUPT. As to who were 'traders' within the meaning of the repealed Bankruptcy Act, 1869, see Schedule I. of that Act.

Trade Union. The Acts 30 & 31 Vict. c. 8, 74, provided for facilitating the proceedings of a commission appointed by Queen Victoria to inquire into and report on the organization and rules of trade unions, and other associations of employers and workmen. The Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), provides :—

Section 2. 'The purposes of any trade union shall not, by reason merely that they are in restraint of trade, be deemed to be unlawful, so as to render any member of such trade union liable to criminal prosecution for conspiracy or otherwise.'

Section 3. 'The purposes of any trade union shall not, by reason merely that they are in restraint of trade, be unlawful so as to render void or voidable any agreement or trust.'

Section 4. 'Nothing in this Act shall enable any court to entertain any legal proceeding instituted with the object of directly enforcing or recovering damages for breach of any of the following agreements, namely,

- (1) Any agreement between members of a trade union as such, concerning the conditions on which any members for the time being of such trade union shall or shall not sell their goods, transact business, employ, or be employed ;
- (2) Any agreement for the payment by any person of any subscription or penalty to a trade union ;
- (3) Any agreement for the application of the funds of a trade union :—

- (a) To provide benefits to members; or
- (b) To furnish contributions to any employer or workman not a member of such trade union, in consideration of such employer or workman acting in conformity with the rules or resolutions of such trade union; or
- (c) To discharge any fine imposed upon any person by sentence of a court of justice; or
- (4) Any agreement made between one trade union and another; or
- (5) Any bond to secure the performance of any of the above-mentioned agreements.

'But nothing in this section shall be deemed to constitute any of the above-mentioned agreements unlawful.'

The Act, which was amended as to insurance of children's lives, the membership of minors, the local jurisdiction of justices, and other matters by the Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876, provides for the registration of unions by the Registrar of Friendly Societies, but excludes the operation of the Friendly Societies Acts, the Industrial and Provident Societies Acts, and the Companies Acts. By s. 6 of the 1871 Act, any seven or more members may register, but the registration is void if any of the purposes of the union are unlawful. The Act of 1871 was further and very materially amended by the Trade Union Act, 1913, and the Trade Disputes and Trade Unions Act, 1927. These Acts make further provision as to registration, amend the law as to the objects and powers of a trade union, declare certain strikes and lock-outs illegal, prevent intimidation of workers, restrict and regulate the application of trade union funds for political purposes. The latter Act regulates the membership of trade unions of civil servants.

In the celebrated case of Allen v. Flood, 1898, A. C. 1, it was held by a majority of six to three in the House of Lords, after consulting eight judges, and reversing the judgment of the Court of Appeal, that no action lay against Mr. Allen (who was the London delegate of the boiler-makers' society) by two dismissed shipwrights for maliciously inducing their employer to dismiss them. The trade union in that case threatened a strike unless workmen who had broken a trade union rule were dismissed, and the employer yielded to the threats; but the House of Lords afterwards held in Quinn v. Leathem, 1901, A. C. 495, that a combination of two or more without justification or excuse to injure a man in his trade by inducing his customers or servants to break their contracts with him or not to deal with him or continue in his employment is, if it results in damage to him, actionable; in this case the employer recovered 250*l.* from the president, secretary, treasurer, and two members of a trade union registered as the 'Belfast Journeymen Butchers and Assistants Association.'

It was held in the Taff Vale Railway case that a trade union registered under the Act of 1871 might be sued in its registered name, so as to be liable for the consequences of a strike instigated and regulated by its secretaries (Taff Vale Ry. Co. v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, 1901, A. C. 426), but the effect of this decision appears to be overridden by the Trade Disputes Act, 1906, s. 4 of which is as follows:—

4.—(1) An action against a trade union, whether of workmen or masters, or against any members or officials thereof on behalf of themselves and all other members of the trade union in respect of any tortious act alleged to have been committed by or on behalf of the trade union, shall not be entertained by any court.

(2) Nothing in this section shall affect the liability of the trustees of a trade union to be sued in the events provided for by the Trade Union Act, 1871, section 9, except in respect of any tortious act committed by or on behalf of the union in contemplation or in furtherance of a trade dispute.

The section is general in its application and is not limited to tortious acts committed in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute (Vacher & Sons v. London Society of Compositors, 1913, A. C. 107), and 'trade union' is not limited to masters and workmen: Hardie v. Chiltern, 1928, 1 K. B. 663 (motor manufacturers).

See CONSPIRACY; PICKETING; STRIKE; TRADE DISPUTE; MASTER AND SERVANT. Consult Cohen's Trade Union Law.

Trading with the Enemy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 87), provided that any person who 'during the present war [i.e., the war with Germany] trades or has since 4th August, 1914, traded with the enemy within the meaning of this Act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour. The Act was partly repealed (S. R. & O. 1921 (No. 1276), and see 15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 43). As to what constitutes an alien enemy, see Daimler Co. v. Continental Tyre Co., 1916, 2 A. C. 307.

Tradition, the act of handing over; delivery.

Trallbaston, Court of, erected by Edward I. by the statute of Ragman. This was a commission of oyer and terminer of an unusual kind, and was issued in the fulness of zeal for the correction of public disorders. The rigour, however, with which this was executed creating some discontent, it was thought expedient, in course of time, to discontinue it.—2 Reeves, p. 277 ; 4 Inst. 186.

Trainbands, the militia ; the part of a community trained to martial exercises.

Training, Military, without full authority, illegal, by the Unlawful Drilling Act, 1819 (60 Geo. 3 & 1 Geo. 4, c. 1) ; and see SEDITION.

Traitor [fr. traditor, Lat.], one who, being trusted, betrays ; one guilty of treason. See TREASON.

Traitor's Gate, the river gate of the Tower of London by which traitors, and state prisoners generally, were committed to the Tower.—Oxf. Dict.

Tramways, rails for conveyance of traffic along a road not owned, as a railway is, by those who lay down the rails and convey the traffic. The construction and regulation of tramways is provided for by the Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), and numerous special Acts. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Tramways' ; and Sutton's Tramways Acts.

As to purchase of tramways by local authority within six months after the expiration of twenty-one years from the time of authorization of construction, or within six months after the expiration of every subsequent period of seven years, see s. 43 of the Tramways Act, 1870, as amended by the Local Government Act, 1933, and London Street Tramways Co. v. London County Council, 1894, A. C. 489. As to the powers of the Ministry of Transport, see ss. 2 and 5 of the Ministry of Transport Act, 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 50).

The abandonment of tramways is regulated by ss. 41, 42 of the Act of 1870.

As to the partial exemption from rates, see Thornton Urban Council v. Blackpool Tramroad Co., 1909, A. C. 264, and as to liability to a passenger, see Clarke v. West Ham Corporation, 1909, 2 K. B. 858, and QUARTER RATING.

Transcript, a copy ; anything written from an original.

Transcripto pedis finis levati mittendo in cancellariam, a writ which certified the foot of a fine levied before justices in eyre, etc., into the Chancery.—Rev. Brev. 169, 4th ed.

Transcripto recognitionis factæ coram iusticiariis itinerantibus, etc., an old writ to certify a cognizance taken by justices in eyre.—Ibid. 151.

Transfer, to convey ; to make over to another ; the document by which property, as shares in public companies, is made over by one to another. The Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106) (reproduced in an amended form by s. 52, Law of Property Act, 1925) provided that a transfer (therein called a feoffment) (see that title) of land, and an assignment of a lease (therein called a 'chattel interest') of land must be by deed. See DEED.

By the Companies Act, 1929, s. 62, shares or other interest of any member in a company shall be personal estate transferable in manner provided by the articles of the company, and under s. 63 (ibid.), a transfer of shares in or debentures of the company is not to be registered except on production of a proper instrument of transfer (as provided for by the articles (see Table A or other articles). As to shares transmissible by law or by personal representatives, and other matters relating to transfer, see ss. 52 to 66. See also for power to transfer shares, s. 14 of the Companies Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 16). As to the transfer of chattels, see SALE OF GOODS ACT ; GIFT ; Goodeve on Personal Property.

A forged transfer is a nullity. See FORGERY.

Transfer of Cases. By the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 59 (replacing Judicature Act, 1873, s. 36), and R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XLIX., power is given to transfer causes from one Division of the High Court to another.

Transfer of Land Acts. The Land Registry Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 53), and the Land Transfer Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87), were passed to facilitate the transfer of land in England. The Acts were practically a dead letter : see Report of Select Committee of House of Commons on Land Titles and Transfers, 1879. Compulsory registration on Order of Council not dissented from by the local county council was introduced by the Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65). The first Order in Council (18th July, 1898) applied compulsory registration to the Administrative County of London as from specified dates ; this Act has been superseded by the Land Registration Act, 1925 (see REGISTRATION OF TITLE), and as to the previous Acts, Fortescue-Brickdale and Sheldon's Land Transfer Acts. The L. T. Act, 1897, Part I., established a 'Real Representative,' see that title.

Transgressione, a writ or action of trespass.

Transhipment, taking the cargo out of one ship, and loading another with it.

Transire, a warrant or permit from the custom-house to let goods pass.

Transitory Actions were those in which the venue might be laid in any county. See VENU.

Transitus. See STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

Translation, the removal from one place to another; the removal of a bishop to another diocese.

Transport, Ministry of, was established by the Ministry of Transport Act, 1919, to take over the duties of various Government departments in relation to transport. See the Act and the London Traffic Act, 1924.

Transportation, the banishing or sending away a criminal into another country.

This punishment was introduced in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, 39 Eliz. c. 4. The word is first used in the 14 Car. 2, c. 23. The punishment was chiefly regulated by 5 Geo. 4, c. 84. Returning from transportation before the expiration of the term of punishment was an offence against public justice, and punishable by transportation for life.—4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 67. Transportation has been superseded by penal servitude under the Penal Servitude Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 99), as amended by subsequent Acts. See PENAL SERVITUDE.

Also the carriage of passengers or property.

Transubstantiation, 'the change of the substance of the Bread and Wine in the Supper of our Lord' (Art. 28 of the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion); 'a conversion of the whole substance of the Bread into the Body and of the whole substance of the Wine into the Blood, which conversion the Catholic Church calls Transubstantiation.'—Creed of Pope Pius IV., founded on Ch. iv., sess. xiii., of the Council of Trent.

Declaration against Transubstantiation.—A Declaration (commonly called the 'Declaration against Transubstantiation') was required of all members of either House of Parliament in 1678, by 30 Car. 2, st. 2, c. 1, with the effect of disabling Roman Catholics from sitting in either House till the passing of the Roman Catholic Relief Act of 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7).

Declaration by each new Sovereign.—Both the Bill of Rights (1 W. & M. sess. 2, c. 2), and the Act of Settlement (12 & 13 Wm. 3, c. 2), by an incorporation, by reference only, of 30 Car. 2, st. 2, c. 1 (of which 'so much as is unrepealed' was repealed by the Parliamentary Oaths Act, 1866), required the sovereign 'on the first day of the meeting of the first Parliament next after his or her coming to the crowne sitting in his or her throne in the House of Peeres in the presence of the lords and commons therein assembled or at his or her coronation (which shall first happen)' to 'make subscribe and audibly repeate' the Declaration, as also did, in the case of many officials, etc., the Test Act and the Toleration Act. The Declaration was as follows:—

I A. B. do solemnly and sincerely in the presence of God profess testify and declare that I do believe that in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper there is not any transubstantiation of the elements of bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ at or after the consecration thereof by any person whatsoever; and that the invocation or adoration of the Virgin Mary or any other saint, and the sacrifice of the mass as they are now used in the Church of Rome are superstitious and idolatrous, and I do solemnly in the presence of God profess testify and declare that I do make this declaration and every part thereof in the plain and ordinary sense of the words read unto me as they are commonly understood by English protestants without any evasion [sic., but, in the Statutes of the Realm, evasion] equivocation or mental reservation whatsoever, and without any dispensation already granted me for that purpose by the Pope or any other authority or person whatsoever or without thinking that I am or can be acquitted before God or man or absolved of this declaration or any part thereof although the Pope or any other person or persons or power whatsoever should dispense with or annul the same or declare that it was null and void from the beginning.

See now the Accession Declaration Act, 1910, under the title BILL OF RIGHTS.

Transumps. An action of transumpt is an action competent to any one having a partial interest in a writing, or immediate use for it, to support his title or defences in other actions. It is directed against the custodian of the writing, calling upon him to exhibit it, in order that a transumpt, i.e., a copy, may be judicially made and delivered to the pursuer. The action is now very rare.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Traveller. Under the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, s. 61 (see INTOXICATING LIQUORS), intoxicating liquors were not to be sold at certain hours except to 'bonâ fide travellers,' and by s. 61 (3) a person was not to be deemed a 'bonâ fide traveller unless the place where he lodged during the preceding night is at least three miles distant from the place where he demands to be supplied with liquor'; but although a man was not a bonâ fide traveller unless he had travelled the three miles, he did not necessarily become so by merely having travelled the three miles. The expression bonâ fide, which appears to owe its origin to the Scottish Forbes-Mackenzie Act (16 & 17 Vict. c. 67), seems merely intended to point the distinction between those who travel to drink, and those who drink to travel. Section 61 of the Act of 1910 was repealed by the Licensing Act, 1921. Consult Paterson's Licensing Acts.

For obligation of innkeepers to entertain travellers, but travellers only, see INN-KEEPER, and Sealey v. Tandy, 1903, 1 K. B. 296.

Traverse, the denial of some matter of fact alleged in a pleading, whether in an action or in criminal prosecutions. See PLEADING; STATEMENT OF DEFENCE.

Traverse of an Office, proof that an inquisition made of lands or goods by the escheator is defective and untrue made.

Traverser, in Ireland, a prisoner.

Traversing Indictment, postponing the trial of it.

The Criminal Procedure Act, 1851, s. 16, repeals 60 Geo. 3 & 1 Geo. 4, c. 4, as to the traverse of indictments in cases of misdemeanour, and provides, by s. 27, that no person prosecuted shall be entitled to traverse or postpone the trial of any indictment found against him at any session of the peace, session of oyer and terminer, or session of gaol delivery; but if the Court upon the application of the person so indicted, or otherwise, thinks that he ought to be allowed a further time to prepare for his defence, or otherwise, such Court may adjourn the trial to the next session, upon such terms as to bail, etc., as shall seem meet, and may respite the recognizances of the prosecutor and witnesses; the prosecutor and witnesses to be bound to attend and prosecute and give evidence, without entering into fresh recognizances.

Traversing Note. In equity a plaintiff, after an appearance had been entered, might, in default of answer to interrogatories which had been filed for the examination of the defendant, proceed with his cause by filing a traversing note as to such defendant.—1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 5th ed.

Traversum, a ferry.

Trawling. See SEA FISHERIES ACTS.

T. R. E., the initials of the phrase tempore regis Edwardi.

Treach, Trechetour, or Treachour, a traitor.

Treadmill, an instrument of prison discipline. It was composed of a large revolving cylinder, having ledges or steps fixed round its circumference; the prisoners walked up these ledges, and their weight moved the cylinder round. Now disused.

Treason [fr. trahir, Fr., to betray; proditio, Lat.], or lese-majesty, an offence against the duty of allegiance, and the highest known crime, for it aims at the very destruction of the commonwealth itself. Five species of treason are declared by the Treason Act, 1351, or 'Statute of Treasons' (25 Edw. 3, st. 5, c. 2), as follows:—

(1) When a man doth compass or imagine the death of our lord the king (a queen regnant is within these words), of our lady his queen, or of their eldest son and heir.

(2) If a man do violate the king's companion (i.e., his wife), or the king's eldest daughter unmarried, or the wife of the king's eldest son and heir.

(3) If a man do levy war against our lord the king in his realm. (After a battle has taken place, it is termed bellum percussum; before it, bellum levatum.)

(4) If a man be adherent to the king's enemies in his realm, giving to them aid or comfort in the realm or elsewhere.

(5) If a man slay the chancellor, treasurer, or the king's justices assigned to hear and determine, being in their places during their offices.

The following species have been created by subsequent statutes:—

If any person shall endeavour to deprive or hinder any person, being the next in succession to the crown, according to the limitations of the Act of Settlement (12 & 13 Wm. 3, c. 2), from succeeding to the crown, and shall maliciously and directly attempt the same by any overt act.—1 Anne, st. 2, c. 17, s. 3.

If any person shall maliciously, advisedly, and directly, by writing or printing, maintain and affirm that any other person hath any right or title to the crown of this realm, otherwise than according to the Act of Settlement, or that the kings of this realm, with the authority of Parliament, are not able to make laws and statutes, to bind the crown and the descent thereof.—6 Anne, c. 7.

By 36 Geo. 3, c. 7, made perpetual by 57 Geo. 3, c. 6, compassing the death or injury of the king, and expressing the same in writing or by any overt act, is made treason.

Treason must be prosecuted within three years from its commission, if committed within the realm, except in the case of a designed assassination of the sovereign.—7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 3.

Treason committed out of the king's Dominions is, by 35 Hen. 8, c. 2, triable in the K. B. D., and the Act is one of the enactments by virtue of which a Bill of Indictment may still be preferred before a grand jury of the County of London and Middlesex; see Administration of Justice (Misc. Prov.) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 36), s. 1 (4), and Sched. I.

The punishment of a convicted traitor is death by hanging, the ignominious adjuncts of drawing on a hurdle and quartering, etc. (as to which see 54 Geo. 3, c. 146), having been abolished, along with forfeiture and attainder, by the Forfeiture Act, 1870. By the Treason Act, 1842, as read with s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, treason consisting in the imagining bodily harm to the king in that kind is triable just as murder is. By the same Act firing at the king or striking him is punishable with whipping. The Crown can, however, direct that the traitor be beheaded: see Treason Act, 1814, ss. 1 and 2.

Treason-Felony. Treason-felony is, like treason, a purely statutory offence. By the Treason-Felony Act, 1848, s. 3, as read with s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, 'If any person shall, within the United Kingdom or without, compass to depose the King, or to levy war against him, within any part of the United Kingdom, in order to compel him to change his counsels, or in order to intimidate or overawe Parliament, or to stir any foreigner with force to invade the United Kingdom, or any other His Majesty's dominions, and such compassings shall express by writing, or by open or advised speaking, or by any overt act, he shall be guilty of felony.'

Treasurer, one who has the care of money or treasure. See TREASURY.

There was a Lord High Treasurer of England, but the duties are now executed by commissioners. The Prime Minister generally fills the office of First Lord of the Treasury.

Treasurer of a County, he that keeps the county stock. As to his duties to receive and make payments, and keep books and accounts, see 12 Geo. 2, c. 29, and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 81, s. 50, Chit. Stat., tit. 'County'; Local Government Act, 1888, s. 80; and Local Government Act, 1933, ss. 86, 102, 184.

Treasurer's Remembrancer, he whose charge was to put the Lord Treasurer and the rest of the Judges of the Exchequer in remembrance of such things as were called on and dealt in for the sovereign's behoof. There is still one in Scotland.

Treasure-trove [thesaurus inventus, Lat.], money or coin, gold, silver, plate, or bullion found hidden in the earth or other private place, the owner thereof being unknown or unfound, in which case it belongs to the Crown: see Jervis on Coroners, p. 42. Bracton defines it, vetus depositio pecuniarum. Concealing treasure-trove is punishable by fine or imprisonment.

Coroners have jurisdiction to inquire of treasure-trove, under s. 36 of the Coroners Act, 1887, as theretofore, but not to inquire into any question of title as between the Crown and any other claimant (Attorney-General v. Moore, 1893, 1 Ch. 676).

As to the Roman law on this subject, see Sand. Just.

Treasury. (1) The place where treasure is deposited. (2) The department of state which manages the Public Revenue. The Lord High Treasurer is properly the head of this department; but, in practice, the functions of this great official are discharged by several commissioners. The chief of these is called First Lord; and he is, by custom, the head of the Cabinet (see CABINET COUNCIL), and of the whole executive, for which he is responsible in every department. The Chancellor of the Exchequer is the second commissioner, and there are three others. There are also three secretaries to the Treasury.

Treasury Bills are bills issued by the Treasury payable not later than twelve months after date. Treasury Bills Act, 1877. See FUNDS; EXCHEQUER BILLS.

Treasury Chest Fund. A fund originating in the usual balances of certain grants of public money, and which is used for banking and loan purposes by the Commissioners of the Treasury. See 40 & 41 Vict. c. 45.

Treasury Notes, the popular name of bank notes which were substituted for currency notes, see that title and CURRENCY, and Bank Notes Acts, 1914 and 1928.

Treasury Solicitor. Constituted a Corporation Sole by Treasury Solicitor Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 18). The Treasury Solicitor is no longer Director of Public Prosecutions: see Prosecution of Offences Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 3).

Treating. The temporary Corrupt Practices Prevention Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 102), s. 4, amended by the Corrupt Practices Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 51), ss. 1 and 2, extended to municipal, school board, and other elections by the Corrupt Practices Act, 1884, and continued from time to time by Expiring Laws Continuance Acts, enacts that every candidate who corruptly by himself, or by or with any person or otherwise, before, during, or after any parliamentary election, directly or indirectly gives or provides, or causes to be given or provided, or is accessory to giving or providing, or pays any expenses for meat, drink, entertainment, or provision, for any person, in order to be elected, or for being elected, or for corruptly influencing any person to give or refrain from giving his vote, or on account of having voted or refrained from voting, or being about to vote or refrain from voting, is guilty of treating, and forfeits 50*l.* to any informer with costs. Every voter who corruptly accepts any meat, drink, entertainment, etc., becomes incapable of voting at such election, and his vote is void. As to the origin of treating at elections, see 3 Hallam's Const. Hist. c. 21, p. 302, n. (g).

Treaty, negotiation, act of treating, a compact between nations. It is the sovereign's prerogative to make treaties, leagues, and alliances with foreign states and princes.

Treble Costs. Treble Damages. See DOUBLE OR TREBLE COSTS; DOUBLE OR TREBLE DAMAGES.

Trebucket, a tumbrel, castigatory, or cucking-stool. See CASTIGATORY.

Tree. Overhanging branches may be cut by an adjoining owner without notice to the owner of the tree, provided that the adjoining owner does not go upon the land of the owner of the tree (Lemmon v. Webb, 1895, A. C. 1). No right can be acquired by prescription for trees to overhang: per Lord Macnaghten, ibid.; and an action lies for damage to crops by overhanging trees (Smith v. Giddy, 1904, 1 K. B. 448).

By the Highway Act, 1835, ss. 64-66, no tree may be planted within 15 feet of the centre of a highway. See Stillwell v. New Windsor Corpn., 1932, 2 Ch. 155 (highway authority removing trees transplanted on ancient highway).

Power to plant trees is given to all highway authorities by the Roads Improvement Act, 1925, and also the removal of trees on adjacent land which obstruct the view at corners.

As to the power to lop trees overhanging any street or public road in order to prevent interference with a telegraphic line, see the Telegraph (Construction) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 33). See TELEGRAPHS; TIMBER.

Treet [fr. tritium, Lat.], fine wheat.—51 Hen. 3.

Tremagium, Tremeslum, Tremissium, the season or time of sowing summer-corn, being about March, the third month, to which the word may allude.

Tremellum, granary.

Tressayle, an abolished writ sued on ouster by abatement on the death of the grandfather's grandfather.

Trespas [fr. transgressio, Lat.], any transgression of the law, less than treason, felony, or misprision of either.

The action of trespass lies where a trespass has been committed either to the plaintiff's person or property. A trespass is an injury committed with violence, and this violence may be either actual or implied; and the law will imply violence, though none is actually used, where the injury is of a direct and immediate kind, and committed on the person or tangible and corporeal property of the plaintiff. Of actual violence an assault and battery is an instance; of implied, a peaceable but wrongful entry upon the plaintiff's lands.—Steph. Plead., 7th ed., 11, 37, 154. As to trespass on the case, see CASE and VI ET ARMIS.

Trespas quare clausum fregit. See QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT.

Trespas to Land. For trespass by entry or user of land without right or beyond the limits of a right, no damage need be proved (see also AB INITIO and DAMAGE FEASANT). Trespass by occupation of land is a continuing damage which is actionable from day to day so long as the trespassing person or object remains on the land, but see SUPPORT, and cases cited under that title. The plaintiff must show that he was in possession at the time of the alleged trespass, not merely a right of possession or infringement of a licence, but having entered he is entitled to sue for trespass from the date of the accrual of the right or to 'trespass by relation,' e.g., to mesne profits. Jus tertii or the extraneous right of another who is not in possession is no defence to an action of trespass. See also Air Navigation Act, 1920, s. 9.

Trespasser, one who commits a trespass. In general a person owes no duty to a trespasser, the rule being that a man trespasses at his own risk (Grand Trunk Railway of Canada v. Barnett, 1911, A. C. 370; and see Latham v. R. Johnson & Nephew, 1913, 1 K. B. 398); but an owner of a field upon which to his knowledge the public habitually trespassed was under the circumstances held liable to a trespasser for injuries done to him by a vicious horse which the owner of the field kept there (Lovery v. Walker, 1911, A. C. 10). A man may be a trespasser even on a highway if he is using it for an improper purpose; see Harrison v. Duke of Rutland, 1893, 1 Q. B. 143; and see SPRING GUNS.

Trestonare, to turn or divert another way.

Tret. See ALLOWANCE.

Trethings [fr. trethu, Welsh, to tax], taxes, imposts.

Treys, taken out or withdrawn, as withdrawing or discharging a juror.

Trial, the hearing of a cause, civil or criminal, before a judge who has jurisdiction over it, according to the laws of the land. 'Trial is to finde out by due examination the truth of the point in issue or question betweene the parties, whereupon judgment may be given' (Co. Litt. 124 b).

At a trial by jury now, as formerly in the Common Law Courts, the cause is called on, or the prisoner arraigned, before the jury is sworn. The parties may then challenge the jury. (See CHALLENGE.) The pleadings are then (in civil causes and misdemeanours) opened by the junior counsel for the plaintiff; and if it appear that the burden of proof is on the plaintiff, his senior counsel states the case to the jury; after which the witnesses for the plaintiff are examined by his counsel, the cross-examination being generally conducted by the senior counsel for the defendant. If the defendant's counsel object to any question or any document, all the defendant's counsel are entitled to be heard on the objection, and all the plaintiff's counsel on the other side, and the senior counsel for the defendant in reply; and so if the plaintiff's counsel object mutatis mutandis. If the plaintiff have evidence to rebut the issues of which the burden of proof lies on the defendant, he may either produce it at the same time as his other evidence, or reserve it until after the defendant has given affirmative evidence on the issue. At the end of the plaintiff's evidence, the defendant's counsel declares whether he will call witnesses; and if he does not, the plaintiff's senior counsel sums up his evidence, and the defendant's senior counsel next addresses the jury, and the judge sums up. If the defendant's counsel calls evidence, he immediately opens his case to the jury, and the witnesses are called and examined as in the plaintiff's case. The plaintiff is, in general, entitled to call witnesses to rebut the evidence of the defendant, if he has not already given all his evidence, which is more generally the case. Then the defendant's senior counsel sums up, and the senior counsel for the plaintiff replies upon the whole case. The judge then sums up. By consent of both parties the verdict may be taken by the associate in the absence of the judge; but in a criminal trial he must be present.

In a criminal trial the effect of the pleadings is stated to the jury by the clerk of the court, except in a case of misdemeanour, where that is done by counsel as in a civil cause. In other respects the order of proceeding is the same. After a conviction for misdemeanour the counsel for the defendant may address the court in mitigation, and the counsel for the prosecution in aggravation, of his sentence. Sentence may be deferred to a future day.

Right to Trial by Jury. In criminal cases, where the accused is charged on indictment, the trial is always by a jury. In civil cases in the High Court, trial is without a jury, unless the court otherwise orders; but where fraud is alleged, or in cases of libel, slander, malicious prosecution, false imprisonment, seduction, or breach of promise of marriage, an order is made for trial by a jury on the application of either party unless the Court or judge is of opinion that the trial thereof requires any prolonged examination of documents or accounts or any scientific or local investigation which cannot conveniently be made with a jury. Under the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 36), s. 6, trial by jury is entirely at the discretion of the Court or judge, and see R. S. C. Ord. XXXVI., rr. 2-6; also Keeling v. Cook, (1934) 78 L. J. N. C. 306, and JURY. In county courts parties are entitled to trial by jury unless the judge, on the application of a party, decides that the action or matter cannot as conveniently be tried with a jury as without one. The judge, however, cannot order a trial without a jury where the High Court would not be able to do so. Admiralty proceedings; cases under the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Acts are not tried by juries. See A. P., R. S. C. Ords. XXXVIII. A and XXXIX., and County Courts Act, 1934, s. 91, and the Annual County Courts Practice.

In the Chancery Division of the High Court, when the trial is by affidavit it is commonly called a hearing, and all the counsel on both sides are heard in order, the senior counsel for the party first heard (plaintiff or petitioner) being heard in reply. When an issue is tried by oral evidence before the Court itself, the Common Law practice is followed. In the Chancery Division actions are almost invariably tried by a judge alone, actions where a jury is thought desirable being usually transferred to the King's Bench Division. The trial in the Ecclesiastical Courts mostly resembles the former course of an ordinary trial in Chancery.

Consult the Annual Practice as to trial in civil causes; and Arch. Crim. Prac. as to trial in criminal cases.

Trial at Bar. See BAR.

Tribunal, the seat of a judge; a court of justice.

Tribute, a payment made in acknowledgment; subjection.

Tricesima, an ancient custom in a borough in the county of Hereford, so called because thirty burgesses paid 1*d.* rent for their houses to the bishop, who was lord of the manor.—Lib. Nik. Heref.

Tridingmote, the court held for a triding or trithing.

Triennial Act (6 W. & M. c. 2), which in 1694, after reciting that 'by the ancient laws and customs of this realm, frequent Parliaments ought to be held,' and that 'frequent and new Parliaments tend very much to the happy union and good agreement of the King and people,' provided that 'a Parliament shall be holden once in three years at the least,' and limited the duration of Parliament to three years, enlarged to seven by the Septennial Act (see that title) of 1715, and reduced to five by the Parliament Act, 1911.

An earlier Triennial Act of 1641 (16 Car. 1, c. 1), limiting duration, was repealed in 1664 by 16 Car. 2, c. 1.

Triens, a third part; also dower.

Triers. See TRIOBS.

Trinepos, the male descendant in the sixth degree in direct line.—Civ. Law

Trinidad and Tobago. Islands in the West Indies form one colony under the Act 50 & 51 Vict. c. 44. Under 9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 47, a West Indian Court of Appeal was created for Trinidad and Tobago, British Guiana, Barbados and Leeward and Windward Isles with power to reduce or increase jurisdiction of the Court.

Trinity House, a society at Deptford Strand, incorporated by Henry VIII. in 1515, for the promotion of commerce and navigation by licensing and regulating pilots, and ordering and erecting beacons, lighthouses, buoys, etc., and stated in the preamble of 8 Eliz. c. 13 to be 'charged with the conduction of the Queen's Majesty's Navy Royal, and bound to foresee the good increase and maintenance of ships, and of all kinds of men trained and brought up to watercraft most meet for Her Majesty's marine service.' Under the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (q.v.), buoys are to be laid down as may be directed by, and lighthouses, beacons are not to be erected, nor are lights to be exhibited, without permission of Trinity House.

The Trinity House, by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, repealing and re-enacting the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, is the chief lighthouse and pilotage authority for England, and the Scots and Irish Boards are to some extent under its control.—Pulling's Shipping Code, Introd. xii. As to pilotage, see Pilotage Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 31), ss. 52–55.

Trinity Masters, Elder Brethren of Trinity House. Two sit as assessors in Admiralty and Prize Courts to assist the judge in cases in which technical questions of navigation arise.

Trinity Sittings of the Court of Appeal and of the High Court of Justice in Middlesex commence on the Tuesday after Whitsun week and terminate on the 31st of July. See R. S. C. Ord. LXIII., r. 1, and SITTINGS.

Trinity Term, one of the four legal terms, beginning on the 22nd May, and ending on the 12th June. See TERMS, and last title.

Trinobantes, Trinonantes, or Trinovantes, inhabitants of Britain, situated next to the Cantii northward, who occupied, according to Camden and Baxter, that country which now comprises the counties of Essex and Middlesex, and some part of Surrey. But if Ptolemy be not mistaken, their territories were not so extensive in his time, as London did not then belong to them. The name seems to be derived from the three following British words:—Trie, now, hant, i.e., inhabitants of the new city (London).—Encyc. Londin.

Trinoda necessitas. Under this denomination are comprised three distinct imposts, to which all landed possessions, not excepting those of the church, were subject, viz.:—(1) Bryge-bót, for keeping the bridges and high roads in repair.—(Pontis constructio.) (2) Burg-bót, for keeping the burghs or fortresses in an efficient state of defence.—(Arceis constructio.) (3) Fyrd, or contribution for maintaining the military and naval forces of the kingdom.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Triors or Triers, such as were chosen by the court to examine whether a challenge made to the panel of jurors, or to any of them, be just or not.—Bro. Abridg. 122.

Tripartite, divided into three parts, having three corresponding copies; a deed to which there are three distinct parties.

Tripletatio, a rebutter.

Tristia, a forest immunity.—Manw. 1, 86.

Tritavia, a great-grandmother's great-grandmother; the female ascendant in the sixth degree.—Civ. Law.

Tritavus, a great-grandfather's great-grandfather; the male ascendant in the sixth degree.—Ibid.

Trithing, the third part of a shire or province; a riding. The county of York is divided into three ridings—East, West, and North.

Trithing-reeve, a governor of a trithing.

Triumvir, a trithing man or constable of three hundreds. A member of a Government consisting of three.

Trivernal Days [dies fasti, Lat.], judicial days, when the courts are open for business; so called from the three words, do, dico, and addico.

Tronage, a customary duty, or toll for weighing wool.

Tronator, a weigher of wool.

Trophy Money, money formerly collected and raised in London, and the several counties of England, towards providing harness and maintenance for the militia, etc.

Trout. The Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1923, consolidates and amends the enactments relating to salmon and trout and freshwater fisheries in England and Wales. Sects. 1 and 2 prohibit the use of a light, otter lath, or jack, wire or snare, spear, gaff, strokehaul, snatch or the like, or stone or other missile, or roe for catching or killing salmon, trout, or freshwater fish. A gaff or tailed may, however, be used as an auxiliary to angling with a rod and line. No explosive or noxious material must be used with intent to take or destroy fish in any waters (s. 9). Sect. 31 provides that—

31.—(1) No person shall fish for, take, kill or attempt to take or kill trout—

- (a) Except with a rod and line, during the annual close season for trout; or
- (b) with a rod and line during the annual trout close season for rod and line; or
- (c) except with a rod and line, during the weekly close time for trout.

(3) The annual close season for trout shall in any place in which a period has been fixed in that behalf by a bye-law under this or any other Act be that period, or, if there is no such bye-law, be the period between the thirty-first day of August and the first day of March following.

(4) The annual trout close season for rod and line shall be in any place the period which has been fixed in that behalf by a bye-law under this or any other Act, or, if there is no such bye-law, the period between the thirtieth day of September and the first day of March following.

(5) The weekly close time for trout shall be in any place the period which has been fixed in that behalf by a bye-law under this or any other Act, or, if there is no such bye-law, the period between the hour of six on Saturday morning and the hour of six on the following Monday morning.

(7) This section shall not apply to rainbow trout.

By s. 32, buying and selling of trout is prohibited between 31st August and 1st March, but by the Amendment Act, 1929, makes certain exemptions, the most important of which is canned, frozen, or otherwise preserved, trout.

Trover [fr. trouver, Fr., to find]. This was a special action upon the case, properly called the action of trover and conversion (see that title), which might be maintained by any person who had either an absolute or special property in goods, for recovering the value of such goods against another, who, having or being supposed to have obtained possession of such goods by lawful means, had wrongfully converted them to his own use. It originally lay only where the goods had been lost by the plaintiff and 'found' (whence the name) by the defendant, but it was in course of time allowed to be brought as above upon a fictitious allegation of the finding not required to be proved, but not formally abolished until 1852, by the C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 49.

The action was also termed one of conversion, but 'wrongfully depriving' is the term now more frequently used. Under the old common law there were four different remedies for the wrongful deprivation of goods—viz., the actions of trespass to goods, detinue, replevin, and trover, which was the old name for an action of conversion. Trespass and trover were actions to recover damages merely; the first for the injury to the possession, the second for the loss of the property; but the actions of detinue and replevin were both brought for the return of the goods. The actions of trespass and replevin could be maintained against any one who forcibly took the goods out of the possession of the plaintiff; the actions of detinue and trover lay also against any person who subsequently came into possession of the goods by any means and wrongfully withheld them from the plaintiff. In trespass and replevin the plaintiff was always in possession of the goods and the defendant out of possession at the time when he commenced his wrongful acts. In detinue and trover, on the other hand, the plaintiff was always out of possession and the defendant in possession of the goods when the tort was committed.—Odgers on the Common Law, and see Salmond on Torts.

Troy Weight [pondus Trojæ, Lat.], a weight of twelve Troy ounces to the pound, having its name from Troyes, a city in Aube, France.

Under the Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), s. 20, precious metals (gold, silver, platinum and other precious metals), and gold and silver lace and precious stones may be sold by the ounce Troy of 480 grains (see Third Sched.); and all other articles must be sold by avoirdupois weight of 437.5 grains to the ounce avoirdupois, the metric equivalents for the respective ounces being 31.103496 grams (Troy), and 28.34954 grams (avoirdupois). The pound Troy does not seem to be referred to by statute. Drugs may be sold by apothecaries weight.

Truchman, an interpreter.

Truck Acts (1831 to 1896) (1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 37; 50 & 51 Vict. c. 46, and 59 & 60 Vict. c. 43), the Truck Act, 1831, the Truck Amendment Act, 1887, and the Truck Act, 1896, passed to prevent the payment of wages in goods instead of in money. The plan had been for masters to establish warehouses or shops, and the workmen in their employ have either had their wages accounted for to them by supplies of goods from such depôts, without receiving any money, or they have had the money given to them with an express understanding that they were to resort to the warehouses or shops of their masters for the articles of which they stood in need. This system is made illegal by the Truck Acts. A deduction from wages in respect of damages awarded to an employer in an action is a violation of these Acts (Williams v. North's Navigation Collieries, 1906, A. C. 136).

True Bill [billa vera, Lat.], the indorsement which the grand jury makes upon a bill of indictment when, having heard the evidence, they are satisfied of the truth of the accusation.

True, Public, and Notorious. These three qualities used to be formerly predicated in the libel in the Ecclesiastical Courts, of the charges which it contained, at the end of each article severally.

Trunk Roads Act, 1936 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 5), provides that the Minister of Transport shall be the highway authority for the principal roads in Great Britain which constitute the national system of routes for through traffic. Such roads which become Trunk Roads are set out in the Schedule.

By s. 13 road means a highway and includes any part of a highway and any prepared road and any bridge over which a highway passes or a proposed road is intended to pass, and 'trunk road' shall be construed accordingly.

Trust. A trust is simply a confidence, reposed either expressly or impliedly in a person (hence called the trustee), for the benefit of another (hence called the cestui que trust, or beneficiary), not, however, issuing out of real or personal property, but as a collateral incident accompanying it, annexed in privity to (i.e., commensurate with) the interest in such property, and also to the person touching such interest, for the accomplishment of which confidence the cestui que trust or beneficiary has his remedy in equity only; the trustee himself likewise being aided and protected in the proper performance of his trust when he seeks the Court's direction as to its management.

Every kind of property in which a legal interest may be given, whatever may be its quantity or quality, may be impressed with a trust, which equity will carry out without regard to form, provided its purpose do not contravene the policy of the law, or the principles governing the rights of property: for qui hæret in literâ hæret in cortice.

Trusts may be classed thus:—

(I.) Express, or defined by words; divided into—

(a) Trusts executed, perfect, complete, or constituted.

(b) Trusts executory, imperfect, incomplete, or directory.

(II.) Arising by operation of law, such as (a) Constructive, which arise when property which has been acquired in right of another is being retained by the trustee for his own benefit, or when the person obtaining the same knows or should know that another person has a prior right to the property or some part or interest in it in equity. (b) Implied trusts which arise under similar conditions, out of some special relationship between the parties by contract or otherwise. (c) Resulting trusts, when the whole or any part of the property or part or interest in it is granted without any indication that it or such part or interest was intended for the benefit of the grantee or any person other than the grantor himself. See CONSIDERATION (last paragraph).

Trusts are also divisible into: (1) permanent, when there is a continuing duty to be performed for the benefit of several persons in succession: and (2) temporary, when there is one particular duty only to perform. Again, trusts may be passive or active.

A trust being, in contemplation of equity, the substantial ownership of or control over property, the person having the ownership or power can create a trust in favour of another person or in his own favour (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 72 (3), as to conveyance) in relation thereto co-extensive with his ability to dispose of it at law.

The Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 7 (reproduced by s. 53 (1) (b) of the Law of Property Act, 1925), requires that 'all declarations or creations of trusts or confidences of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments shall be manifested and proved by some writing, signed by the party who is by law enabled to declare such trust, or by his will, or else they shall be utterly void and of none effect.' This provision does not affect the creation or operation of resulting, implied or constructive trusts, and does not include declarations of trust affecting chattels personal, which may be created by parol, provided they are to take effect during the life of their creator.

Since it is not necessary that a trust be declared in writing, but only so manifested and proved, no form is requisite either as regards the nature of the instrument or the language; the statute will be satisfied if the trust can be established by any subsequent acknowledgment of the trustee, however informally or indirectly made, as by a letter under his hand, by his statement of defence in an action, or by a recital in a deed, provided it relate to the subject-matter, and the precise nature and object of the trust can be ascertained. A trust cannot be engrafted upon a will unless by a testamentary or codicillary paper executed with the statutory formalities, but if a devise or bequest of the legal estate be accompanied with any mala fides in the devisee or legatee, as if there be an express or implied undertaking to execute the intent of making a provision for third persons, the Court will certainly establish such a trust.

A trust may be declared either directly or indirectly :—

To create a trust by a direct or formal declaration, a person need only make his meaning clear as to the interest he intends to give, having regard as a rule to the technical terms of the Common or Statutory Law in the limitations of legal estate. Before 1926 an equitable entail would in the case of an executory document or a bequest or devise by will pass without the words 'heirs of the body' or 'in tail'; in the case of an executed document, apt words of limitation were necessary (see Re Monoton's Settlement, 1913, 2 Ch. 636; and Re Arden, Short v. Cam, 1935, 1 Ch. 326). See now the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 60, by which, after 1925, the fee-simple or other interest which the grantor had power to convey will pass without words of limitation unless a contrary intention appears in the conveyance, but as regards the creation of equitable interests corresponding to an estate-tail in either realty or personalty (see s. 130 of that Act), s. 130 (2) assimilates informal limitations in tail in executory instruments or wills to limitations of personalty, and s. 130 (1), which apparently directs that limitations in tail (without any reservation or qualification for the case of executory instruments or wills) must follow the precise form of legal limitations formerly necessary for the creation of such estates by deed (not being an executory instrument).

A precatory trust is properly a trust declared by a person by inference and not imperatively, and construed by the Court in favour of the intention. Thus when property is given absolutely to any person, and he is recommended, or entreated, or wished, by the donor having power to command, to dispose of such property in favour of another, the recommendation, entreaty, or wish creates a trust, provided the words are so used that upon the whole they ought to be construed as imperative; and also provided that the subject of the recommendation or wish, as well as the objects or persons intended to have the benefit of such recommendation or wish, be certain and definite. There is not any inclination to extend the rule of construction, which gives an imperative effect to precatory or recommendatory words.

Where, from the different parts of the instrument, it appears that the words are expressive of a mere expectation or wish, no trust will arise; as where the words are, that the donee will be kind to, or remember, certain objects or classes, or the like; or where the donor uses such expressions as, 'trusting to the justice of his successors,' and it is to be inferred that it is their own sense of justice on which he relies. When the testator recommends, but adds that he does not absolutely enjoin, it is clear that the expressions are to be taken as precatory only, and not imperative. If it appear from the context that the first taker was intended to have a discretionary power to withdraw the whole or any part of the subject from the objects of the wish or request, or if there are any words by which it is expressed or from which it can be implied, that the first taker may apply any part of the subject to his own use, it will not be held that a trust is created.

In recommendatory trusts, if the words for any reason do not amount to a trust, or the intended trust fail in the whole or in part, the absolute interest remains in the donee; or if the trust established do not exhaust the property given, the donee retains, in virtue of the gift, so much of the property as is not affected with the trust; but if property be given to a person as trustee only, if no trust be declared, or the trust declared or purporting to be declared should fail, then there is a resulting trust for the donor or those claiming under him, and the donee can claim nothing beneficially, nothing being given to him but as trustee.

Any person may be appointed a trustee except an infant (L. P. Act, 1925, s. 19), person of unsound mind or convicted of felony, or bankrupt or a corporation which has been dissolved (see Trustee Act, 1925, s. 36). As to the discretion of the Court, see s. 41 (ibid.) and notes to the sections in Wolst. and Ch. Conveyancing Statutes, Vol. II. Formerly an alien could not be a trustee of realty; but see now ALIEN. A corporation may be constituted a trustee of personalty, and also of realty upon charitable trusts; but not upon private trusts, by reason of the Statutes of Mortmain, unless the trustee is a Trust Corporation or the Public Trustee (see those titles). Equity will, however, supply a trustee where realty is devised to a corporation which is not capable of holding land as a trustee. It was formerly never advisable to select a married woman to be a trustee, on account of her inability to join in the requisite assurances without her husband's concurrence; but this difficulty has been removed by modern statutes; see especially Married Women's Property Act, 1907, s. 1, replaced by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 170. Nor should an infant be appointed a trustee, on account of his legal disability. If a trust involve the receipt and custody of money, the safeguard of at least two trustees ought rarely to be dispensed with, and in the case of receipts after 1925 of capital money by trustees for sale of land or upon sale by tenants for life or statutory owners of settled land, the receipt must be by two trustees or a trust corporation (see Law of Property Act, 1925, and Settled Land Act, 1925). A personal representative selling for the purpose of administration can give a valid receipt (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 27 (2), and Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 39), but during a minority or if there is a life interest upon an intestacy or administration of a will, administration will only be granted to two individuals (see Judicature Act, 1925, s. 160 (1)).

On the death of a sole trustee, or the last of several trustees, the legal estate vests in his personal representative as if it were a chattel real (Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 30), replaced by Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 1.

A trust will be enforced wherever there is a valuable consideration; but, if it be merely voluntary, the equitable interest will not be enforced, unless an actual trust be created, and no act remains to be done to complete the title of the trustees, for then a consideration is not essential. An agreement founded on a meritorious consideration (i.e., a secondary valuable consideration, as in favour of a wife or children) will not be executed as against the settlor himself, but as between parties claiming under the settlor, if the Court can act in favour of the meritorious consideration without inflicting a hardship on persons peculiarly entitled to protection, the voluntary agreement will in such a case be specifically executed, and see Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 172 (3).

The rule is to carry into effect the object proposed by the trust, unless it is in contravention of the public policy of the law, as, for instance, seeking to create a perpetuity, or accumulating annual income beyond the statutory limits.

By the Trustee Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 59), s. 8, a trustee may under certain circumstances plead the Statute of Limitations in answer to a claim against him for a breach of trust: see Re Somerset, 1894, 1 Ch. 231; Howe v. Earl Winterton, 1896, 2 Ch. 626. See LIMITATIONS.

The Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), provides for the appointment of remunerated 'judicial trustees' by the Court on the application of either trustee or beneficiary. See JUDICIAL TRUSTEE.

By the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 34, the execution of trusts, charitable or private, is assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice. For the special provisions made for the execution of trusts during the war with Germany, see the Execution of Trusts (War Facilities) Acts, 1914 and 1915.

The Trustee Act, 1925, replaced and consolidated the various Trustee Acts and other statutes which regulated and guided the conduct of trustees in the administration of their trusts, with the exception of the unrepealed s. 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888, by which trustees, as a general rule, are allowed (see Re Somerset, 1894, 1 Ch. 231; Howe v. Earl Winterton, 1896, 2 Ch. 626), except in case of fraud or retention of trust property, to plead the Statutes of Limitation. Part I. of the Trustee Act, 1925, ss. 1 to 11, relates to the investments which trustees are allowed to make with trust funds if no directions are given by the grantor or settlor or in addition to and subject to such directions. This part is important from a practical point of view because trustees are liable to make good any loss on unauthorised investments in the absence of any relief provided by the Act—see ss. 4, 8, 61 (power of Court to relieve a trustee from liability for breach of trust), reproducing s. 3 (1) of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), and s. 62 (breach instigated by the cestui que trust). Part II. relates to the powers of trustees; Part III., appointment and discharge of trustees; Part IV., powers of the Court, appointment of new trustees (q.v.), and vesting and other orders (s. 57 gives power to the Court to authorize an extension of the trustees' powers, but this does not extend to trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, 1925); and Part V., general provisions.

In Scotland, see Trust (Scotland) Act, 1921.

Trust for Sale. Trusts for sale of land were commonly created in settlements and well-drawn wills. The effect was to convert realty into personalty so that the proceeds devolved upon the beneficiaries as personalty unless they elected to take the property as realty (see CONVERSION), except that upon a lapse of the devise of realty in the testator's lifetime the property resulted to the heir-at-law (Ackroyd v. Smithson, 1780, 1 Bro. C. C. 503). Another and more practical consequence was that the whole estate was vested as a rule in the trustees so that with or without consent of any other person as directed by the donor or testator they could vest the whole estate in a purchaser without his seeing to the application of the purchase money (Trustee Act, 1893, s. 14), and without participation of beneficiaries whose consent was not required, thus providing an expedient, which, together with the Settled Land Acts and other statutes giving analogous powers to mortgagees, personal representatives and trustees in bankruptcy, provided a model for much of the land legislation of 1925. Beneficiaries under a trust for sale had no estate in the land but only in the proceeds (see EQUITABLE ESTATES) so long as the trust continued. A testamentary trust for sale of leasehold land was subject to the rule in Howe v. Lord Dartmouth, (1802) 7 Ves. 137, applying to all cases in the absence of directions, express or implied, to the contrary, that where a residue was settled by will upon legatees in succession, wasting property must be sold and the proceeds invested in trustee or authorized investments with consequential attribution of capital and income among the beneficiaries according to their rights. Trusts for sale are to be distinguished from powers of sale, e.g., a mere power did not effect conversion (Curling v. May, (1734) 3 Atk. 255; and see Re Thursby, 1910, 2 Ch. 181).

The Law of Property Act, 1925, provides, in regard to all trusts for sale created or arising before or after 1926, for the duration or prolongation of the powers of sale until sale in favour of purchasers (s. 23); confers a power to postpone sale in the absence of a contrary intention (s. 25); consents, if requisite, are restricted to two in favour of a purchaser, and the wishes of beneficiaries are to be consulted (s. 26). Proceeds of sale or capital money must be paid to not less than two trustees, whatever may be declared by the instrument creating the trust, or to a trust corporation, or to a sole personal representative acting under his powers as such. Receipts by these discharge the purchaser of a legal estate from seeing to the application of the purchase money, but one trustee may act alone in all matters except where capital money arises on the transaction (s. 27); the trustees are to have all the relative powers of a tenant for life under the Settled Land Act, 1925, and land conveyed to them in exercise of those powers must be conveyed to them on trust for sale (s. 28 (1)). Sub-s. (2) (ibid.) provides for the destination of rents and profits until sale, incidentally overruling Howe v. Lord Dartmouth, ubi sup., where that case would be applicable but without affecting the rule in cases of trusts for sale of pure personalty (Re Trollope, 1927, 1 Ch. 596, s. 28 (2)). Sect. 28 (3) gives power to the trustees to partition the land subject to the conditions and provisions of the sub-section. Sect. 29 provides for delegation of powers; s. 30 for applications to the Court; s. 31 relates to mortgaged property. For other provisions see also ss. 32 to 39, and UNDIVIDED SHARES. As to the over-reaching equitable interests upon sale by properly appointed trustees for sale, see ss. 2 (2) and 28 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, and LAW OF PROPERTY ACT (curtain).

A settlement of land upon trust for sale, even if the proceeds are settled, is not a settlement within the meaning of the Settled Land Act, 1926, s. 1 (7). See L. P. Amendment Act, 1926, Sched., and S. L. Act, 1925, ss. 3 and 36.

Trusts for sale are conveniently created by two instruments: (1) the conveyance of the land upon trust for sale and (2) the instrument declaring the trusts of the proceeds, and see s. 35, Trustee Act, 1925, which requires two instruments on appointment of new trustees for sale (see APPOINTMENT OF NEW TRUSTEES), but trusts for sale arise by implication of law in many cases (see Wolst. and Ch. Conv. Stat., Notes to Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 23). A will of a person dying after 1925 is not a conveyance of the legal estate, which now devolves upon the personal representatives by Act of law; it is a trust instrument only.

Sect. 205 (1) (xxix.) of the L. P. Act, 1925, defines 'trust for sale' unless the context otherwise requires, in relation to land, as an immediate binding trust for sale whether or not exercisable at the request or with the consent of any person and with or without a power at discretion to postpone the sale, but in its general legal sense the term is not restricted to that meaning.

Trust Corporation is defined by the Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 117 (1) (xxx.), to mean the Public Trustee or a corporation appointed by the Court or entitled under Public Trustee Act Rules (see the Public Trustee (Custodian Trustee) Rules, 1926, S. R. & O., 1926, No. 1423/L37). Trust corporations may exercise solely or jointly all the powers for the exercise of which the Land Legislation Acts of 1925 require two trustees at least (see TRUST; TRUST FOR SALE; SETTLED LAND; ADMINISTRATOR). These corporations include any company incorporated by Special Act or Royal Charter or Companies under the Companies Act, 1929, with an issued capital of not less than 250,000*l.*, of which at least 100,000*l.* has been paid up in cash, or any company undertaking trust business for his Majesty's Navy, Army, Air Force or Civil Service having as director or member any person nominated by one of the Government Departments referred to in the Rules or any company authorized by the Lord Chancellor in relation to any charitable, ecclesiastical or public trusts.

By s. 3 of the L. P. (Amendment) Act, 1926, 'Trust Corporation' includes the Treasury Solicitor, Official Solicitor and any person holding an official position prescribed by the Lord Chancellor, also trustees in bankruptcy, and under deeds of arrangement and certain corporations administering charitable, ecclesiastical or public trusts.

Trust Funds. In addition to the securities mentioned in the instrument creating the trust, trustees may invest trust funds in securities specified in the Trustee Act, 1925, unless expressly forbidden by the trust deed. The effect of the Trusts (Scotland) Act, 1921, on Scots trusts should be noted. With regard to funds in Court, see R. S. C., Ord. XXII., r. 17, and County Courts Act, 1934, ss. 52 (3), 158.

Trust Instrument. Under the Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 117 (1) (xxxi.) and s. 9, includes in relation to settled land, any instruments whereby the trusts of the settled land are declared other than a vesting instrument or vesting conveyance. By s. 4 (ibid.), the trust instrument constituting a settlement must, if made after 1925:

- (a) declare the trusts affecting the settled land;
- (b) appoint or constitute trustees of the settlement;
- (c) contain the power (if any) to appoint new trustees;
- (d) set out any intended addition to or enlargement of the statutory powers;
- (e) bear the proper ad valorem stamp which may be payable by virtue of the vesting deed or otherwise in respect of the settlement.

And see also s. 9 as to settlements or instruments which are to be deemed to be trust instruments for the purposes of the Act, although not complying in form with the above-mentioned requirements.

A purchaser for value in good faith is not affected by the contents of the trust instrument and is not entitled to information in regard to it (s. 110), except as there provided, e.g., a purchaser taking title under the first vesting instrument; and see s. 5 (2). Under the same s. 117 (ubi sup.), a trust instrument presumably includes an instrument containing the settlement of proceeds under a trust for sale (see s. 36 (ibid.)), but there is no express statutory definition of a trust instrument declaring the trusts under a trust for sale.

Trustee, one entrusted with property for the benefit of another, called beneficiary, or cestui que trust. See also PUBLIC TRUSTEE; BREACH OF TRUST.

Consult Lewin or Godefroi on Trusts.

Trustee in Bankruptcy. A person appointed in a bankruptcy to collect and realize the property of the debtor and to distribute the proceeds among the creditors. The property of the debtor vests in the trustee on his appointment. See Bankruptcy Acts, 1914 and 1926.

Trustee Savings Banks Acts, 1863 to 1920. See SAVINGS BANKS.

Trustees, Fraudulent, Punishment of. By the Larceny Act, 1916, s. 21, the appropriation of the trust fund by the trustee to his own use is punishable by penal servitude for seven years, but the sanction of the Attorney-General is necessary for a prosecution by a person other than one who has taken civil proceedings against the trustee and has obtained the sanction of the Court.

Tub, 60 lbs. of tea.

Tub-man, a barrister who had a pre-eminence in the Court of Exchequer, and also in the Exchequer Division of the High Court, and also a particular place in court.

Tulchan Bishops, a name derisively applied to the persons appointed as titular bishops to the Scottish sees immediately after the Reformation, in whose names the revenues of the sees were drawn by the lay barons who had appropriated them.—Ogilvie's Imp. Dict.

Tumbrel, a ducking-stool used for the punishment of scolds; a dung-cart.

Tulmultuous Petitioning. See PETITION; RIOT.

Tun, four hogsheads.

Tuncaw, Tunkha, an assistant of the revenue for personal support or other purposes.—Indian.

Tungreve, a town-reeve or bailiff.

Turbary [fr. turbus or turva, obs. Lat. turf, or Saxon, meaning either the right of taking turf, or the ground whence it is taken], the liberty of digging turf upon another man's ground. It may be either by grant or prescription, and either appurtenant or in gross. It can be appurtenant only to a house, and can only be a right to take turf for fuel for such house.—1 Steph. Com. There can be no approver (see APPROVEMENT) against common of turbary: see Williams on Rights of Common.

Turn, or Tourn, the great court-leet of the county, as the old county court was the court-baron; of this the sheriff was judge, and the court was incident to his office, wherefore it was called the sheriff's tourn, and it had its name originally from the sheriff making a turn of circuit about his shire, and holding this court in each respective hundred.—2 Hawk. P. C. c. 10. The tourn, which had long been obsolete, is formally abolished by s. 18 of the Sheriffs Act, 1887.

Turner's (Sir George) Act (13 & 14 Vict. c. 35), providing for the statement of a special case in equitable matters, abolished by Rule of Court in 1880. See SPECIAL CASE.

Turnkey, a gaoler.

Turnpike-roads, ways maintained out of tolls not paid by passengers. These did not fall within the operation of the Highway Act (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50), but were regulated primarily by the local Acts relative to each particular road, which, though temporary, were, until about the middle of the present century, almost invariably renewed by the legislature from time to time as they were about to expire; and in the next place by statutes of a general description, of which the principal was the consolidating 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, applicable (with very few exceptions) to all turnpike-roads—that is, all roads maintained by tolls, and placed under the management of trustees or commissioners for a limited period of time. This Act, however, is repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1890, with the exception of such provisions as are applied to dis-turnpiked roads by the Annual Turnpike Acts Continuance Acts of 1865 and 1870. There were at one time many thousand turnpike trusts. In 1864 they numbered above a thousand, but in 1879 they had been reduced to little more than two hundred, by expiration in accordance with 'Annual Turnpike Continuance' Acts; and they had before the end of the nineteenth century practically ceased to exist.

Turpis causa, a base or vile consideration on which no action can be founded, the maxim being Ex turpi causa non oritur actio. See Collins v. Blanton, (1766) 2 Wils. 341; 1 Smith, L. C.

Tutelage, guardianship; the state of being under a guardian.—Sand. Just.

Tutor, a guardian; a protector; an instructor.

Tutorship, the office and power of a tutor.

Tutrix, a female tutor.

Twaite, a wood grubbed up and turned to arable (Co. Litt. 4 b.)

Twanight geste, a guest at an inn a second night. See THIRD-NIGHT-AWN-HINDE.

Twelfhindi, the highest rank of men in the Saxon government, who were valued at 1200s. If any injury were done to such persons, satisfaction was to be made according to their worth.

Twelve-day Writ, a writ issued under the repealed Summary Procedure on Bills of Exchange Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 67) ('Keating's Act'), for summary procedure on bills of exchange and promissory notes, abolished by Rule of Court in 1880.

Twelvemonth (sing.), a year; but twelve months (plur.) are computed according to twenty-eight days for each month.—6 Rep. 62.

Twyhindi, an intermediate order of Saxons, valued at 200s. in the scale of pecuniary mulcts inflicted for crimes. See TWELF-HINDI.

Tyburn, the place where executions took place in former times; it was situate on the Oxford Road, not far from where the Marble Arch now stands. The execution was preceded by a procession from Newgate to Tyburn, the criminal being drawn in a cart, but this practice was abolished in 1783, and the sentences thenceforward carried out in front of Newgate. See Gent. Mag. 1783, pp. 974, 1060; Croker Papers, vol. iii. pp. 15, 16; Boswell's Johnson, ed. by Birkbeck Hill, vol. iv., p. 188.

Tyburn Ticket, a certificate which was given to the prosecutor of a felon to conviction.

Tyhtlan, an accusation, impeachment, or charge.

Tylwith, a tribe, house, or family.

Tyth, tithe, or tenth part.

Tything, a company of ten; a district; a tenth part. See TITHING.

Tzar, Tzarina, the title of the former Emperors and Empresses of Russia.

U.

Uberrima fides [Lat.] (most abundant good faith). Contracts said to require uberrima fides are those entered into between persons in a particular relationship, as guardian and ward, solicitor and client, insurer and insured (as to which last, see London Assurance Co. v. Mansel, (1879) 11 Ch. D. 363; Joel v. Law Union, etc., Insurance Co., 1908, 2 K. B. 863); and contracts of suretyship and partnership, though not strictly contracts uberrima fidei, are, when once entered into, such as to require full disclosure and the utmost good faith: see Phillips v. Fozall, (1872) L. R. 7 Q. B. 666; Blisset v. Daniel, (1853) 10 Ha. 522.

A contract for sale of land (q.v.) is not in every respect uberrima fidei, but see s. 183 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, and that title.

Ubication, or Ublety [fr. ubi, Lat., where], local position.

Ubi jus, ibi remedium. Co. Litt. 197 b.—(Where there is a right there is a remedy.) See Broom's Leg. Max.; CASE; also DAMNUM ABSQUE INJURIA.

Udal, a form of tenure in Scotland contrary to the normal 'feudal' tenure and peculiar to the Orkneys and Shetland. There is no obligation of services or periodical payments.

Ukaas, or Ukase, a Russian law or ordinance.

Ullage [fr. uligo, Lat., ooziness], the quantity of fluid which a cask wants of being full, in consequence of the oozing of the liquor.—Malone.

Ulna ferrea, the standard ell of iron, which was kept in the Exchequer for the rule of measure.—Dugd. Mon. ii. 383.

Ulnage, alnage, which see.

Ulpian, a great Roman jurist. He flourished in the time of Alexander Severus, about A.D. 222. The Code of Justinian is in great part founded on his works.

Ultimatum, or Ultimation, the last offer, concession, or condition.

Ultimum supplicium, the last or extreme punishment: death.

Ultimus hæres, the last or remote heir, that is, the sovereign who succeeds failing all relations.—Scots Law.

Ultra; damages ultra, damages beyond a sum paid into court.

Ultra vires [Lat.] (beyond the powers), said of a corporation or company when exceeding its authority. If the powers are given or acquired at common law or by custom or by charter, the corporation is a person at common law and may do anything which an ordinary person can do (Wenlock (Baroness) v. River Dee Co., (1885) 10 A. C. 354; British South Africa Co. v. De Beers Consolidated Mines Ltd., 1910, 1 Ch. 354), subject to the consequences if the act is prohibited by the Charter or Act of Parliament, or by law directly or indirectly (Jenkins v. Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, 1921, 1 Ch. 392). On the other hand, a corporation or company which is created by or under statute cannot do anything at all unless authorized expressly or impliedly by the statute or instrument defining its powers. An act done ultra vires a corporation means that it is 'an act which the company in general meeting could not authorize, and an act which, if every individual corporator assented to it, would still remain illegitimate.' See Ashbury Railway Carriage and Iron Co. v. Riche, (1875) L. R. 7 H. L. 653, where the House of Lords held that a contract by the directors of a company incorporated under the Companies Act, 1862, if it be outside the Memorandum of Association, neither binds the company nor can be made binding upon it by ratification. See also Att.-Gen. v. Mersey Ry., 1907, A. C. 415; Baroness Wenlock v. River Dee Co., ubi supra; Sinclair v. Brougham, 1914, A. C. 398. Consult Brice, Street or Beattie on Ultra Vires.

Umpirage, friendly decision of a controversy; arbitration.

Umpire [fr. imperator or impar, Lat.]. A submission to arbitration usually provides that in case of arbitrators not agreeing in an award, the matters in dispute shall be decided by a third person, who is called an umpire. The umpire's authority commences when arbitrators are unable to agree, but if there be a time limited for the award, his authority absolutely commences from such time. The umpire, when called upon to act, is generally invested with the same powers as the arbitrators, and bound by the same rules, and has to perform the same duties. See ARBITRATION and ARBITRATOR, and consult Russell on Arbitration.

Also an officer appointed by the Crown who may also appoint one or more deputy umpires to hear appeals from Courts of Referees in connection with claims under the Unemployment Insurance Acts; see U. I. Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 8), ss. 40, 44 and 45. See Selected Decisions of Umpire.

Uncertainty. Where the words of a deed or will are so vague that no meaning with definite limits can be assigned to them, the grant or gift is void for uncertainty: as if one bequeath 'some of his property' to A., or all his property, 'to one of his sons.'

Unclaimed Property. This devolves on the Crown at Common Law. Unclaimed property may be dealt with under the heads of (1) Government Stock, (2) Chancery Funds, (3) Stock in Public Companies, (4) Bankers' Balances, (5) Deposits with Bankers for Safe Custody, and (6) Found Property.

(1) Government Stock.—The National Debt Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 71), ss. 51 et seq., as extended by 20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 28, s. 49, provides that stock on which no dividend has been claimed for ten years must be transferred to the National Debt Commissioners. Lists of names in which the stock stood, with residence, description and amount of stock and date of transfer, are to be kept at the Bank of England (or Ireland, but see 13 Geo. 5, c. 2, s. 6 (d)) and at the National Debt Office, open to inspection, and also kept in duplicate at the National Debt Office. The stock may be re-transferred to persons showing title after, in the case of stock exceeding 20*l.*, three months' public notice by advertisement. A second claimant showing better title may recover the stock from the re-transferee, and if unable to recover it may obtain an order in his favour from the Chancery Division of the High Court, which 'shall, on application by petition by the new claimant, verified as the Court requires, order the National Debt Commissioners to transfer to him such sum in stock, and to pay to him such sum in money for dividend, as the Court thinks just' (s. 60).

(2) Chancery Funds.—These are regulated by the Chancery Funds Act, 1872, and the Judicature Funds Act, 1883. They consist of money paid into court by trustees, or in administration actions, or by defendants in actions. From a parliamentary return in 1900 it appears that they then amounted to 56 millions, their ultimate destination, except as to 'dormant funds'—i.e., funds not dealt with for fifteen years or upwards—being in most cases well known. A list of 'dormant funds' upwards of 50*l.* in amount is published, in accordance with Rule 96 of the Supreme Court Funds Rules, 1927 (see the Annual Practice), quinquennially in the London Gazette. See Gazette of March 10, 1933, and from an earlier London Gazette (Supplement, March 5, 1923) (going back to 1726), it appears that their amount was then more than 1,050,000*l.*, distributed over upwards of 3,000 separate accounts, one-half not exceeding 150*l.* in value, and only about one-twentieth exceeding 1000*l.*

(3) Stock in Public Companies.—By Art. 72 of Table A in Sched. I. of the Companies Act, 1862 (now repealed), 'all dividends unclaimed for three years after having been declared may be forfeited by the directors for the benefit of' a company under that Act; but the Act is silent as to capital stock. There is no similar provision in Table A to the Acts of 1908 and 1929. Dividends are barred by the Statute of Limitations at the end of twenty years (Re Artisans, etc., Corporation, 1904, 1 Ch. 796). No period of limitation necessarily applies to capital stock (but see Re Artisans, etc., Corporation), and in 1884, in Crawford v. Royal Exchange Insurance Corporation (see Times of April 29, 1884), stock on which no dividend had been paid since 1749 was handed over to the representative of a holder, who had taken out administration de bonis non, the amount recovered on 100*l.* stock being about 3000*l.*, 6600*l.* having been previously recovered by another plaintiff against the same defendants (see Times of Dec. 11, 1883) in respect of 200*l.* stock on which no dividend had been paid since 1720. As to the mode of dealing with unclaimed funds in the hands of a liquidator, see Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1909, r. 191; and as to unclaimed funds or dividends in bankruptcy, see Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 153.

(4) Bankers' Balances.—Money at a bank on an ordinary current or drawing account is money lent to the banker by the customer, repayable upon and not until demand without which there is no cause of action: see the judgment of Banks, L.J., in Joachimson v. Swiss Bank Corporation, 1921, 3 K. B. 110, explaining: Pott v. Clegg, (1849) 16 M. & W. 321; Foley v. Hill, (1851) 2 H. L. C. 28. It follows from this that the Statute of Limitations will not run for such money until six years after demand.

(5) Deposits with Bankers for Safe Custody.—It does not appear to have been judicially decided for what length of time bankers are bound to keep these, but it would seem that the liability of the banker, if he retains custody, is a perpetual liability limited only by six years after demand and refusal. See the judgment of Lord Hatherley, L.C., in Burdick v. Garrick, (1870) L. R. 5 Ch. pp. 239, 240.

(6) Found Property.—A finder has a title against all the world except the owner of it (see title FINDER OF GOODS), but within what time, if any, he may convert it to his own use is doubtful. The practice of the Metropolitan Police Authorities appears to be that after a reasonable time and efforts to find the owner, the property will be returned to the finder, subject to conditions in case of property of value, and such property, of course, remains the property of the owner until his claim is barred by lapse of time. See LIMITATIONS.

Special provisions are to be found in s. 9 (5) of the Metropolitan Public Carriages Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 115), by which the Secretary of State may make regulations (inter alia) 'for securing the safe custody and re-delivery of any property accidentally left in hackney or stage carriages, and fixing the charges to be paid in respect thereof, with power to cause such property to be sold or to be given to the finder in event of its not being claimed within a certain time.'

As to property which has come into possession of the police in connection with a criminal matter, see the general Police (Property) Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 30). See RESTITUTION OF STOLEN GOODS.

Uncle and Nephew. A nephew, the son of a deceased elder brother, was by the general law in force immediately before the 1st January, 1926, preferred in the inheritance to his uncle, a younger brother of the deceased. And see NEPHEW. See DISTRIBUTION OF ESTATES.

Uncore prist, the plea of a defendant in the nature of a plea in bar, where being sued for a debt due on bond at a day past, to save the forfeiture of the bond, he says that he tendered the money at the day and place, and that there was none there to receive it and that he is also 'still ready' to pay the same.

Uncuth [Sax.], unknown.

Unde nihil habet. See DOWER.

Under Chamberlains of the Exchequer, two officers who cleaved the tallies and read them. See TALLY. They also made searches for records in the treasury, and had the custody of Domesday Book. Abolished.—Jac. Law Dict.

Under-lease, a grant by a lessee to another, called under-lessee, or under-tenant, or sub-lessee, or sub-tenant, of a part of his whole interest under the original lease, reserving to himself a reversion; it differs from an assignment, which conveys the lessee's whole interest, and passes to the assignee the right and liability to sue and be sued upon the covenants in the original lease.

An under-lease for the whole term of the original lease amounts to an assignment (Beardman v. Wilson, (1868) L. R. 4 C. P. 57).

Between the original lessor and an under-tenant there is neither privity of estate nor privity of contract, so that these parties cannot take advantage, the one against the other, of the covenants, either in law or in deed, which exist between the original lessor and lessee (Holford v. Hatch, (1779) 1 Dougl. 183; Johnson v. Wild, (1890) 44 Ch. D. 146); but the lessor can distrain on the sub-lessee or take advantage of a condition of forfeiture (G. W. Ry. v. Smith, (1876) 2 Ch. D. p. 253). By s. 4 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, replaced by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 146 (4), as amended by the L. P. (Amendment) Act, 1929 (19 Geo. 5, c. 9), a sub-lessee can obtain relief from the forfeiture of the superior lease. But the terms upon which the relief will be granted are in the absolute discretion of the Court, and in certain cases the rent may be raised. See Ewart v. Fryer, 1910, 1 Ch. 499, and FORFEITURE. A surrender by the lessee cannot prejudice the estate of the under-lessee (G. W. Ry. v. Smith).

Mortgages of leaseholds, where the covenants are onerous, are almost invariably made by sub-demise, so as to avoid bringing the mortgagee into direct relation with the lessor and so rendering him liable to be sued on the covenants; but the mortgagee may often be in fact compelled to perform them in order to save his security from forfeiture under the proviso for re-entry in the lease. As to realization, foreclosure, and retention by mortgagees under the Statutes of Limitations, see s. 89 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, as amended by the L. P. (Amendment) Act, 1926, Sched.

For purposes of the Law of Property Act, 1925, the term 'lease' includes an under-lease unless the context otherwise requires; s. 205. To describe an under-lease as a lease in contracts and conditions of sale is generally a misdescription (Re Beyfus and Masters' Contract, (1888) 39 Ch. D. 110). Consult Elph. Introd. to Conv.

Under-sheriff [sub vicecomes, Lat.], the sheriff's deputy. See SHERIFF.

Undertaking to Appear by a solicitor for a defendant in an action. A solicitor not entering an appearance in pursuance of his written undertaking to do so is liable to an attachment (R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XII., r. 18).

Under-tenant. See UNDER-LEASE.

Under Treasurer of England [vice-thesaurarius Angliæ, Lat.], he who transacted the business of the Lord High Treasurer.

Underwriter, an insurer of ships, so called from his writing his name under the policy of insurance. See INSURANCE.

Also subscribers (generally before a public issue by the company) offering to take all or a stated amount of the shares offered to and not taken up by the public. The sole consideration allowed is a commission at a rate which must be disclosed in the prospectus and not exceeding the rate authorized by the Articles of Association. This commission must not be confused with brokerage which companies are allowed to pay for placing their shares (see Companies Act, 1929, ss. 35 and 355, 4th Sched. (10)).

A bonâ fide invitation to enter into an underwriting agreement does not require a prospectus within the meaning of s. 35 (ibid.). See PROSPECTUS.

Undeveloped Land. A duty on the site value, if over 50%, of undeveloped land was imposed by the Finance Act, 1910. It was discontinued together with the other land value duties by s. 57 of the Finance Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 18).

Undischarged Bankrupt. Transactions by an undischarged bankrupt with any person dealing with him bonâ fide and for value in respect of any property, real or personal, acquired by the bankrupt after adjudication, are valid against the trustee if completed before he intervenes (Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 47. If an undischarged bankrupt, (a) obtains credit to the extent of ten pounds or upwards without giving notice that he is an undischarged bankrupt, or (b) engages in any trade or business under a name different from that under which he was adjudicated bankrupt without disclosing the latter name, he is guilty of a misdemeanour (ibid., s. 155).

Undivided Shares in Land. Before 1926 a legal estate in undivided shares in land was held by joint tenants, tenants in common, coparceners, and by husband and wife as tenants by entireties (see those titles), but now by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 1 (6), a legal estate is not capable of subsisting or of being created in an undivided share in land, and by the same s. 1 (3) and ss. 34 (4), 205, and 1st Sched., Part IV., and cf. TRUST FOR SALE, such shares are to take effect as equitable interests only in the net proceeds of sale and of the rents and profits of the entirety of the land until sale, while the legal estate must be held by trustees for sale of the entire undivided property. It should be noticed that shares only are affected by these provisions. The legal estate in the joint tenancy in the entirety of the trustees for sale persists ex necessitate rei, and this is given effect to by s. 36, as amended, prohibiting severance of the legal estate in joint tenancy and providing for the disposal of the equitable interest in any shares while preserving the incidents of a release of the legal estate by a joint tenant to the other joint tenants, and (by implication) the jus accrescendi (q.v.). Undivided shares can only be created by way of trust for sale under a trust instrument (s. 34 (1), L. P. Act, 1925, and ss. 36 and 117 (1) (xxxi.) of the Settled Land Act, 1925), or (s. 34, L. P. Act, 1925) by a conveyance of the land to persons of full age in undivided shares having the effect of making the grantees, or if there are more than four, the first four named in the conveyance joint tenants upon the statutory trusts (q.v.).

A trust for sale does not arise in the case of joint tenants for life who are constituted together as 'tenant for life' by s. 19 (2) of the Settled Land Act, 1925.

For the transitional provisions relating to land held in undivided shares at the commencement of the L. P. Act, 1925 (1st January, 1926), see 1st Sched., Part IV. As to testamentary dispositions in undivided shares, see s. 34 (3). As to settlements of land in undivided shares, see s. 36, and Settled Land Act, 1925. By s. 36, L. P. Act, 1925, where a legal estate (not being settled land) is beneficially limited to or held in trust for any persons as joint tenants, the same shall be held on trust for sale in like manner as if the persons beneficially entitled were tenants in common (see s. 34, supra), but not so as to sever their joint tenancy in equity. Sect. 37 declares that a husband and wife shall for all purposes of acquisition of property made or coming into operation after 1st January, 1926, be treated as two persons, and see TENANCY BY ENTIRETIES. For the equitable rights of persons entitled to undivided shares in the proceeds of land and the duties of trustees for sale, see L. P. Act, 1925, s. 3, and (generally), ss. 23 to 33, and s. 42 (6) as to the effect of contracts to convey undivided shares. See TRUST FOR SALE.

Undres, minors or persons under age not capable of bearing arms.—Fleta, l. 1, c. 2.

Undue Influence. As to gifts, see title SPIRITUALISM and Lyon v. Home, (1868) L. R. 6 Eq. 655, and as to wills, see Parfit v. Lawless, (1872) L. R. 2 P. & M. 462.

Any influence, pressure, or domination in such circumstances that the person acting under that influence may be held not to have exercised his free and independent volition in regard to the act.

In the case of benefits or advantages obtained in certain relationships, the existence of this influence is presumed, e.g., guardian and ward, a parent over a child upon or soon after attaining age and the possession of property, a guide or instructor, medical advisers, ministers or professors of religion, managers of business (Coomber v. Coomber, 1911, 1 Ch. 174), attendants upon or advisers of aged and infirm people. In such cases, in regard to transactions inter vivos, the onus of proving absence of undue influence lies on the person claiming the benefit of the disposition or act, and in some cases, e.g., gifts by clients to their solicitors (inter vivos), the onus can only be discharged by showing not only that the relationship has ceased, but that the donor was acting under independent advice. In the case of wills, the onus is shifted and the person alleging undue influence is called upon for proof of the allegation. For the general law on the subject, see Allcard v. Skinner, (1881) 36 Ch. D. 145; Low v. Guthrie, 1909, A. C. 278; Huguenin v. Baseley, (1807) 14 Ves. 273; 1 W. & T. L. C.

In election matters, undue influence is any force, violence, or restraint, or the infliction, or threat to inflict, any injury, or the practice of any intimidation, in order to induce any person to vote, or refrain from voting, or on account of his having done so. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Parliament.'

Undue Preference, the improper preferring of one customer over another by a railway or canal company, prohibited by the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31), s. 2. See RAILWAY AND CANAL COMMISSION.

As to avoidance of preference of creditor within three months of bankruptcy of debtor, see FRAUDULENT PREFERENCES.

Unemployed Workmen Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 18). See WORKMEN (UNEMPLOYED).

Unemployment Insurance. A scheme of national insurance administered by the Ministry of Labour with power to refer questions to and obtain advice from the Unemployment Insurance Statutory Committee. This committee is appointed after consultation with representative organizations of employers and workers: see the Unemployment Insurance Acts, 1935 and 1936 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 8, and 26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 13), and NATIONAL INSURANCE.

Unfrid [Sax.], one who has neither peace nor quiet.

Ungeld, an outlaw.

Unica taxatio, the obsolete language of a special award of venire, where, of several defendants, one pleads, and one lets judgment go by default, whereby the jury, who are to try and assess damages on the issue, are also to assess damages against the defendant suffering judgment by default.

Uniformity, Act of, 14 Car. 2, c. 4, 'for the Uniformity of Public Prayers and Administration of Sacraments and other Rites and Ceremonies and for establishing the Form of making, ordaining, and consecrating Bishops, Priests, and Deacons of the Church of England' (now partly repealed), received the Royal Assent on May 19, 1662, and came into operation on August 24 (the feast of St. Bartholomew) following (see Lane's Notes on English Church History).

After a long preamble setting forth the preparation of the Prayer Book by several Bishops and other Divines appointed by the King, its approval by the two Convocations, and stating that 'nothing more conduceth to the peace of this nation, nor to the honour of our religion and the propagation thereof, than an universal agreement in the public worship of Almighty God,' the Act directs that—

All and singular ministers in any cathedral, collegiate or parish church or chapel or other place of public worship within this realm of England, dominion of Wales and town of Berwick upon Tweed shall be bound to say and use the morning prayer, evening prayer, celebration and administration of both the sacraments and all other the public and common prayer in such order and form as is mentioned in the said book annexed and joined to this present Act. . . . And that the morning and evening prayers therein contained shall upon every Lord's day and upon all other days and occasions and at the times therein appointed be openly and solemnly read by all and every minister or curate in every church, chapel or other place of public worship within this realm of England and places aforesaid.

There followed a direction to every beneficed minister to read in his church on some Sunday before August 24, 1662, a declaration of assent to the Book and all its contents on pain of deprivation, and it is still enacted, that resident incumbents keeping curates shall personally and at least once monthly read the Prayer Book service in their churches, on pain of a 5*l.* penalty, and that no person except an ordained priest shall be beneficed or administer the Sacrament on pain of 100*l.* penalty. There are savings for Latin prayers in the college chapels of Oxford and Cambridge Universities and in the convocations of either province.

Earlier Acts of Uniformity.—The Act of 1662 is the Act of Uniformity par excellence, but it had been preceded by three other Acts of Uniformity, each prescribing its own Prayer Book (2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 1, 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 1, and 1 Eliz. c. 2), all expressly confirmed by s. 20 of the Act of 1662, which directs that they 'shall be applied, practised and put in use for the punishing of all offences contrary to the said laws with relation to the book aforesaid and no other,' and also included (though not by name) in the definition of 'Act of Uniformity' contained in s. 1 of the Act of Uniformity Amendment Act, 1872 (45 & 36 Vict. c. 35).

These earlier Acts allow offences against them to be tried at assizes by judge and jury with diocesan assessorship, and impose very severe punishments on convicted offenders—imprisonment for life being the punishment on a third conviction.

Later Acts.—The Prayer Book (Table of Lessons) Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 37), has established a new lectionary; and the Act of Uniformity Amendment Act, 1872, above referred to, has authorized (1) shortened, (2) special, and (3) additional services, 'so that there be not introduced into such additional service 'any portion of the Communion Service, 'or anything, except anthems or hymns, which does not form part of the holy scriptures, or book of Common Prayer,' and so that the form and mode of use is approved by the ordinary. The Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874, has also added to the remedies for clerical deviations from uniformity. An alternative lectionary has been provided by the Revised Table of Lessons Measure, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, No. 3).

See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Church and Clergy,' for the later Acts; and for the earlier Acts, see the Statutes Revised, 2nd ed. vol. i., and Lely's Church of England Position, and see also PUBLIC WORSHIP REGULATION ACT, 1874.

Uniformity of Process Act (2 Wm. 4, c. 39), by which personal actions, theretofore commenced by different processes in the Courts of King's Bench, Exchequer, and Common Pleas were first commenced by one process applicable to all three courts alike. See LATITAT; QUO MINUS.

Unigeniture, the state of being the only begotten.

Unilateral, one-sided.

Unilateral Contract. When the party to whom an engagement is made makes no express agreement on his part, the contract is called unilateral, even in cases where the civil law attached certain obligations to his acceptance. A loan of money and a loan for use were of this kind.—Civ. Law.

A promise without consideration is of this nature if by deed it is primâ facie enforceable. See CONSIDERATION.

Union of parishes for the purpose of administering the laws for the relief of the poor, first effected under 22 Geo. 3, c. 83 ('Gilbert's Act'), and afterwards under the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Poor.' Poor Law Unions were abolished by the Poor Law Acts, 1930 and 1934 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 17 and 24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 59), and the powers of guardians transferred to the county and borough councils by the same Acts.

Union Assessment Committee. A committee of the board of guardians of every union, consisting of not less than six nor more than twelve, having jurisdiction to revise the valuation lists framed by the overseers of each parish for the purpose of rating to the poor rate. See Union Assessment Committee Acts of 1862 and 1864 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 103, and 27 & 28 Vict. c. 39), by the latter of which there can be no appeal against a poor rate to quarter sessions without previous notice of the objection of the appellant to the assessment committee, and failure to obtain relief from such committee. As to time of giving notice of appeal, see Denaby Overseers v. Denaby Collieries, 1909, A. C. 247. The Act of 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 38), has been repealed by the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 90), except s. 6 and in part as to London. See RATES.

Unitarians, Protestant Dissenters who do not hold the doctrine of the Trinity. They were excepted from the benefit of the Toleration Act until 1813, when the Act 53 Geo. 3, c. 160, repealed the incapacities and penalties imposed by earlier statutes. The holding of Unitarian opinions was no offence at Common Law: see Shore v. Wilson, (1842) 9 Cl. & Fin. 355 (Lady Hewley's Charities). Trusts for the benefit of Unitarians are accordingly enforceable (Shrewsbury v. Hornby, (1846) 5 Ha. 406; Re Barnett, (1860) 29 L. J. Ch. 871; Re Wall, (1889) 42 Ch. D. 510). See DISSENTERS.

Unitas personarum, the unity of persons as that between husband and wife, or ancestor and heir.

United States of America, declared their independence on July 4, 1766, and were acknowledged by England on September 3, 1783.

Unity of Possession. Where one has a right to two estates, and holds them together in his own hands, as if a person takes a lease of lands from another at a certain rent, and afterwards buys the fee-simple, this is an unity of possession by which the lease is extinguished, because that he who had before the occupation only for his rent, is now become lord and owner of the land.—Termes de la Ley. See JOINT TENANCY; TENANCY IN COMMON.

Universal Agent, one who is appointed to do all the acts which the principal can personally do, and which he may lawfully delegate the power to another to do. Such an universal agency may potentially exist, but it must be of the rarest occurrence. And indeed it is difficult to conceive of the existence of such an agency practically, inasmuch as it would be to make such an agent the complete master, not merely dux facti but dominus rerum, the complete disposer of all the rights and property of the principal. The law will not from general expressions, however broad, infer the existence of any such universal agency; but it will rather construe them as restrained by the principal business of the party in respect to which it is presumed his intention to delegate the authority was principally directed.—Story's Agency, 18.

Universal Legacy, a testamentary disposition by which the testator gives to one or more persons the whole of the property which he leaves at his decease.—Civ. Law.

Universal Partnership, a species of partnership by which all the partners agree to put in common all their property, universorum bonorum, not only what they then have, but also what they shall acquire.—Civ. Law.

Universitas vel corporatio non dicitur aliquid facere nisi id sit collegialiter deliberatum, etiam si major pars id faciat. Dav. 48.—(An university or corporation is not said to do anything unless it be deliberated upon collegially, even though the majority of them do it.)

Universities and College Estates Act, 1858, 1860 and 1898 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 44; 23 & 24 Vict. c. 59; 61 & 62 Vict. c. 55), the last of which Acts applied the Settled Land Acts, with modifications, to the sale and letting of the estates of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge and Durham, and of the colleges therein.

These Acts have been repealed and replaced by the University and College Estates Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 24), and the Law of Property (Amendment) Act, 1926, Sched., to bring the law into line with the property legislation of 1925.

University, an association of learners, and of teachers and examiners of the learners, upon whose report the association grants titles called 'degrees' (such as 'Master of Arts,' 'Doctor of Divinity'), showing that the holders have attained some definite proficiency.

The English Universities are those of Oxford, Cambridge (incorporated by 13 Eliz. c. 29, by the two names of the Chancellor, Masters and Scholars of the University of Oxford and Cambridge respectively, with the direction that they shall be called and named by none other name for evermore), Durham, London, Victoria of Manchester, Birmingham, Liverpool, Leeds, Sheffield, Bristol, and East Midland University, Nottingham, the graduates of which (see University of Liverpool Act, 1904; University of Leeds Act, 1904; and Sheffield University Act, 1914) have equal statutory privileges and exemptions; and Reading University (see 18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 25). There is also the University of Wales (see University of Wales Act, 1902). The Scottish Universities are those of Aberdeen, St. Andrews, Edinburgh, and Glasgow. In Northern Ireland, the Queen's University of Belfast; in the Irish Free State, the University of Dublin (and Trinity College), and the National University of Ireland.

Abolition of Tests.—The Universities Tests Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 26), proceeding on the preamble 'that it is expedient that the benefits of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Durham, and of the Colleges and halls now subsisting therein as places of religion and learning, should be rendered freely accessible to the nation, and that by means of divers restrictions, tests, and disabilities many of her Majesty's subjects are debarred from the full enjoyment of the same,' makes various provisions for the removal of religious tests. See Reg. v. Hertford College, (1878) 3 Q. B. D. 693, in which it was held that the Act applies only to colleges subsisting before it was passed. The 36 & 37 Vict. c. 21 has made similar alterations in the law with regard to the University of Dublin and Trinity College. The College Charter Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 63), provides that a copy of any application for a charter for a new college or university shall be submitted to Parliament as well as to the Sovereign in Council.

Reforms.—In 1854, by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 81, commissioners were appointed with powers to frame statutes for the better government, etc., of Oxford University, and the colleges therein; and in 1856, by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 88, other commissioners with the like powers as to Cambridge. In 1877, by 40 & 41 Vict. c. 48, commissioners were appointed with the like powers as to both Oxford and Cambridge. See also Universities of Oxford and Cambridge Act, 1923, which established two bodies of commissioners, one for Oxford, and the other for Cambridge University, with powers to make statutes and regulations for the University, its colleges and halls, emoluments, endowments, trusts, foundations, institutions, etc., in general accordance with the recommendations contained in the Report of the Royal Commission appointed in 1919 to consider the applications made by the universities for financial assistance from the State.

As to the jurisdiction over undergraduates, see CHANCELLORS OF THE TWO UNIVERSITIES. The Sex Disqualification (Removal) Act, 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 71), empowered universities to admit women to membership, degrees, and see infra.

Parliamentary Franchise.—Oxford and Cambridge had the franchise for two members each from the earliest times; London acquired it by ss. 24 and 41–45 of the Representation of the People Act, 1867, for one member, and the Scottish Universities by s. 39 of the Scots Act of 1868. The Representation of the People Act, 1918, provides the following University constituencies:—

Oxford . . . . .	2	} Number of members.
Cambridge . . . . .	2
London . . . . .	1
Other English Universities (together) . . . . .	2
Wales . . . . .	1
Scotland (together) . . . . .	3

Men and women of full age and capacity who have received a degree (other than an honorary degree) at any University forming, or forming part of, the constituency, or in the case of Scottish Universities qualified under 31 & 32 Vict. c. 48, s. 37, are entitled to be registered as parliamentary electors for a University constituency, or if a woman, if she has been admitted to and passed the final examination and kept under the conditions required of women the period of residence necessary for a man to obtain a degree at any University forming or forming part of a University constituency which did not at the time the examination was passed admit women to degrees (see the Repr. of People (Equal Franchise) Act, 1928). See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Parliament.'

As to Cambridge, see also SPINNING-HOUSE.

University Court. See CHANCELLORS OF THE TWO UNIVERSITIES; COGNIZANCE.

University Press. At Oxford, the public press of the University is called the 'Clarendon Press'; at Cambridge, the 'Pitt Press.'

Unlage [Sax.], an unjust law.

Unlawful Assembly. At Common Law is an assembly of three or more persons (a) for purposes forbidden by law, such as that of committing a crime by open force, or (b) with intent to carry out any common purpose, lawful or unlawful, in such a manner as to endanger the public peace, or to give firm and courageous persons in the neighbourhood of such assembly reasonable grounds to apprehend a breach of the peace in consequence of it. See Stephen's Digest of Criminal Law, 6th ed., p. 55, and compare RIOT; ROUT; PUBLIC MEETING; PUBLIC ORDER.

Unliquidated Damages. When the amount to be recovered depends on all the circumstances of the case, and on the conduct of the parties, or is fixed by opinion or by an estimate, the damages are said to be 'unliquidated.' See LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

Unmarried, is a term of flexible meaning; primâ facie it means 'never having been married,' but the context may show that it means 'not having a husband or wife' (Re Sergeant, (1884) 26 Ch. D. 575; Blundell v. De Fulbe, (1888) 57 L. J. Ch. 576).

Unnatural Offence, the infamous crime against nature, either with man or beast, punishable by the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, by penal servitude for life or any term not less than ten years, but this minimum punishment was abolished by the Penal Servitude Act, 1891.

Uno flatu, with the same breath and the same intent.

Unques [Nor.-Fr.] (yet).

Unques prist. See UNCORE PRIST.

Unseaworthy Ships. Sending an unseaworthy (see Hedley v. Pinkney Steamship Co., 1892, 1 Q. B. 58—C. A.) ship to sea in such a state that the life of any person is likely to be endangered is a misdemeanour by s. 47 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, reproducing s. 4 of the repealed Merchant Shipping Act, 1876, unless the person charged proves either that he used all reasonable means to insure the ship being sent to sea in a seaworthy state, or that her going to sea in such an unseaworthy state was under the circumstances reasonable and justifiable.

As to the meaning of unseaworthiness in a bill of lading, see The Schwan, 1909, A. C. 450.

Unsound Food. Extensive powers for the inspection and seizure of unsound food are given by the Public Health Act, 1875, ss. 116–119, and the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, s. 47. By sub-s. 4 of the latter Act the seller of unsound food may be ordered, upon a second conviction, to affix a notice of the facts upon his premises; and under this section proceedings may be taken by a private individual (Giebler v. Manning, 1906, 1 K. B. 709). As to the position of a wholesale butcher when unsound meat is seized while in the possession of the retailer to whom he sold it, see Grivell v. Malpas, 1906, 2 K. B. 32, and as to the power of a butcher to obtain compensation when a prosecution results in an acquittal, see Hobbs v. Winchester Corporation, 1910, 2 K. B. 471. Compare the title ADULTERATION.

Unsound Mind. See PERSON OF UNSOUND MIND.

Unsworn Testimony. As to its admission in certain cases in civil and criminal proceedings in Colonial courts, see 6 & 7 Vict. c. 22; and as to unsworn evidence of child on charge of defilement of girl under 13, see Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, s. 4. See also as to the evidence of children, Children and Young Persons Act, 1932, s. 37; Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, s. 28.

Unthrifft, a person of outrageous prodigality.

Unus Nullus Rule, The, the rule of evidence which obtains in the Civil Law, that the testimony of one witness is equivalent to the testimony of none. See Best on Evidence, bk. 3, pt. 2, c. 10, and CORROBORATION. In our law corroboration is required in an action for breach of promise of marriage and on a summons for an affiliation order, and two witnesses are required on an indictment for treason or perjury, and for attestation of a will. The unsupported evidence of an accomplice, though legally admissible, is usually rejected by a jury under the direction of the judge (In re Meunier, 1894, 2 Q. B. 415); the same procedure will usually apply to the uncorroborated testimony of a party in divorce proceedings or the claimant of an estate. With these exceptions, the rule of our law is that witnesses are weighed, not counted,—ponderantur testes, non numerantur.

Upper Bench [bancus superior, Lat.], the style of the King's Bench during the protectorate of Cromwell.

Upset Price, in sales by auction, an amount for which property to be sold is put up, so that the first bidder at that price is declared the buyer, if there is no higher bid.

U. R. (initials of ui rogas, be it as you desire), a ballot, thus inscribed, by which the Romans voted in favour of a bill or candidate.—Tay. C. L. 191.

Urban Sanitary District. See SANITARY AUTHORITY.

Urban Servitudes, servitudes connected with houses, such as support, light, stillicide, etc.—Bell's Scots Law Dict., voce 'Servitude.'

Ure, custom, practice.—13 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1.

Urgency Order. In cases of urgency, where expedient for the welfare of any person alleged to be of unsound mind or for the public safety, that person can be detained for seven days on an order signed by a relative or other person, as provided, accompanied by a medical certificate.—Lunacy Act, 1890, s. 11, as amended by s. 17 of Mental Treatment Act, 1930.

Usage, practice long continued.—6 Rep. 65; but it must always be proved, whereas a custom may in some cases (e.g., the custom of gavelkind) be judicially noticed without proof.

Usance [Fr.], the time which it is the usage of the countries, between which bills are drawn, to appoint for payment of them. If a foreign bill be drawn payable at sight, or at a certain period after sight, the acceptor will be liable to pay according to the course of exchange at the time of acceptance, unless the drawer express that it is payable according to the course of exchange at the time it was drawn, en espèces de ce jour. See Byles on Bills. As to the usance between London and the various foreign countries, see ibid.

Use and Occupation, Action for, an action for damages upon the case for breach of an implied agreement to pay for the use of a landlord's property under the Distress for Rent Act, 1737 (11 Geo. 2, c. 19), s. 14, whereby it is enacted that it shall be lawful for the landlord, where the agreement is not by deed, to recover a reasonable satisfaction for the lands, tenements, or hereditaments held or occupied by the defendant in an action on the case, for the use or occupation of what was so held or enjoyed; and if in evidence on the trial of such action any parole demise, or any agreement (not being by deed) whereon a certain rent was reserved, shall appear, the plaintiff in such action shall not therefore be non-suited, but may make use thereof as an evidence of the quantum of the damages to be recovered. Apparently, the action is not for damages ex delictu, because the action is not maintainable against a trespasser or wrong-doer. An action for debt on the demise but not upon covenant for use and occupation was available at common law (Gibson v. Kirk, (1841) 1 Q. B. 850). Occupation by the defendant must be proved. See Woodfall, L. and T.; Bullen and Leake's Prec. of Plead.

User de action, the pursuing or bringing an action in the proper county, etc.—Brooke, 64.

Uses (History). A use is the intention or purpose, express or implied, upon which property is to be held. The Common Law treated the actual possessor for all purposes as the owner of the property. It was not difficult to find him out, since the possession of his estate was conferred upon him by a formal and notorious ceremony, technically called livery of seisin, which was performed openly and in the presence of the people of the locality.

It soon became evident that the simple rules of the Common Law were stumbling-blocks to the complicated wants of an enterprising people.

Hence ingenuity was sharpened to hit upon a device which should set at naught the rigidity of existing law and formalities.

A system was found by the monastic jurists upon a model furnished by the Civil Law, which, by a nice adaptation, evaded, without overturning, the Common Law. Two methods of transferring realty began to co-exist in this country—the ancient Common Law system, and the later invention, which is denominated USES.

Thus a novel contrivance, which was at first a liberating expedient, became a gigantic system, which superseded the doctrines and practice of feudal law, and laid the foundation of modern conveyancing.

Before the Statute of Uses, a use was in its nature equitable, as such; it may be defined to have been a right in Chancery to the beneficial ownership of property, the possession of which had been confided to another. The Court of Chancery, although without jurisdiction over the property, found a way to make an appeal to the conscience of the apparent or legal owner, backed by its irresistible sanctions. The person enjoying the beneficial right was called the cestui que use, or he to whose use the land was conveyed, and the person in possession, the feoffee to uses. Thus A. conveyed an estate to F. to his (A.'s) own use or to the use of C.; F. was the feoffee to uses, and A. or C., as the case may be, the cestui que use.

Function of Feoffee to Uses.—The use consisted of three parts:—(1) That the feoffee to uses should suffer the cestui que use to take the profits; and (2) upon the request of the cestui que use, or notice of his will, would convey the estate to the cestui que use or his heirs, or any other person by his direction; and (3) that if the feoffee to uses had been dispossessed, and the cestui que use disturbed, the feoffee to uses could re-enter or bring an action to recontinue his possession.

Properties of Uses before the Statute of Uses :—

(1) They were descendible according to the rules of the Common Law relating to the inheritable estates of intestates: and the special customs of gavelkind, borough-English, and copyholds, determined the particular descent of uses. This is an illustration of the well-known maxim, Æquitas sequitur legem.

(2) They were devisable even before the Statute of Wills, 32 Hen. 8, c. 1.

(3) They were transferable, although at law they were mere choses in action.

(4) A cestui que use in possession of the land was deemed a tenant at will only, for he had neither jus in re, i.e., an estate, nor jus ad rem, i.e., a demand, and therefore he could bring no action, having neither title nor legal estate in the property.

(5) Neither could a widow be endowed, nor could a husband have his curtesy of a use, because the cestui que use had no legal seisin of the land. See DOWER.

(6) The cestui que use might have been impelled on a jury.—2 Hen. 5, c. 3.

(7) The feoffee to uses, being complete owner of the land at law, performed the feudal duties, had power to sell, brought actions, his widow became entitled to dower, and his estate was subjected to wardship, relief, and forfeiture for treason or felony. In fact, he was treated at Common Law as the absolute tenant of the fee.

(8) A use, being but the creature of equity, could not have been taken in execution for the debts of the cestui que use; for there was no process at Common Law but against legal estates.

(9) A use, not being an object of tenure, was therefore exempt from the oppressive burdens of the feudal system. It was not forfeitable for treason or felony, because it was not held of any person. This was afterwards broken in upon by statute 12 Ric. 2, c. 3.

(10) At one time a use was not assets for the payment of debts by the heir or executor.

There appears to have been a distinction between a use and a trust, even before the Statute of Uses. A special trust appears to have arisen where the feoffee to uses was not only invested with the possession, rents and profits, but was under an obligation to deal with them in a special manner indicated by the feoffor. The indication might be lawful or it might be a special trust unlawful, which was created for fraudulent purposes, so as to defraud creditors, to defeat the Statute of Mortmain, and the like.

If the two following statutes be compared, it will be manifest that Parliament did not consider the use and special trust to be the same: the 50 Edw. 3, c. 6, subjected the special trust to an execution by a creditor of the cestui que trust; while the 19 Hen. 7, c. 15, extended, for the first time, the estate of the cestui que use. In general, however, there was but little difference in the terms 'use' and trust. See OFFICIAL USE; ACTIVE USE; PASSIVE TRUST, and infra.

Uses may be classified as :—

I. Present or executed; distributable into :—

(a) Those arising by act of parties, which were created either—

(1) By express declaration in a feoffment, deed, etc.

(2) By presumed intention in a will;

(3) By certain considerations.

(b) Those arising by act of law, which were either—

(1) Resulting;

(2) Implied.

II. Future or executory, distributable into :

(a) Shifting or secondary;

(b) Springing;

(c) Contingent.

See TRUSTS.

Objections to uses before the Statute :—

'Though these uses' (see Gilbert, Uses, c. 1, s. 8) 'had a very equitable beginning, yet, like all new models and general schemes of ordering property, it introduced a great many unforeseen inconveniences, and subverted in many instances the institution and policy of the Common Law.

'Firstly. Estates passed by way of use, from one to another, by bare words only, without any solemn ceremony or permanent record of the transaction, whereby a third person that had right knew not against whom to bring his action.

'Secondly. Heirs were deprived of their Common Law rights since uses were devisable.

'Thirdly. Lords lost their wardships, reliefs, marriages, and escheats, the trustees letting the cestui que use continue the possession, whereby the real tenants that held the lands could not be discovered.

'Fourthly. The king lost the estates of aliens and criminals; for they made their friends trustees, who kept possession, and secretly gave them the profits, so that their use was undiscovered.

'Fifthly. Purchasers were insecure; for the alienation of the cestui que use in the possession was at Common Law a disseisin, and 1 Ric. 3, c. 1, gave him power to alien what he had; yet the feoffees may still enter to re-vest a remainder or contingent use, which was never published by any record or delivery, whereby the purchaser could know of them.

'Sixthly. Uses were not subject to the payment of debts.

'Seventhly. Many lost their rights by perjury in averment of secret uses.

'Eighthly. Uses might be allowed in mortmain.'

These grievances led to the passing of the Statute of Uses.

This Act, 27 Hen. 8, c. 10, is usually called the Statute of Uses; its title on the parliament roll is, 'An Act concerning Uses and Wills,' and in pleading it used to be described as Statutum de usibus in possessionem transferendis. It became a pivot of English conveyancing. Its effect was that where any person was seised to the use of another, then the person enjoying the use was to be deemed to have the actual and lawful seisin, estate or possession corresponding to the use, and the statute transferred the (legal) seisin, estate or possession accordingly to the cestui que use.

It has been generally said that one object aimed at by this statute was the total destruction of the use, by effecting an amalgamation of the legal and equitable interests; but this object, if it existed, has failed owing to the equitable jurisdiction of the Courts of Chancery and the judicial interpretation by the Common Law judges of the meaning of this celebrated statute.

Requirements of the Statute :—

There are several circumstances necessary to the execution of uses under the statute, viz. :—

(1) A person seised to the use.

(2) A cestui que use in esse.

(3) A use in esse in possession, reversion, or remainder.

(4) Every species of realty, except copyholds, whether corporeal or incorporeal, in possession, reversion, or remainder, may be conveyed to uses, but it must be in esse.

(5) There must be a seisin in the grantee, or feoffee, to uses at the time of the execution of the use.

(6) The use may be raised by a conveyance operating either by transmutation or non-transmutation of possession (see infra).

Non-operation of the Statute :—

The Statute of Uses did not operate to vest the legal estate in the cestui que use in the following cases :—

(1) Uses limited of copyholds—since no person can be introduced into the estate without the lord's consent; for if use were permitted, there would then be effected a transmutation of the possession by operation of law, which would be contrary to the peculiarity of this kind of tenure.

Yet shifting or springing uses may be limited by copyhold surrenders, so as to have the effect of divesting prior vested estates.

(2) Upon a demise to the grantee to uses of leaseholds and chattel interests. It is said that the statute contemplated freeholds only, and therefore employed the word SEISED; now a tenant is only possessed of a leasehold for years. But the use declared upon a feoffment, etc., might be of a term of years and there was nothing to prevent the cestui que use from having the legal estate in the term to which the legal reversion could be released. See LEASE AND RELEASE.

(3) Active and constructive uses. When the use involves a direction to sell the estate and then divide the proceeds of the sale or to pay debts, or to pay over the profits, or to convey to a child on attaining majority, or to re-convey on the repayment of a mortgage-loan, the statute was precluded from the very nature of the transaction from converting such a use into a legal right to the land, and equity, therefore, compels the trustee, who retains the legal estate notwithstanding the statute, to perform the duty confided in him.

And the trustee had the legal estate (if properly invested in him) in the following cases: A trust to permit a feme covert to receive the profits for, or to pay the same to, her separate use; and so of a trust to permit and suffer a party to receive and take the net rents and profits.

(4) A second use, or a use upon a use. The Common Law judges determined that the statute could only operate upon one use, and where another use was superadded it was a mere nullity, since it was an interest unknown to the Common Law before the statute. This doctrine and its consequences have been explained thus :—

There are three conveyances, viz., appointment to uses, bargain and sale, and covenant to stand seised where there is no transmutation or change of possession but only a use raised in favour of the appointee, purchaser or covenantee, and a transmutation of the legal estate by virtue of the Statute of Uses, while there are other conveyances such as feoffment grant or which transmute the possession at law, and no use is raised at all unless declared or implied upon the change in possession. Consequently if a use is declared upon a conveyance of the first kind, that use would be a use upon a use; in conveyances of the latter class, the use (if any) declared is the first, and the only use, on which it has been held that the Statute of Uses can work.

The following examples point out the peculiar operation of these two classes of transfers, i.e. (a) non-transmutation of possession, or (b) transmutation of possession as to the vesting of the legal and equitable estates :—

An Appointment, Bargain and Sale, or Covenant to stand seized

To D. and his heirs,

To the use of T. and his heirs,

To the use of, or in trust for, S. and his heirs, vests the legal estate or use in D. and the equitable estate in S., T. not taking any legal estate. But

A Feoffment or Grant

To D. and his heirs,

To the use of T. and his heirs,

To the use of, or in trust for, S. and his heirs, gives D. but a seisin, and vests the use or legal estate in T., and the equitable estate in S.

A release does not transmute the possession but it transvests the legal ownership and has the same effect as a feoffment or grant.

It was to avoid the divesting of the legal estate in the feoffee to uses that the practice grew up of a feoffment or grant by A. to B. and his heirs to the use of B. and his heirs, or, in the usual form, Unto and to the Use of B. and his heirs. A feoffment or grant to B. and his heirs would have been perfectly good to transmute the possession and transfer the legal estate, but if a use arose expressly or by implication on that estate, B. would have lost the legal estate without any transmutation of possession from him, and it may be suggested that the additional words, so far from being superfluous, meant no more than to express the grant to be for the benefit of the grantee as his legal estate, subject, of course, to any trust that may have been engrafted on the grant.

Upon this doctrine that there can be no use upon a use, equity interfered, and resuming her old dominion, treated C., the person having the second use, as the beneficiary, and compelled B., having the statute use, to deal with the estate for C.'s benefit as a trustee, and then giving the technical term of 'trust' to C.'s second use, deprived the use properly so called of its beneficial interest, and revived the twofold system of one person holding the legal estate in the land, while the equitable estate or the usufructuary right therein was actually enjoyed by another, and thus the Court of Chancery reasserted its jurisdiction over uses under the name of trusts.

Although, for the sake of distinction, and in practice, the first use executed by the statute is called a use, and the second use not executed by the statute a trust, yet this phraseology is altogether arbitrary; for either word may be applied indiscriminately and convertibly to either estate, since the particular interests enjoyed by the parties depend upon their position with regard to one another, and not upon the term employed in their denomination. The usual and strictly technical form is :—

To F. to the use of F. or to the use of C. in trust for E. (but it is immaterial whether it is in this form), so that a trust in name may be a use in effect, and à converso.

(5) Future executory and contingent uses cannot be executed into legal estates by the statute until they arise.

(6) It is said that devises are not within the Statute of Uses, because it was passed before the Statute of Wills (32 Hen. 8, c. 1, A.D. 1540). But this is of no practical importance, since the Courts, in their decisions, are entirely guided by a testator's intention, and it has been always held that if A. devise to B, and his heirs, to the use of or in trust for C. and his heirs, or in trust to permit C. and his heirs to take the profits, it shows that the testator intended that C. should have the legal estate in fee, and so the law decided. And if there be a devise to the use of A. for life, with remainder over, although it could not take effect by way of a use executed by the statute, because there was no seisin to serve the use, yet A. would have the legal estate. Indeed, uses were executed in a will as if they were limited by deed, if such was the testator's intent. See the judgment of Jessel, M.R., in Baker v. White, (1875) L. R. 20 Eq. 166.

The practical advantages of the system, subsequently to the statute, were :—

Conveyances to uses legalized many dispositions which were altogether void at the Common Law, for uses might be suspended, revived, postponed, and accelerated in a way altogether opposed to the rules of the ancient feudal law. Amongst the most important relaxations thus introduced were the following :—

(1) A person could convey to himself, which he could not at the Common Law, as it would have been absurd to give possession by livery of seisin to one's self. This was found to be convenient, especially in the following example :—

It frequently happened that upon the death or removal of trustees, it became necessary to fill up their number pursuant to a power for that purpose, usually introduced into settlements of real property. In order to effect this it was formerly the practice for the old trustees to make a conveyance, which operates by way of transmutation of possession (either by release or grant) to the new trustees and their heirs, to the use of the old and new trustees and their heirs. Without the assistance, therefore, of the Statute of Uses, it would have been necessary in the above case that the old trustee should have first enfeoffed A., who would have re-enfeoffed the old and new trustees jointly, thereby making two conveyances necessary. Indeed, in the case of terms for years, and other personal property, two assignments were required for this purpose, until 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 21 ; and by the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 50, freehold land might be conveyed by a person to himself jointly with another, and by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 72, to himself alone ; this section also reproduces the last-mentioned two enactments.

(2) A conveyance could not have been made by a husband to his wife, but by limiting a seisin to the grantee or releasee, the husband might declare the use to his wife, which the statute would execute.

(3) A man could not make his own heir a purchaser, even of an estate tail, for filius est pars patris—heres est pars antecessoris ; but a man might limit the use so as to make his heirs special take, either by purchase or descent.

(4) No person could take a present interest in the habendum of a deed who was not named in the premises. But in a case where A. enfeoffed B., habendum to the said B. and C., their heirs and assigns, to the use and behoof of the said B. and C., their heirs and assigns, it was resolved that, as C. was not named in the premises, he could take no possession originally by the habendum ; and that the livery, made according to the intent of the indenture, did not give anything to C., because as to him it was void ; but though the feoffment did not give any seisin to C., yet it did to B. and his heir, which seisin was sufficient to serve the use declared to C. Therefore the use limited to B. and C. was good, and the statute executed it. But this limitation of the use in a bargain and sale to a person not named in the premises, after a previous disposition of it to the bargainee, would be ineffective to pass the legal estate, for the reasons before mentioned.

(5) So it was a rule of law that if an estate be conveyed to two, the one being capable and the other incapable at the time of the grant, he who was capable should take the whole, and that joint tenants cannot take at different periods. But since the introduction of uses, if A. made a feoffment in fee, to the use of B. and his future wife, though the whole estate would vest in B. at first, yet upon his marriage the wife would take jointly with him. So if a disseisin be had to the use of two, and the one agreed to it at one time, and the other at another, they became joint tenants.

(6) An estate of freehold could not be granted, apart from statute, at the Common Law, to commence in futuro, nor could a contingent remainder be supported, without an express particular estate of freehold (see CONTINGENT REMAINDERS), but by a conveyance under the Statute of Uses, a freehold could be created to commence in futuro, and future limitations would have been supported when no particular estate had been made, either as remainders or springing uses.

(7) An estate could not at the Common Law be limited upon a fee-simple, i.e., a fee-simple could not be made to cease as to one, and take effect by way of limitation upon a contingent event in favour of another person ; but such a limitation could take effect by way of shifting or springing use. A shifting or springing use, after a previous limitation of the fee, could not be barred by the cestui que use by any kind of conveyance, but where it was limited upon an estate-tail the tenant-in-tail could bar it.

(8) Every remainder, at the Common Law, must be limited, so as to await the determination of the particular estate, before it can take effect in possession : but an abridgment of the particular estate, upon a certain condition, could be effected by a conveyance to uses, so as to accelerate the expectant estate into possession.

The Statute of Uses has been repealed by the Law of Property Act, 1925 (see s. 207 and 7th Sched.), and many former legal estates can only take effect in equity now, but the law on the subject is still applicable to the investigation of titles up to 1926 (s. 1 (10), ibid.), and a direction in any statute or other instrument requiring land to be conveyed to uses shall (subject to creating or reserving thereout any legal estate authorized by the L. P. Act which may be required) be conveyed to a person of full age upon the requisite trusts ; and see ss. 130 to 132 of the same Act ; also s. 65 (reservations in lieu of grants of rent-charges, easements, etc.) ; s. 66 (confirmation of past transactions), and s. 4 (equivalence in equity of former legal estates). See LAW OF PROPERTY ; SETTLED LAND AND VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCE.

Usher [fr. huis, Fr., a door], a door-keeper, an officer who keeps silence in a court. The office of Usher of the Court of Chancery was abolished by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 27.

Usque ad medium flum aquæ, or viæ [Lat.] (even to the middle of the stream or road). See AD MEDIUM FLUM VIÆ.

Usual Covenants, covenants usually inserted in deeds having a similar scope to that in respect of which a question arises. The phrase occurs most frequently in connection with agreements for leases stipulating that the lease when granted shall contain 'all usual covenants.' What these are is a question of fact, but it may perhaps be laid down that at the present day covenants by the lessee to pay rent, to pay taxes, and to repair, and a qualified covenant by the lessor for quiet enjoyment (see that title), are usual, but that no others are, and in particular that the covenant not to assign or underlet without the leave of the lessor is not : see Hampshire v. Wickens, (1878) 7 Ch. D. 555 ; Re Lander, 1892, 3 Ch. 41.

A proviso for re-entry on breach of covenants generally is not 'usual,' but a proviso for re-entry on breach of the covenant to pay rent is : see per James, L.J., in Hodgkinson v. Crowe, (1875) L. R. 10 Ch. 622 ; Re Anderton, (1890) 45 Ch. D. 476.

Usual Terms, a phrase in the Common Law practice, which meant pleading issuably, rejoining gratis, and taking short notice of trial. When a defendant obtained further time to plead, these were the terms usually imposed. The phrase is often used informally upon declaring an Order of Court, according to the practice of the Court, e.g., 'Stay of proceedings upon the usual terms pending an appeal.' As a rule, this means payment of the sum in question by the appellant, if defendant, the plaintiff giving security for repayment and an undertaking by his solicitor to abide any order for refunding if the appeal is successful—costs of the application to be paid by the applicant. See A. P. notes to Ord. LVIII., r. 16.

Usucapio, the enjoying, by continuance of time, a long possession or prescription ; property acquired by use or possession.—Civ. Law. See LIMITATION.

Usucapio constituta est ut aliquis litium finis esset.—(The object of usucapio (title by quiet possession) is to put an end to litigation.) See Sand. Just., and Broom's Leg. Max.

Usufruct, the right of reaping the fruits (fructus) of things belonging to others, without destroying or wasting the subject over which such right extends.—Ibid.

Usufructuary, he who enjoys the usufruct.

Usura maritima [fœnus nauticum, Lat.], interest taken on bottomry or respondentia bonds, which is proportioned to the risk, and was not affected by the abolished usury laws.—19 Geo. 3, c. 37 ; 2 Steph. Com.

Usurpation, a keeping or holding by using that which is another's ; an interruption of usucapio, or disturbing a man in his right and possession, etc. It is called intrusion in the civil and canon laws.—Sand. Just.

Usury, any reward taken for the use of money. Usura est commodum certum quod propter usum rei (vel æris) mutuæ recipitur ; sed, secundariò sperare de aliquâ retributione, ad voluntatem ejus qui mutuatus est, hoc non est vitiosum. 5 Rep. 70.—(Usury is a certain benefit which is received for the use of a thing (or of money) lent ; but, secondly, to hope for a certain return at the option of the party who borrowed, this is not vicious.) The term is usually applied to the taking of exorbitant interest, or of interest of a greater amount than is allowed by law. Eleven statutes, from 37 Hen. 8, c. 9, to 13 & 14 Vict. c. 56, fixing the legal rates of interest, were all repealed in 1854 by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 90, together with 'all "the then" existing laws against usury,' but the interest which pawnbrokers (see that title) may take is still restricted by law, and the 109th Canon, including usury amongst other offences for which an offender may be presented, has not only not been expressly repealed, but made part of the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892.

See, further, MONEY-LENDERS Act, and PAWNBROKERS.

Usus est dominium fiduciarium. Bacon's Read. Stat. Uses.—(Use is a fiduciary dominion.)

Utas [octave, Fr.], the eighth day following any term or feast.

Uterine Brother [uterinus frater, Lat.], a brother born of the same mother; frater consanguineus is a brother by the same father.

Utero-gestation, pregnancy.

Uttangethel. See OUTFANGTHEF.

Uti possidetis [Lat.] (as you possess).

Utlagus, or Utlagatus, an outlaw. See OUTLAWRY.

Utlad, tenemental land.

Utlasse, an escape of a felon out of prison.

Utter Barristers, barristers who plead 'without' the bar; all such counsel as are not either King's Counsel or Serjeants-at-law. See Cowel, tit. 'Barraster.'

Uttering, tendering; selling; putting in circulation; publishing. Knowingly uttering counterfeit coin is a misdemeanour, and after two prior convictions a felony, by the Coinage Offences Act, 1861, s. 21. Knowingly uttering a forged document is punishable as forgery.—The Forgery Act, 1913, s. 6.

V.

V. G., verbi gratia, for the sake of example.

Vacant Possession, in action for recovery of land. See R. S. C. 1883, Ord. IX., r. 9, as to mode of service of writ.

Vacant Succession, an inheritance the heir to which is unknown.

Vacation. By Ord. LXIII., r. 4, it is provided that 'the vacations to be observed in the several courts and offices of the Supreme Court shall be four in every year—viz., Long vacation, Christmas vacation, Easter vacation, and Whitsun vacation.' See LONG VACATION.

The county courts are, by s. 39 of the County Courts Act, 1934, as a rule, wholly closed during the month of September.

Vacation Schools. A local education authority has power under s. 22 of the Education Act, 1922, 'to provide, for children attending a public elementary school, vacation schools, vacation classes, play-centres, or other means of recreation during their holidays, or at such other times' as the authority may prescribe.

Vacation Sittings. Under the Jud. Act, 1873, s. 28 (replaced by Jud. Act, 1925, s. 54), and R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LXIII. r. 11, two 'vacation judges' of the High Court sit during vacations, for the hearing of such applications as may require to be immediately or promptly heard.

Vacatura, an avoidance of an ecclesiastical benefice.

Vaccaria, a dairy.—Co. Litt. 5 b.

Vaccination, inoculation with the virus of cowpox as a preventive of smallpox. First made compulsory in 1853 by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 100, gratuitous vaccination having been previously provided for in the various enactments, dating from 1840, on the subject prior to 1867, all of which were repealed by the Vaccination Act of that year (30 & 31 Vict. c. 84). By that Act it was provided, inter alia, that the parent of every child born in England should within three months after the birth of such child, or where by reason of the death, illness, absence, or inability of the parent or other cause, any other person should have the custody of such child, such person should within three months after receiving the custody of such child, take it, or cause it to be taken, to the public vaccinator of the vaccination district in which it should be then resident, to be vaccinated, or should within such period as aforesaid cause it to be vaccinated by some medical practitioner (s. 16). This Act was amended in 1871 by 34 & 35 Vict. c. 98, in 1874 by 37 & 38 Vict. c. 75, and in 1898 by the Vaccination Act, 1898, and this last Act was itself amended by the Vaccination Act, 1907, in order to give relief to persons having a conscientious objection to vaccination, and s. 1 (1) is as follows:—

1.—(1) No parent or other person shall be liable to any penalty under section 29 or section 31 of the Vaccination Act of 1867 if within four months from the birth of the child he makes a statutory declaration [see infra] that he conscientiously believes that vaccination would be prejudicial to the health of the child, and within seven days thereafter delivers or sends by post the declaration to the vaccination officer of the district.

(2) A statutory declaration made for the purposes of this section shall be exempt from stamp duty.

(3) A statutory declaration for the purposes of this section shall be made in the form set out in the schedule to this Act, or in a form to the like effect.

The Act of 1898 also substitutes six months (s. 1 (1)) for three as the period within which a child must be vaccinated, abolishes in ordinary cases the requirement that the child is to be taken to a vaccination station, substituting a domiciliary visit (s. 1 (2)) by the public vaccinator, and directs that the public vaccinator (who previously had the power of taking lymph (s. 1 (3)) from a vaccinated child for the purpose of a further vaccination) shall offer to vaccinate with glycerinated calf lymph or other lymph issued by the Ministry of Health.

It is provided also that an order directing vaccination, which previously could be made repeatedly until a child reached the age of 14, shall not be made on a person (s. 3) convicted of disobedience of a similar order as to the same child; and that no proceedings for disobedience to such an order shall be taken against any person convicted in respect of non-vaccination for not having the same child vaccinated until it has reached the age of four years (s. 4).

The following is the statutory form of declaration provided by the Act of 1907:—

FORM OF DECLARATION.

I, A. B., of _____ in the parish of _____ in the county of _____, being the parent [or person having the custody] of a child named C. D., who was born on the _____ day of _____ 19____, do hereby solemnly and sincerely declare that I conscientiously believe that vaccination would be prejudicial to the health of the child, and I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the provisions of the Statutory Declarations Act, 1835.

Dated this _____ day of _____ 19____.

Signed, A. B.

Declared before me, at _____ day of _____ a Commissioner for Oaths [or Justice of the Peace, or other officer authorized to receive a statutory declaration].

See Fry's Vaccination Acts; Shaw's Vaccination Acts; Chit. Stat., tit. 'Vaccination.'

Vackeel, Vakeel, Vaqueel, one endowed with authority to act for another: ambassador; agent sent on a special commission, or residing at a court; also a native law pleader or attorney.—Indian.

Vadiare duellum (to wage combat), where two contending parties, on a challenge, give and take a pledge of fighting.

Vadium [fr. vas, vadis, Lat.], a pledge or security.—Civ. Law.

Vadium mortuum, a mortgage or dead-pledge by which the pledgor loses the security and its fruits or interest which were taken by the pledgee or mortgagee until repayment or redemption; and see VIVUM VADIUM.

Vadium ponere, to take bail or pledges for a defendant's appearance.

Vadlet, the king's eldest son—hence the valet or knave follows the king and queen in a pack of cards.—Barr. on Stat. 344.

Vagrants, sturdy beggars; vagabonds.

The Act which is now in force, embodying, mitigating, and extending numerous former provisions, is the Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4. c. 83). It has been extended by the Vagrancy Act, 1838, as to re-commitment on failure to prosecute, appeal, and exhibition of obscene prints; by the Vagrant Act Amendment Act, 1873, as to gambling and betting in streets; by the Vagrancy Act, 1898, amended by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1912, s. 7, as to men living on earnings of prostitution; and by Poor Law Act, 1930, s. 150, as to obtaining relief by falsehood. It points out three classes of persons:—

1st, idle and disorderly persons; 2nd, rogues and vagabonds; 3rd, incorrigible rogues.

First. Idle and Disorderly Persons.—The following are, under the Vagrancy Act, 1824, s. 3, to be deemed 'idle and disorderly persons,' so that any justice of the peace may commit them (being convicted before him) to the house of correction to hard labour for not more than one month subject to an appeal to the sessions, viz.:—(1) Every person able to maintain himself or his family, and wilfully refusing or neglecting so to do, whereby he or any of his family whom he is bound to maintain shall become chargeable to any parish. (2) Every person returning to and becoming chargeable in any parish, etc., whence he, etc., shall have been removed by order of two justices, unless he, etc., produce a certificate of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of some other parish, etc., acknowledging him, etc., to be settled in such parish, etc. (3) Every pedlar wandering abroad, and trading without licence. (4) Every common prostitute wandering in the public streets or public highways, or in any place of public resort, and behaving in a riotous and indecent manner. (5) Every person wandering abroad, or placing himself or herself in any public place, street, highway, court, or passage, to beg, or gather alms, or procuring children so to do. See Mathers v. Penfold, 1915, 1 K. B. 514. (6) Every person relieved, in a workhouse, and refusing or neglecting while therein to perform the task prescribed by the guardians of the parish or union, if suited to his age and strength, or wilfully destroying or injuring his clothes, or damaging property of the guardians. (7) Every woman neglecting to maintain her bastard child, being able so to do, whereby it becomes chargeable to any parish or union.

Secondly. Rogues and Vagabonds.—The following are, by the Vagrancy Act, 1824, s. 4, as amended by the Vagrancy Act, 1935 (25 Geo. 5, c. 20), to be deemed 'rogues and vagabonds,' whom it is lawful for any justice to commit (being convicted before him) to the house of correction to hard labour for not more than three months, subject, as in the case of idle and disorderly persons, to an appeal to the sessions, viz. : —

(1) Every person committing any of the offences hereinbefore mentioned, after having been convicted as an idle and disorderly person. (2) Every person pretending to tell fortunes, or using any craft or device, by palmistry, or otherwise (this includes 'Spiritualism'—Monck v. Hilton, (1877) 2 Ex. D. 268), to deceive (see R. v. Entwistle, 1899, 1 Q. B. 846) and impose on any of his Majesty's subjects. (3) Every person wandering abroad, or lodging in any barn or outhouse, or in any deserted or unoccupied buildings, or in the open air, or under a tent, or in any cart or wagon, and not giving a good account of himself; but not unless (by Vagrancy Act, 1935) it is proved (a) that he had been directed to an accessible place of shelter and failed to apply for or refused shelter there, (b) that he is a persistent wanderer abroad notwithstanding accessible shelter, or caused damage or was or was likely to be infectious with vermin or otherwise (a place of shelter means gratis accommodation for the night), a 'tent, cart or wagon' with or in which the person travels is excluded from the meaning of the penalising words in the Act of 1824. (4) Every person unlawfully exposing to view in any street, or shop in any street, road, or public place, any obscene picture, or other indecent exhibition. (5) Every person wilfully exposing his person in any street, etc., or in any place of public resort, with intent to insult any female. (6) Every person wandering abroad, and endeavouring, by the exposure of wounds or deformities, to obtain alms. (7) Every person endeavouring to procure charitable contributions of any kind, under any false pretence. (8) Every person running away and leaving his wife, or his or her child or children, chargeable, or whereby they become chargeable, to any parish, etc. (9) Every person playing or betting in any street, road, highway, or other open or public place, at or with any table or instrument of gaming, at any game or pretended game of chance. (10) Every person having in his possession any picklock, etc., or other implement, with intent feloniously to break into any dwelling-house, etc., or being armed with any gun, etc., or other offensive weapon, or having upon him any instrument with intent to commit any felonious act. (11) Every person being found in any dwelling-house, etc., or in any enclosed yard, garden, or area, for any unlawful purpose. (12) Every suspected person or reputed thief frequenting any river, canal, etc., or any street, highway, etc., or any place of public resort, with intent to commit felony. (13) Every person apprehended as an idle and disorderly person, and violently resisting any constable or other peace officer so apprehending him, and being subsequently convicted thereof.

[If in possession of firearms or imitation firearms, may be sentenced to a maximum of seven years in addition : see Firearms and Imitation Firearms (Criminal Use) Act, 1933, s. 2.]

Thirdly. Incorrigible Rogues.—The following persons are, by the Vagrancy Act, 1824, s. 5, to be deemed 'incorrigible rogues' under the Act :—(1) Every person escaping out of any place of legal confinement before the expiration of the term for which he shall have been committed thereto by the Act. (2) Every person committing any offence against this Act, which shall subject him or her to be dealt with as a rogue and vagabond, such person having been at some former time adjudged so to be and duly convicted thereof. (3) And every person apprehended as a rogue and vagabond, and violently resisting any constable apprehending him, and subsequently convicted of the offence for which he was so apprehended. As to incorrigible rogues, it is enacted that it shall be lawful for any justice to commit such offender (being thereof convicted before him) to the house of correction, there to remain until the next general or quarter sessions of the peace, at which sessions the justices may examine into the case, and order that such offender be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for one year or less; and, further, that such offender (not being a female) be punished by whipping, at such time, and at such place within their jurisdiction, as they deem expedient.

By the Vagrant Act Amendment Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 38), s. 3, persons gaming with coin, etc., in streets or public places are to be deemed rogues and vagabonds, and may be punished under the Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 83); by the Poor Law Act, 1930 (20 Geo. 5, c. 17), ss. 151 et seq. (see CASUAL PAUPER); any person making a false statement for the purpose of or committing other offences when obtaining relief out of the poor rate is to be deemed an 'idle and disorderly person'; and by the Vagrancy Act, 1898, a man either (1) living on the earnings of prostitution, or (2) in any public place persistently soliciting or importuning for immoral purposes, is to be deemed a rogue and vagabond under the Act of 1824, and may be dealt with accordingly. The provisions of the Act of 1898 have been considerably amended and extended by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1912, s. 7.

As to the possession of firearms entailing penal servitude by a person committing certain offences under the Vagrancy Acts, see Firearms, etc. (Criminal Use) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 2 and Sched.

Valeat quantum, let it have its weight, small or great.

Valec, Valect, or Vadelet, a young gentleman; a gentleman of the chamber; a personal attendant or servant.

Valentia, the value or price of anything.

Valsheria, the proving by the kindred of the slain, one on the father's side, and another on that of the mother, that a man was a Welshman.

Valor beneficiorum, the value of every ecclesiastical benefice and preferment, according to which the first-fruits and tenths are collected and paid. It is commonly called the King's books, by which the clergy are at present rated.—2 Steph. Com.

Valuation. This term is generally applied to the equivalent in money of any kind of property. Thus for the payment of estate duty, a valuation of property of all kinds has to be made. Perhaps the most important and the most difficult valuation is that of land. This has almost invariably to be undertaken whenever land is compulsorily acquired. The difficulties that surround this question were fully considered in the case of Re Lucas and Chesterfield Gas and Water Board, 1909, 1 K. B. 16, in which Lord Justice Moulton in the course of his judgment said (at p. 29) :—

'The principles upon which compensation is assessed when land is taken under compulsory powers are well settled. The owner receives for the lands he gives up their equivalent—that is, that which they are worth to him in money. His property is, therefore, not diminished in amount, but to that extent it is compulsorily changed in form. But the equivalent is estimated on the value to him, and not on the value to the purchaser, and hence it has from the first been recognized as an absolute rule that this value is to be estimated as it stood before the grant of the compulsory powers. The owner is only to receive compensation based upon the market value of his lands as they stood before the scheme was authorized by which they are put to public use. Subject to that he is entitled to be paid the full price for his lands, and any and every element of value which they possess must be taken into consideration in so far as they increase the value to him. At a very early date in the history of this branch of the law there arose what is known as the question of "special adaptability." The phrase is not a happy one, for special adaptability for some purpose or other is the very basis of the market value of all land, except, perhaps, land that in all respects falls below the average. In agricultural land extra fertility, in town lands advantages of site, are true cases of special adaptability for farming or building purposes. These tend so directly to increase both the value and the market price of lands in the hands of a private owner that it has never been doubted that he could urge them in augmentation of the compensation which he was entitled to receive. . . . No element of that which economists term "value in use" can, in my opinion, increase compensation unless it is either a "value in use" to the seller, or a "value in use" to persons other than the proposed purchaser so as to introduce the element of competition as a factor in fixing price.'

See Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts and the Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919, which varies the compensation for land acquired compulsorily under any statute passed either before or after 1919 for public purposes by any local or public authority. Section 2 of the Act provides :—

2. In assessing compensation, an official arbitrator shall act in accordance with the following rules :—

- (1) No allowance shall be made on account of the acquisition being compulsory :
- (2) The value of land shall, subject as hereinafter provided, be taken to be the amount which the land if sold in the open market by a willing seller might be expected to realise : Provided always that the arbitrator shall be entitled to consider all returns and assessments of capital value for taxation made or acquiesced in by the claimant :
- (3) The special suitability or adaptability of the land for any purpose shall not be taken into account if that purpose is a purpose to which it could be applied only in pursuance of statutory powers, or for which there is no market apart from the special needs of a particular purchaser or the requirements of any Government Department or any local or public authority : Provided that any bona fide offer for the purchase of the land made before the passing of this Act which may be brought to the notice of the arbitrator shall be taken into consideration :
- (4) Where the value of the land is increased by reason of the use thereof or of any premises thereon in a manner which could be restrained by any court, or is contrary to law, or is detrimental to the health of the inmates of the premises or to the public health, the amount of that increase shall not be taken into account :
- (5) Where the land is, and but for the compulsory acquisition would continue to be, devoted to a purpose of such a nature that there is no general demand or market for land for that purpose, the compensation may, if the official arbitrator is satisfied that reinstatement in some other place is bona fide intended, be assessed on the basis of the reasonable cost of equivalent reinstatement :

- (6) The provisions of Rule (2) shall not affect the assessment of compensation for disturbance or any other matter not directly based on the value of land.

For the purposes of this section an official arbitrator shall be entitled to be furnished with such returns and assessments as he may require.

The operation of this Act has been restricted under the Housing Acts, 1925 to 1936, and the Small Holdings and Allotments Act, 1926, for the purposes of those Acts.

See VALUE ; and consult Cripps or Browne and Allen on Compensation.

Valuation List. By the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, in England outside the county of London, a list of all the rateable hereditaments in a rating area (and not in a parish) is to be prepared by the rating authority, i.e., the council of every county, borough, or urban and rural district to whom all powers of the overseers of the poor in regard to the levying and collection of rates were transferred by s. 1 of the R. and V. Act, 1925, for the purposes of a general rate. A draft list is drawn up after requiring returns from the owner, occupier or lessee of every hereditament in the area. The draft list is revised by the assessment committee appointed by the rating authority for the area and is then transmitted to the rating authority, by whom it is deposited for public inspection at the office of the authority. Appeals may be made within twenty-five days from the date of deposit, and the lists are quinquennial and conclusive evidence of the value of the hereditaments therein included. In the metropolis, by s. 43 of the Metropolis Valuation Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 67), and amending Acts (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 44, s. 7 (2) ; 19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 17, s. 18 ; and 7 Edw. 7, c. cxi., s. 29), a valuation list (subject as in the Act mentioned) lasts for five years from its approval by the assessment committee, and by s. 45 is conclusive for the purposes of rates (not including water rates) and taxes and property qualifications generally. See RATES.

Valuation Roll. The list, prepared by assessors, which narrates each holding and its assessment (Valuation Roll (Scotland) Order, 5th July, 1929).

Value, a relative term. The value of a thing may refer to a certain standard with which the thing can be measured or compared. The factors of comparison should be capable of precise definition.

The word 'value,' when used without adjunct, always means, in political economy, value in exchange ; or, as it has been called by Adam Smith and his successors, exchangeable value, a phrase which no amount of authority that can be quoted for it can make other than bad English. Mr. De Quincey substitutes the term 'exchange value,' which is unexceptionable.—1 Mill's Pol. Econ. 528, 578.

The word 'value,' it is to be observed, has more than one meaning, and sometimes expresses the utility of some particular object, and sometimes the power of purchasing other goods which the possession of that object conveys. The one may be called 'value in use,' the other 'value in exchange.' The things which have the greatest value in use have frequently little or no value in exchange ; and, on the contrary, those which have the greatest value in exchange have frequently little or no value in use. Nothing is more useful than water, but it will purchase scarce anything ; scarce anything can be had in exchange for it. A diamond, on the contrary, has scarce any value in use, but a very great quantity of other goods may frequently be had in exchange for it.—1 Sm. Wealth of Nat. 37.

By s. 4 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (q.v.), a sale of goods of the value of 10*l.* or upwards (must be in writing, etc.), this enactment being a repetition of s. 17 of the Statute of Frauds as amended by Lord Tenterden's Act (9 Geo. 4, c. 14), s. 7, which substituted 'value' for 'price.'

Valued Policy, a policy of insurance in which the sum at which the subject of the policy is insured is expressed (having been fixed by agreement between the parties), and so the value in case of loss need not (as a general rule) be proved.—See Arnould on Marine Insurance.

Value Received, a phrase generally inserted in bills of exchange, but which is not necessary, since value is implied in every bill, as much as if expressed in totidem verbis.—White v. Ledwick, (1785) 4 Doug. 247.

Valuer, a person whose business is to appraise, or set a value upon property.

Valvasors, or Vidames, an obsolete title of dignity next to a peer.—2 Inst. 667 ; 2 Steph. Com. See VAVASOR.

Vancouver's Island. See 12 & 13 Vict. c. 48 ; 21 & 22 Vict. c. 99, s. 6 ; 29 & 30 Vict. c. 67 (providing for union with British Columbia) ; 33 & 34 Vict. c. 66, and British North America Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 26), confirming the agreement between British Columbia and the Dominion of Canada.

Variance, difference between the statements in a pleading and the evidence adduced in proof thereof. See Stephen on Pleading.

The Courts are now very liberal in permitting variances in proceedings to be amended, especially where parties will suffer no prejudice. See AMENDMENT.

Vassal [fr. vassallo, Ital., a dim. of vassus, low Lat. Wachter refers it to the Gallic gwaz, a servant], one who holds of a superior lord; a subject; a dependant; a tenant or feudatory.—1 Steph. Com.

Vassalage, the state of a vassal; tenure at will; slavery.

Vasseleria, the tenure or holding of a vassal.

Vasto, a writ against tenants for term of life or years committing wastes.—Fitz. N. B. 55.

Vastum, a waste or common lying open to the cattle of all tenants who have a right of commoning.

Vastum forestæ vel bosel, that part of a forest or wood wherein the trees and underwood were so destroyed that it lay, in a manner, waste.—Paroch. Antig. 351.

Vauderle, sorcery; witchcraft; the profession of the Vaudois.—3 Hallam's Mid. Ages, c. 9, pt. 2, p. 386, n.

Vavator. The first name of dignity, next beneath a peer, was anciently that of vidames, vice domini, or valvators: who are mentioned by our ancient lawyers as virī magnæ dignitatis; and Sir Edward Coke speaks highly of them. Yet they are now quite out of use; and our legal antiquaries are not agreed upon even their original or ancient office (1 Bl. Com. 403). And see Camden's Brit.; Reeves, c. 5, p. 26.

Vavatory (vavasoria), the lands that a vavator held.—Bract. lib. 2.

Veal-money. The tenants of the manor of Bradford, in the county of Wilts, paid a yearly rent by this name to their lord, in lieu of veal paid formerly in kind.—Bract.

Veetigal judiclarium, fines paid to the Crown to defray the expenses of maintaining courts of justice.—3 Salk. 33.

Veetigal origine ipsâ, jus Cæsarium et regum patrimoniale est. Dav. 12.—(Tribute, in its origin, is the patrimonial right of emperors and kings.)

Vejours [visores, Lat.], persons sent by a Court to take a view of any place in question, for the better decision of the right thereto: also persons appointed to view the result of an offence.—O. N. B. 112.

Velindre, the Welsh word for vill.—4 T. R. 552, note (b).

Veltraria, the office of dog-leader or coursier.

Veltrarius [fr. welter, Germ.], one who leads greyhounds.—Blount.

Venaria, beasts caught in the woods by hunting.

Venatio, hunting.

Vendee, one to whom anything is sold.

Vendition, sale, the act of selling.

Venditioni exponas, a judicial writ addressed to the sheriff, commanding him to expose to sale goods which he has already taken into his hands, to satisfy a judgment-creditor.—Reg. Judic. 33. After delivery of this writ the sheriff is bound to sell the goods, and have the money in Court on the return day of the writ.—3 Steph. Com.

By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XLIII., r. 2, this writ may be sued out where it appears upon the return of a fi. fa. that the sheriff has seized goods but not sold them.

Vendor, one who sells anything.

Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 78), as amended by the Land Transfer Act, 1875, was repealed by the Law of Property Act, 1925. It provided (inter alia) that in the completion of any contract of sale of land made after the 31st December, 1874, and subject to any stipulation to the contrary in the contract, forty years was to be substituted for sixty years as the period of commencement of title which a purchaser may require, saving those cases in which an earlier title than sixty years might formerly have been required (s. 1); replaced with the substitution of thirty years for forty by s. 44 (1), L. P. Act, 1925. See ABSTRACT.

The Act also provided that documents twenty years old should be primâ facie proof of facts stated in them (s. 2). This has been replaced by s. 45 (6), L. P. Act, 1925.

Vendor and Purchaser Summons. A further innovation of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, s. 9, replaced and extended by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 49, enables any vendor or purchaser or upon a contract for exchange of any interest in land to apply in a summary way in respect of any requisitions or objections or claim for compensation or any other question arising out of or connected with the contract (not affecting the existence or validity), and the Court may make any order that to it may seem just, including costs. See DEPOSIT; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE; and R. S. C. Ord. LV., r. 14A; ORIGINATING SUMMONS.

Vendor's Lien for Unpaid Purchase Money.

Where a vendor of land conveys, without more, although the consideration is expressed to be paid both in the body of the deed and by a receipt endorsed on the back of it, still if the money or part of it was not in fact paid, a lien arises as between the vendor and the purchaser, and persons claiming as volunteers, for so much of the purchase money as remains unpaid. The mere giving of security will not prevent the lien arising, unless it appears that the security was to be substituted for the lien. Similarly a purchaser will have a lien for prematurely paid purchase money. See Macbeth v. Symmons, (1808) 15 Ves. 329; 1 W. & T. L. C.

If the lien arose before 1926 and was not transferred after 1925, a purchaser for value of the legal estate in the land from the original purchaser will take it subject to the lien if he had notice of it, and in all cases where a pre-1926 lien has been transferred or a lien has arisen since 1925, it must be registered under the Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 10, or it will be void against a purchaser, even if he has actual notice. See LAND CHARGES.

Vendue Master, an auctioneer.

Venella, a narrow or straight way.—Dugd. Mon. i. 488.

Venereal Disease. The Venereal Disease Act, 1917, prohibits the treatment of venereal disease otherwise than by a duly qualified medical practitioner. Advertisement of cures, treatment, etc., is prohibited except when made to duly qualified medical practitioners or chemists or by public authorities. Venereal disease is defined as meaning syphilis, gonorrhoea, or soft chancre, and see INFECTIOUS DISEASES; Public Health Acts, 1875-1936; Local Government Acts, 1929 and 1933. See also SLANDER and CRUELTY.

Venia, a kneeling or low prostration on the ground by penitents; pardon.

Venia ætatis, a privilege granted by a prince or sovereign, in virtue of which a person is entitled to act, sui juris, as if he were of full age.—Story's Conflict of Laws, 74.

Venire facilius incentivum est delinquendi.

3 Inst. 236.—(Facility of pardon is an incentive to crime.)

Venire facias, a judicial writ awarded to the sheriff to summon a jury for the trial of a cause, but abolished by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 104. It is the first process in out-lawry, when a person charged with misdemeanour absconds.—4 Steph. Com.

Venire facias de novo, a second writ to summon another jury for a new trial.

The venire de novo was the Old Common Law method of proceeding to a new trial, and differed materially from granting a new trial, inasmuch as it was awarded from some defect appearing upon the face of the record, while a new trial was granted for matter entirely extrinsic. Where a verdict could have been amended, a venire de novo was never awarded. If awarded, the party succeeding at the second trial was not entitled to the costs of the first. It has since been superseded by a trial de novo. The Court of Criminal Appeal can order a writ of venire de novo to issue (R. v. Crand., 1921, 2 A. C. 299, and R. v. Dennis, 40 T. L. R. 420). See also NEW TRIAL.

Venire facias tot matronas, a writ to summon a jury of matrons to execute the writ of venire inspiciendo.

Venter, womb. As to the cases in which a child will be held to be born in a testator's lifetime because it was at that time en ventre sa mère, see Villar v. Gilbey, 1907, A. C. 139; and see Elliot v. Joicey, 1935, A. C. 209; and Law Quarterly Review, Vol. 52, p. 1.

Ventre inspiciendo. See DE VENTRE INSPICIENDO.

Venue [fr. visne, vicinetum, visnetum, Lat.], the place whence a jury are to come for trial of causes. See Co. Litt. 125 a, and Hargrave's note (2).

Local actions must, before the Jud. Act, have been brought in the county in which the cause of action arose; but transitory actions in any county at the plaintiff's option; and no venue could be changed without a special order of the Court or a judge, unless by consent of the parties.—R. H. T. 1853, r. 18.

It is, however, provided by R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXVI., r. 10, that there shall be no local venue for the trial of any action, except where otherwise provided by statute, but in every action in every Division the place of trial shall be fixed by the Court or a judge; and r. 1, the order made on the summons for directions, fixes the place of trial, but this can be subsequently altered for sufficient cause.

Very numerous statutes have from time to time provided that any actions for anything done in pursuance of them should be brought in the county where the cause of action arose; but the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (see PUBLIC AUTHORITIES), has repealed, in any proceeding to which that Act applies, so much of any public general Act as enacts that the proceeding is to be commenced in any particular place.

As to County Courts, see s. 99 of the County Courts Act, 1934, and Rules of Procedure made thereunder.

In criminal cases, the rule of the Common Law is that the venue shall be co-extensive with the jurisdiction of the Court.

By the Judicature Act, 1875, s. 23 (4) (replaced by Jud. Act, 1925, s. 72 (1) (g)). the King may by Order in Council from time to time provide for the regulation, so far as may be necessary for carrying into effect any order made under the other parts of that section, of the venue in all cases, civil and criminal, triable on any circuit or elsewhere.

Veray, true.

Verba accipienda sunt secundum subjectam materiam. 6 Rep. 62. See SECUNDUM SUBJECTAM MATERIAM.

Verba aliquid operari debent—debent intelligi ut aliquid operentur. 8 Rep. 94.—(Words ought to have some operation—they ought to be interpreted in such a way as to have some operation.)

Verba chartarum fortius accipiuntur contra proferentem. Co. Litt. 36; Bac. Max. Reg. 3; Broom's Max.—(The words of deeds are received more strongly against the grantor.) Bacon styles this 'a rule drawn out of the depth of reason'; but in 1877, Jessel, M.R., in Taylor v. St. Helen's Corporation, 6 Ch. D. at p. 280, citing three House of Lords cases, 'did not see how it could be considered as having any force at the present day.' The cases cited by Jessel, M.R., however, all turned upon the construction of wills; the maxim has been recognized in the House of Lords since 1877 (see Birrell v. Dryer, (1884) 9 App. Cas. 345); and it is submitted that the dictum of Jessel, M.R., is incorrect.

Verba de futuro. See PER VERBA, etc.

Verba de præsentī. See PER VERBA, etc.

Verba generalia restringuntur ad habilitatem rei vel aptitudinem personæ. Bacon.—(General words must be narrowed to the nature of the subject or the aptitude of the person.)

Verba illata in esse videntur.—(Words referred to are considered to be incorporated.) See INCORPORATION BY REFERENCE.

Verba ita sunt intelligenda ut res magis valeat quam pereat. Bacon.—(Words are to be so understood as that the subject-matter may be rather preserved than destroyed.)

Verbal Note, a memorandum or note, in diplomacy, not signed, sent when an affair has continued a long time without any reply, in order to avoid the appearance of an urgency which, perhaps, is not required; and, on the other hand, to guard against the supposition that it is forgotten, or that there is an intention of not prosecuting it any further.

Verderer, an officer in the royal forest, whose office is properly to look to the vert, and see it well maintained; and he is sworn to keep the assize of the forest, and view, receive and enrol the attachments, and presentments of trespasses of vert and venison, etc.—Manw. 332.

Verdict [fr. vere dictum, Lat.], the determination of a jury declared to a judge.

The verdict is either general or special. A general verdict is given, videlicet voce, by the jury, thus, 'We find for the plaintiff, damages —,' or, if for the defendant, then, 'We find for the defendant.' In criminal cases a general verdict is either Guilty, or Not Guilty. If there be several issues, the verdict may be distributed, some issues being found for the plaintiff and others for the defendant. A verdict must comprehend the whole issues submitted to a jury in the particular cause, otherwise the judgment founded upon it may be reversed. See SPECIAL VERDICT; PERVERSE VERDICT.

Verge or Virge, the compass of the King's Court, which bounds the jurisdiction of the lord steward of the household; it seems to have been twelve miles about.—Britt. 68. A quantity of land from fifteen to thirty acres.—28 Edw. 1. Also, a stick, or rod, whereby one is admitted tenant to a copyhold estate.—O. N. B. 17. Hence, copyholders are sometimes called 'tenants by the verge.'

Vergelt, the Saxon fine for a crime. See WERGILD.

Vergers [portatores virgæ, Lat.; bédeaux d'église, Fr.], those who carry white wands before the judges, or before church dignitaries.—Fleta, l. 2, c. 38.

Verification, the proper form of concluding (under the old system of pleading) any pleading after the declaration alleging new matter. It was made in the words, 'And this he is ready to verify. It was rendered unnecessary by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 67.

Verna, a slave born in his master's house.—Civ. Law.

Versus [Lat., abbrev. v. (against).

Vert [fr. verd, Fr.; viridis, Lat.], otherwise called greenhue, everything that bears a green leaf within a forest that may cover a deer; but especially great and thick coverts. 'Vert, venison and inclosure' were three of the requisites of an ancient legal park; see Pease v. Courtney, 1904, 2 Ch. 509, per Swinfen Eady, J.

Manwood (part 2, p. 33) divides vert into overt-vert and nether-vert—the overt-vert is that which is termed haut-boys, and nether-vert, sub-boys—and into special vert, which is all trees growing within the forest that bear fruit to feed deer, because the destroying of it is more grievously punished than the destroying of any other vert. See 3 Steph. Com. And see per Bacon, V.-C., in Earl De la Warr v. Miles, (1881) 17 Ch. D. at p. 570.

Also that power which a man has, by royal grant, to cut green-wood in a forest.

Also green colour, called Venus in the arms of princes, and Emerald in those of peers, and expressed in engravings by lines in bend.—Heraldic term.

Very Lord and Very Tenant [verus dominus et verus tenens, Lat.], they that are immediate lord and tenant one to another.—Bro. Abr.

Vest. (1) Either to place in possession; to make possessor of; or, to give an absolute interest in property when a named period or event occurs. (2) (of a right or interest) Its coming into the possession of any one; enuring to the benefit of any one.

Vesta, the crop on the ground.

Vested In Interest, a legal term applied to a present fixed right of future enjoyment, as reversions, vested remainders, such executory devises, future uses, conditional limitations, and other future interests, the present right of which is not referred to, or made to depend on, a period or event that is uncertain, although the period of enjoyment may be uncertain or conditional. See following titles and CONTINGENT LEGACY; CONTINGENT REMAINDER.

Vested In Possession, a legal term applied to a right of present enjoyment actually existing.

Vested Legacy. See LEGACY.

Vested Remainder, an expectant estate, which is limited or transmitted to a person who is capable of receiving the possession, should the particular estate happen to determine: as a limitation to A. for life, remainder to B. and his heirs; here, as B. is in existence he is capable (or his heirs, if he die) of taking the possession whenever A.'s death may occur. A vested estate may take effect though the preceding estate be defeated, as when an infant makes a lease for life with a remainder over, and on majority he disagrees to the estate for life, but not with the remainder; the remainder is good, having been duly vested by a good title. See Fearne, C. R. 308; 1 Steph. Com.

The person who is entitled to a vested remainder having a present vested right of future enjoyment, i.e., an estate in presenti, to take effect in possession and permanency of the profits in futuro, can transfer, alien, and charge it much in the same manner as an estate in possession.—2 Cru. Dig. 204.

Interests in remainder can now only take effect as equitable interests: see Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 1; and Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 1.

Vesting Assent, defined by s. 117 (1) (xxx.), Settled Land Act, 1925, to mean the instrument whereby a personal representative after the death of a tenant for life or statutory owner or the survivor of two or more tenants for life or statutory owners vests settled land in a person entitled as tenant for life or statutory owner. For the contents, see s. 8 and 1st Sched. (ibid.), and VESTING DEED and VESTING INSTRUMENT.

The term 'vesting assent' should be distinguished from an assent by personal representatives (see ASSENT), which vests the property in a person who is not tenant for life or statutory owner (see Bridgett and Hayes' Contract, 1928, Ch. 163, and next title).

Vesting Instrument, a deed, order of Court, or assent, constituting the evidence under the Settled Land Act, 1925, of the title of a tenant for life or statutory owner to the legal estate in settled property as estate owner thereof. This evidence is essential for the settlement of a legal estate in land otherwise than by way of trust for sale (Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 4). The trusts are (after 1925) to be declared by a separate instrument called the Trust Instrument (see that title). Sect. 5 of the Act provides that the principal vesting deed must state:—

(a) a description of the settled land;

(b) that the settled land is vested in the person or persons to or in whom it is conveyed or declared to be vested upon the trusts from time to time affecting the settled land;

(c) the names of the trustees of the settlement;

(d) any powers which are additional or larger than the statutory powers and are exercisable as statutory powers under the Act;

(e) the name of the person entitled under the trust instrument to appoint new trustees of the settlement.

References are permitted to any existing vesting instrument, but not as a rule to a trust instrument, except e.g., to a person taking title from a tenant for life under the first vesting instrument, etc. (see S. L. Act, 1925, s. 110, and see s. 5 (2)). See VESTING ASSENT; TRUST INSTRUMENT.

Vesting Order. The Court of Chancery had, and the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice now has, the power of making orders passing the legal estate in property without a conveyance. Also commissioners appointed by several modern statutes have power, by vesting order, to transfer legal estates without the necessity of a deed of transfer, e.g., Charity Commissioners, or Board of Education.

Vesting Orders may be made under the Law of Property Act, 1925, see s. 9 and passim; Trustee Act, 1925, ss. 44 et seq.; Settled Land Act, 1925, ss. 12 and 16; Administration of Estates Act, 1925, ss. 38 and 43. As to Vesting Orders in Lunacy, see Lunacy Act, 1890, ss. 135-140; and Trustee Act, 1925, s. 54. Consult Seton on Judgments; Dan. Ch. Pr.

Vestments. See ORNAMENTS RUBRIC.

Vestry, or Vestiary, a place or room adjoining to a church, where the vestments of the minister are kept; also, a parochial assembly commonly convened in the vestry, to transact the parish business. By custom in some parishes, and by the (adoptive) Vestries Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 60), in others, a select number of parishioners was chosen yearly to manage the concerns of the parish for that year. They were called a Select Vestry.

The non-ecclesiastical functions of vestries are now exercised by borough and urban district councils under orders of the Ministry of Health: see Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), and Local Govt. Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), and in rural parishes by the parish council or meeting (ibid.). As to the ecclesiastical functions in England (election of churchwardens), see Parochial Church Councils (Powers) Measure, 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, No. 1), s. 13. This measure transferred all such ecclesiastical functions, except ecclesiastical charities, to parochial church councils.

For the regulations for meetings and right to be present and vote, see the Vestries Acts, 1818 to 1853, and the Local Government Act, 1933, and see also RATES. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Vestry'; Steer's Parish Law; and Prideaux's Law of Churchwardens.

In the Metropolis, the vestries were elected under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, until they were superseded by the Councils of the Metropolitan Boroughs under the London Government Act, 1899.

Vestry Cess, a rate levied in Ireland for parochial purposes, abolished by 27 Vict. c. 17.

Vestry Clerk, an officer appointed to attend vestries, and take an account of their proceedings, etc. See the Vestries Act, 1850, ss. 6-8, and RATES.

Vestura, a crop of grass or corn.—Cowel. Also a garment, metaphorically applied to a possession or seisin.

Vetera Statuta, the ancient statutes commencing with Magna Charta, and ending with those of Edward II., including also some which, because it is doubtful to which of the three reigns of Henry III., Edward I., or Edward II. to assign them, are said to be incerti temporis.—2 Reeves, c. 8, p. 85.

Veterinary Surgeon [fr. veterinarius, concerned with veterinum, a beast of burden]. A person who treats the illnesses, etc., of animals. A Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons was incorporated in 1844, and supplemental charters were granted thereto in 1876 and 1879. The charter of 1876 directed a register of veterinary surgeons to be kept. The Veterinary Surgeons Act, 1881, regulates the correction of the register, enacts that examinations shall be held in accordance with the charters, and provides that no person not qualified by registration, etc., may recover in any court any charge for performing any veterinary operation, or for giving any veterinary advice, and imposes penalties for false representation as to membership of the college, and prohibits unregistered practitioners from using the title of veterinary surgeon or veterinary practitioner. The college has disciplinary powers over its members, which have been extended to holders of the veterinary certificate of the Highland and Agricultural Society who received the certificate before the passing of the Act of 1881 and were allowed to practise by that Act (Veterinary Surgeons Amendment Act, 1900). The Act of 1881 allowed persons who had been practising continuously for not less than five years before the passing of the Act to be placed on a separate register under the heading 'Existing Practitioners.' The Veterinary Surgeons Act (1881) Amendment Act, 1920, extends the disciplinary powers of the college to these persons, and also provides that companies and societies registered under the Companies Acts or the Industrial and Provident Societies Acts shall be liable to penalties under the Act of 1881 in the same way as individuals. With exception of the above two classes of persons, all veterinary surgeons must be persons qualified in accordance with examination prescribed by the college, and see the Veterinary Surgeons (Irish Free State Agreement) Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 10), preserving, subject to the Act, the functions of the Royal Veterinary College in respect of Southern Ireland. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Veterinary Surgeons.'

As to avoidance of a sale of a horse on a certificate of a veterinary surgeon given after offer or acceptance of a bribe from the seller, see BRIBE.

As to fees for notifying diseases of animals and other matters, see the Diseases of Animals Act, 1909, and Acts referred to sub tit. ANIMALS.

Vetitum namium, or Repetitum namium, a second or reciprocal distress, in lieu of the first, which has been eloiigned.

Veto, a prohibition, or the right of forbidding; especially applied to the royal power of refusing assent to a Bill in Parliament passed by the two Houses: 'Le Roy' or 'La Reyne' s'avisera. See 2 Steph. Com.

As to the veto by Archbishops and Bishops in regard to proceedings and inquiries relating to certain offences, see the Church Discipline Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86), and Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 85).

Vexata quæstio [Lat.], an undetermined point, which has been often discussed.

Vexatious Action. The High Court has an inherent power to stay any action brought merely for the sake of annoyance or oppression (see Lawrance v. Norreys, (1890) 15 App. Cas. 210; Haggard v. Pelicier Frères, 1892, A. C. 61); see also R. S. C. Ord. XXV., r. 4; and the Judic. Act, 1925, s. 5, replacing the Vexatious Actions Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 51), gives special power to the Court if satisfied, on the application of the Attorney-General, that any person has habitually and persistently instituted vexatious proceedings in any court to order that no proceedings shall be instituted by that person in any court without the leave of the Court or some judge thereof. See also the Vexatious Actions (Scotland) Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 35). An order dismissing an action as frivolous and vexatious is an interlocutory order (Re Page, 1910, 1 Ch. 489).

Vexatious Indictments. In order to prevent these, it was provided, by the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 17) (repealed), as amended by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, ss. 1, 2 (repealed), that no bill of indictment for perjury, conspiracy, indecent assault, or certain other misdemeanours therein named, should be presented to a grand jury, unless the prosecutor had been bound over by recognizance to prosecute, or unless the person accused had been committed to or detained in custody, or unless the indictment should be preferred with the written consent of the Attorney-General. The Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1933 (which abolished Grand Juries and amended the law as to presentment of indictments), repealed the whole of the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859, and s. 1 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867, but not so as to affect any enactment restricting the right to prosecute in particular classes of cases.

Via, the right to use a way for any purpose.—Cum. C. L. 83; also, by way of, or through, a given point to a destination.

Viability, a capability of living after birth; extra-uterine life.

Via servitus (servitude of way), a right of way over another's land.

Via Regia, the highway or common road, called the king's way, because under his protection; it was sometimes called via militaris.—Bract. l. 4.

Viaticum. In the Roman Catholic Church, the communion administered to the dying.

Vibration. This may amount to a nuisance, but regard must be had to the character of the locality (Polsue, etc., Ltd. v. Rushmer, 1907, A. C. 121), and the aggrieved person is usually entitled to an injunction as well as damages (Shelfer v. City of London Electric Lighting Co., 1895, 1 Ch. 287).

Vicar, one who performs the functions of another; a substitute. Also, the incumbent of an appropriated or impropriated benefice, as distinguished from the incumbent of a non-impropriated benefice, who is called a rector. See RECTOR, and 31 & 32 Vict. c. 117, s. 2.

Vicarage, (1) the benefice of a vicar; (2) his house. See 31 & 32 Vict. c. 117, s. 2.

Vicar-General, an ecclesiastical officer who assists the archbishop in the discharge of his office.

Vicarial Tithes, petty or small tithes payable to the vicar.—2 Steph. Com.

Vicario, etc., an ancient writ for a spiritual person imprisoned, upon forfeiture of a recognizance, etc.—Reg. Brev. 147.

Vicarious Responsibility. A principal is liable for acts of his agent within the scope of his mandate. If A., an innocent principal, by B. his agent to report, misleads C., his selling agent, and C., relying on the report, innocently misleads the buyer, the latter may recover damages against the principal for deceit if B.'s report was reckless and untrue (London County Freehold, etc. Properties, Ltd. v. Berkeley Property, etc. Co. Ltd., 155 L. T. 190). The knowledge of the principal and his agent is one (Pearson v. Dublin Corporation, 1907, A. C. 351); although the functions may have been divided and one only of the constituents has been guilty, the mind, and with it the guilt, if any, and the act are collectively the principal's, and his the responsibility. Qui facit per alium facit per se.

Vicarius non habet vicarium.—(A delegate cannot have a delegate.) See DEPUTY.

Vice and Immorality, Proclamation against, made until its abrogation by Order in Council of June 26th, 1884, at the opening of Assizes and Quarter Sessions. First issued by William III. in 1697, and issued in a new form in 1860. See Law Times Newspaper for April 20th, 1901.

Vice-Admiral, an under-admiral at sea, or admiral on the coasts: a naval officer of a rank which is next to Admiral.

Vice-Admiralty Courts, tribunals established in his Majesty's possessions beyond the seas with jurisdiction over maritime causes, including those relating to prize. See 3 Steph. Com.

The Vice-Admiralty Courts Act, 1863 (26 Vict. c. 24), repealed 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 51, and other Acts. For the matters in respect of which the Vice-Admiralty Courts should have jurisdiction, see ss. 10, 11 of the 1863 Act.

The above Act, with other cognate enactments, is repealed by the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 27), by which (see s. 17) Vice-Admiralty Courts are abolished, and superseded (see s. 2) by Colonial Courts with unlimited jurisdiction in Admiralty, subject to an appeal (see s. 6) to the Sovereign in Council.

The Act has been amended in regard to the self-governing Dominions by the Statute of Westminster (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 4), ss. 1, 6 and 11.

Vice-Chamberlain, a great officer next under the Lord Chamberlain, who, in his absence, has the rule and control of all officers appertaining to that part of the royal household which is called the chamber above stairs.

Vice-Chancellor [fr. vice-cancellarius, Lat.], a sub-chancellor.

Vice-Chancellors in Equity. The first Vice-Chancellor (Sir Thomas Plumer) was appointed by 53 Geo. 3, c. 24, and two more by 5 Vict. c. 5, s. 19. One of them was at one time called Vice-Chancellor of England, the last who bore that title being Sir Lancelot Shadwell. Each Vice-Chancellor sat separately from the Lord Chancellor and lords justices, to whom an appeal lay from his decisions. See 14 & 15 Vict. c. 4, and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, ss. 52-58. They became judges of the High Court of Justice (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 5), retaining their titles, but it was enacted that on the death or retirement of any one of them his successor should be styled a judge of the High Court (ibid.). Vice-Chancellor Bacon (1870 to 1886) was the last of them. For a complete list of the Equity judges since 1660, see Seton on Judgments. There is also a Vice-Chancellor of the County Palatine of Lancaster.

Vice-comes, a viscount; a sheriff.

Vicecomes dicitur quod vicem comitis suppleat. Co. Litt. 168 a.—(Vicecomes (sheriff) is so called because he supplies the place of the comes (earl).)

Vice-comes non misit breve [Lat.] (the sheriff has not sent the writ). This continuance is abolished by r. 31, H. T. 1853.

Vice-Constable of England, an ancient officer in the time of Edward the Fourth.

Vice-Consul, a consular officer, which expression by the Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 12 (20), includes consul-general, consul, vice-consul, and any person for the time authorized to discharge their duties, and also consular-agent; see CONSUL; a sheriff.

Vice-dominus, a sheriff.—Inglulphus.

Vice-dominus episcopi, the vicar-general or commissary of a bishop.—Blount.

Vice-gerent, a deputy or lieutenant.

Vice-Marshal, an officer who was appointed to assist the Earl Marshal.

Viceroy, the sovereign's lord-lieutenant over a kingdom. See INDIA.

Vice-Treasurer. See UNDER-TREASURER.

Vicinage [fr. voisinage, Fr.], neighbourhood, or near dwelling; places adjoining.

As to common because of vicinage, see 1 Steph. Com.

Vicini viciniora præsumentur seire. 4 Inst. 173.—(Persons living in the neighbourhood are presumed to know the neighbourhood.)

Vicivus Intromission, a meddling with the movables of a deceased, without confirmation or probate of his will, or other title.—Scots term.

Vicls et venellis mundandis, an ancient writ against the mayor or bailiff of a town, etc., for the clean sweeping of the streets and lanes.—Reg. Brev. 267.

Vicountiel, or Vicontiel, anything that belongs to the sheriffs, as vicontiel writs, i.e. such as are triable in the sheriff's court. As to vicontiel rents, see 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 99, ss. 12, 13, which places them under the management of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests.

Vicountiel Jurisdiction, that jurisdiction which belongs to the officers of a county, as sheriffs, commoners, etc.

Victoria Colony. Separated from New South Wales by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 59; see also 18 & 19 Vict. c. 55, 56; and 22 & 23 Vict. c. 12. Included as a State in the Union of States (New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, Queensland, Tasmania and Western Australia) by the Commonwealth of Australia Constitution Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 12). See AUSTRALIA.

Victoria Park. See 4 & 5 Vict. c. 27; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 20; 14 & 15 Vict. c. 46; 35 & 36 Vict. c. 53; now managed by the London County Council (see 50 & 51 Vict. c. 34); and see PARK.

Vicuailling Houses. See PUBLIC-HOUSES.

Vidame. See VAVASOR.

Vide [Lat., see], a word of reference; vide ante, or vide supra, refers to a previous passage; vide post, or vide infra, to a subsequent passage in a book.

Videloet (to wit), a word used in pleading to precede the specification of particulars which need not be proved. See SCILICET.

Vidimus, an inspeximus, which see.—Barr. on Stat. 5.

Viduitatis professio, the making a solemn profession to live a sole and chaste woman.

Viduity, widowhood.

Vi et armis [Lat.] (with force and arms), words formerly inserted in pleadings to characterize a trespass, but directed to be omitted by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 49.

View, an inspection of property in controversy, or of a place where a crime has been committed, by the jury previously to the trial. See C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 114; H. T. 1853, rr. 48, 49; R. S. C. 1883, Ord. L., rr. 3-5; Ann. Prac.

View of Frankpledge. See LEET.

Vitlage, vivum vadum, which see.

Vigil, the eve or next day before any solemn feast.

Vigilantibus non dormientibus jura subveniunt. Wing. 692.—(Laws come to the assistance of the vigilant, not of the sleepy.) See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Vi laica removendâ, a writ that lies where two persons contend for a church, and one of them enters into it with a great number of laymen, and holds out the other vi et armis; and he that is holden out shall have this writ addressed to the sheriff, that he remove the lay force; but the sheriff ought not to remove the incumbent out of the church, whether he is there by right or wrong, but only the force.—Fitz. N. B. 54.

Vill, or Village, a manor; a parish; the out-part of a parish.—1 Steph. Com. A town or township, the simplest form of social organization; see Stubbs's Const. History of England, vol. i. p. 82; Williams on Rights of Common, pp. 39 et seq.; 1 Bl. Com. 115.

The following is the difference between a mansion, a village, and a manor, viz.: a mansion may be of one or more houses, but it must be of one dwelling-house, and none near to it, for if other houses are contiguous, it is a village; and a manor may consist of several villages, or one alone.—Fleta, l. 6, c. 51.

Villa est ex pluribus mansionibus vicinata et collata ex pluribus vicinis. Et sub appellatione villarum continentur burgi et civitates. Co. Litt. 115 b.—(A vill is a neighbourhood of many mansions, a collection of many neighbours. And under the term villis, boroughs and cities are contained.)

Villain, or Villein [fr. vilis, Lat.], a man of base or servile condition; a bondman or servant; one who held by a base service.—1 Hallam's Mid. Ages, ch. 2, pt. 2, p. 439; and 1 Steph. Com.

Villanis regis subtractis reducendis, a writ that lay for the bringing back of the king's bondmen that had been carried away by others out of his manors whereto they belonged.—Reg. Brev. 87.

Villa regia, a manor held by the Crown.

Villein in Gross, one annexed to the person of the lord, and transferable by deed from one owner to another.—1 Steph. Com.; 2 Br. & Had. Com. 183.

Villein Regardant, one annexed to the manor or land.—1 Steph. Com.

Villein Services, base, but certain and determined services.—1 Steph. Com.

Villein socage, a holding of the king; a privileged sort of villenage.—1 Steph. Com.

Villenage, a base tenure.

There are two sorts:—1st, pure, where a man holds upon terms of doing whatsoever is commanded of him; and 2nd, privileged, otherwise called villein socage, which see. See also TENURE; 1 Steph. Com.

Villinous Judgment [villanum iudicium, Lat.], a judgment which deprived one of his libera lex, whereby he was discredited and disabled as a juror or witness; forfeited his goods and chattels, and lands for life; wasted the lands, razed the houses, rooted up the trees, and committed his body to prison. It has long become obsolete.—4 Bl. Com. 136; 4 Steph. Com.; and 4 Br. & Had. Com. 153.

Vim vi repellere licet, modo fiat moderamine inculpatæ tutelæ; non ad sumendam vindictam, sed ad propulsandam injuriam. Co. Litt. 162.—(It is lawful to repel force by force, so as it be done with the moderation of blameless defence; not to take revenge, but to repel injury.)

Vinagium [tributum a vino, Lat.], a payment of a certain quantity of wine instead of rent for a vineyard.—Dugd. Mon. t. 2, 980.

Vinculo matrimonii, Divorce à. See À VINCULO MATRIMONII AND DIVORCE.

Vindex, a defender.—Civ. Law.

Vindicatio, a real action claiming property for its owner.—Civ. Law.

Vindicatory Parts of Laws, the sanction of the laws, whereby it is signified what evil or penalty shall be incurred by such as commit any public wrongs, and transgress or neglect their duty.—1 Steph. Com., and 1 Br. & Had. Com. 50, 51.

Vindictive Damages, damages given on the principle of punishing the defendant, over and above compensating the plaintiff (recognized by Bowen, L.J., in Whitham v. Kershaw, (1886) 16 Q. B. D. 613—where, however, these damages were not, and could not have been, given).

Viol [old law, Fr.], rape.—Barr. on Stat. 139.

Violation of Safe Conducts, an offence against the law of nations.—4 Steph. Com.

Violation of Women. See RAPE.

Violent Profits. Mesne profits in Scotland. 'They are so called because due on the tenant's forcible or unwarrantable detaining the possession after he ought to have removed.'—Erskine 2, 6, 54; and Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Vir et uxor sunt quasi unica persona, etc. Co. Litt. 112.—(Man and wife are, as it were, one person, etc.)<sup>1</sup> Consequently if lands be given to A. and B. (husband and wife) and C., a third person, and their heirs, A. and B. being one person take a moiety only of the rents and profits, with a power to dispose only of one-half of the inheritance; and C., the third person, will take the other half as joint tenant with them (Williams on Real Property). This rule was not altered by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (Re March, (1884) 27 Ch. D. 166; Re Jupp, (1888) 39 Ch. D. 148), but any indication of an intention that husband and wife are to take separately would defeat the application of the doctrine: see Dias v. De Livera, (1879) 5 App. Cas. 135; Re Jeffery, 1914, 1 Ch. 375; and now, by s. 37 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, a husband and wife shall, for all purposes of acquisition of any property, under a disposition made after 1925, be treated as two persons. See also ENTIRETIES, TENANCY BY.

Virga, a rod or ensign of office.—Cowd.

Virgate, a yard-land.

Virge, Tenant by, a species of copyholder who holds by the verge or rod.

Virgo intacta, an unblemished virgin.

Viridario eligendo, a writ for the choice of a verdere in the forest.—Reg. Brev. 177.

Virilia, the privy members of a man, to cut off which was felony by the Common Law, though the party consented to it.—Bract. l. 3, 144.

Vir militans Deo non implicetur secularibus negotiis. Co. Litt. 70 b.—(A man fighting for God must not be involved in secular business.)

Virtute cujus. This was the clause in a pleading justifying an entry upon land, by which the party alleged that it was in virtue of an order from one entitled that he entered.

Vis [Lat.], any kind of force, violence, or disturbance to person or property. It was a vis armata, i.e. vis cum armis, or vis simplex, i.e. vis sine armis.—1 Reeves, c. 6, p. 322.

Visa, a register; the authentication of a passport by a foreign authority.

Viscount, or Viscount [fr. vicecomes, Lat.], an arbitrary title of honour, without any office pertaining to it, created by Henry VI.—2 Inst. 5. See Barr. on Stat. 409. A peer of the fourth order, between earl and baron.—2 Steph. Com.

Visit and Search. A right, claimed and exercised by belligerents, to stop, visit and search neutral merchant vessels on the high seas and territorial waters, and confiscate contrabrand (see that title and The Pellworm, 1918, A. C. 292). As to the effect of convoy under neutral men-of-war, see Lawrence, Int. Law, referring to Dupuis, La Guerre Maritime et les Doctrines Anglaises, pars. 244–248.

Visitation, judicial visit or perambulation; the periodical visit of a bishop or archdeacon to his clergy at the principal church of the diocese or archdeaconry, when he delivers a hortatory address called a 'charge.'

Visitation Books of Heralds, compilations, when progresses were solemnly and regularly made into every part of the kingdom, to inquire into the state of families, to register marriages and descents, which were verified to the heralds upon oath; they are allowed to be good evidence of pedigree.—3 Steph. Com. See Hubback on Succession, p. 538.

Visitor, an inspector of, incidental to and necessary for all eleemosynary, many ecclesiastical and other corporations, endowed and other colleges, schools, hospitals and institutions; also of a college, corporation or hospital (see Halsb. L. E. (Hailsham Edn.), vol. iv., tit. 'Charities'; and Cathedrals Measure, 1931 (21 & 22 Geo. 5, No. 7)). The Court of Chancery has exercised the right of visitation on behalf of the Crown, in whom the right (see 25 Hen. 8, c. 21 and 1 Eliz. c. 1, s. 2) of visitation and inspection lies, in default of special visitors. Under the Lunacy Act, 1890, Parts VI. and VII., ss. 163 to 206, Chancery visitors of persons of unsound mind, so found by inquisition, appointed by the Lord Chancellor, visiting committees under the regulations of a mental hospital, visitors appointed by justices, and visiting commissioners have special powers and duties to inspect persons, treatment, documents and places in connection with persons of unsound mind. See also IDIOT and PERSON OF UNSOUND MIND.

As to prisons, see 40 & 41 Vict. c. 21; asylums, see Lunacy Act, 1890.

Any jurisdiction exercised by the Lord Chancellor in right or on behalf of his Majesty as visitor of any college, or of any charitable or other foundation, is not transferred to the High Court of Justice (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 17) (replaced by Jud. Act, 1925, s. 19 (5)).

Visitor of Manners, the regarder's office in the forest.—Mansv., i. 195.

Via legibus est inimica. 3 Inst. 176.—(Violence is inimical to the laws.)

Vis Major, insuperable accident, irresistible force. See ACT OF GOD.

Visne [visnetum, Lat.], a neighbourhood.

Visus, view or inspection.

Vitiligate, to litigate cavillously.

Vitium clerici nocere non debet. Jenk. Cent. 23. (A clerical error ought not to hurt.) See CLERICAL ERROR.

Viva pecunia [Lat.], cattle which obtained this name from being received during the Saxon period as money upon most occasions, at certain regulated prices.

Vivary or Vivarye [fr. vivarium, Lat.], a place where animals are preserved; a park, warren, piscary, etc.—2 Inst. 100.

Vivâ voce (by word of mouth).

Viver, or Vivier, a fish-pond—2 Inst. 199.

Vivisection, the dissecting of animals alive, for the purpose of scientific experiments, may only be practised by persons holding a licence from a Secretary of State, and subject to the restrictions imposed by the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1876: Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Animals.' A Royal Commission published its report in 1907; see also 6 Edw. 7, c. 32 (stray dogs taken up by the police).

Vivum vadium, Viffrage or Living Pledge, when a person borrows money of another, and grants to him an estate to hold till the rents and profits shall repay the sum borrowed with interest. The estate is conditioned to be void as soon as the sum is realized. See WELSH MORTGAGE, and 2 Br. & Had. Com. 299.

Vocabulum artis, a word of art.

Vocatio in jus, a citation to law.—Civil Law.

Voeliferatio, an outcry; hue and cry (q.v.).

Void and Voidable. There is this difference between these two words: void means that an instrument or transaction is so nugatory and ineffectual that nothing can cure it; voidable, when an imperfection or defect can be cured by the act or confirmation of him who could take advantage of it. Thus, while acceptance of rent will make good a voidable lease, it will not affirm a void lease. See NULL AND VOID.

Voidance, the act of emptying; ejection from a benefice.

Voir dire [veritatem dicere, Lat.], 'to tell the truth,' voir being the Norman-French for vrai].

A sort of preliminary examination by the judge, in which the witness is required to speak the truth with respect to the questions put to him, when, if incompetency appears from his answers, he is rejected, and even if they are satisfactory, the judge may receive evidence to contradict them or establish other facts showing the witness to be incompetent.—Best on Evidence.

Volenti non fit injuria. Plow. 501.—(Where the sufferer is willing no injury is done.) See this maxim criticized by Lord Esher in Yarmouth v. France, (1887) 19 Q. B. D. at p. 653, and by Lord Watson in Smith v. Baker, 1891, A. C. at p. 355. The question is one for the jury (Dublin, etc., Railway Co. v. Slattery, (1878) 3 App. Cas. 1155). For a recent application of the maxim, see Herd v. Weardale, etc., Co., 1915, A. C. 67.

Consent or 'leave and licence' may be said to be a defence in actions of tort or prosecutions (see Archbold, Cr. Pr.), where the consent is to the specific injury or act, unless the act amounts to the infliction of a serious physical injury or where the rights of the public as well as the individual sustaining harm have intervened. The public are interested in preventing one of their number from grievous bodily harm and from exhibitions which alarm the public conscience, such as prize-fights without gloves, duels, etc., and see LIBEL.

The maxim has also been invoked in cases where the person injured was alleged to have contracted to absolve the defendant from a known risk or from obligations, such as not to be negligent in the course of a contract (see Smith v. Baker, 1891, A. C. 325, commenting on Thomas v. Quartermaine, (1887) 18 Q. B. D. 685), but in these cases knowledge of the risk is not conclusive; it is only evidence from which consent may be inferred; and see Letang v. Ottawa Electric Ry. Co., 1926, A. C. 725, as to invitation, knowledge and consent.

The performance of a duty in the face of imminent risk is not consent disentitling a plaintiff from his remedy (Haynes v. Harwood & Son, 1935, 1 K. B. 146); contra if the risk was undertaken voluntarily and not under duty (Cutler v. United Dairies (London) Ltd., 1933, 2 K. B. 297); and see Rescue and Voluntary Assumption of Risk, by Professor Goodhart, Cambr. L. J. 1934, vol. 5, No. 2, p. 192; and, generally, Pollock or Salmond on Torts.

Volumus (we will), the first word of a clause in the royal writs of protection and letters-patent.

Voluntarius dæmon, a drunkard.—Co. Lit. 247 a.

Voluntary, acting without compulsion; doing by design, without a consideration in return. See VOLUNTEER.

Voluntary Answer, one filed by a defendant in equity, without being called upon to answer by the plaintiff.

Voluntary Conveyance. A conveyance by way of gift or otherwise without valuable consideration. Liable to be defeated, under 27 Eliz. c. 4, by a subsequent sale for value, but no voluntary disposition whenever made shall be deemed to have been made with intent to defraud by reason only that a subsequent conveyance for valuable consideration was made if that conveyance was made after the 18th January, 1893: Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 173, reproducing 27 Eliz. c. 4, as amended by the Voluntary Conveyances Act, 1893. Any conveyance made with intent to defeat or delay creditors may be set aside under 13 Eliz. c. 5; see Twyne's Case, (1601) 3 Rep. 80; 1 Sm. L. C., unless the conveyance was made for valuable consideration and in good faith or upon good consideration and in good faith to any person not having at the time of the conveyance notice of the intent to defraud creditors (s. 172 (3), Law of Property Act, 1925). This Act (ss. 172 and 173) repeals and reproduces the Acts above referred to with amendments. 'Good faith' appears to mean 'as between grantor and grantee,' since an intent to defraud creditors is the gist of the action and must be proved in limine. As to good consideration, see CONSIDERATION (end of title).

By the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 42:—

(1) Any settlement of property not being in consideration of marriage or upon a sale or mortgage for valuable consideration or property coming to the settlor after marriage in right of his wife is void if the settlor becomes bankrupt within two years in any case, and within ten years if the settlor was not at the time of the settlement able to pay his debts without the aid of the settled property and had not transferred the property to the trustee of the settlement at that time.

(2) Any agreement in consideration of marriage to make a future payment to or to settle future property on persons within that consideration if, as regards the future property, the settlor had no interest in it at the time, or if either the money or property was not money or property in right of the settlor's wife or husband, is to be void against the trustee in bankruptcy if the agreement has not been performed at the date of commencement of the bankruptcy.

(3) And even if any such agreed payment or transfer (under 2) was made before bankruptcy it may be avoided unless it was made more than two years before the bankruptcy or the settlor was able to pay all his debts at the time without the aid of such money or property, or unless the money or property was an expectation from a person named in the agreement and was paid or transferred within three months after coming into possession or control of the settlor.

The beneficiaries under either (2) or (3) may claim for dividend after the creditors have been satisfied. See also s. 27, ibid. ; FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

Voluntary Deposit, such as arises from the mere consent and agreement of the parties.—Story on Bailments, 47.

Voluntary Jurisdiction, one exercised in matters admitting of no opposition or question, and therefore cognizable by any judge and in any place, and on any lawful day.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Voluntary Oath, an oath administered in a case for which the law has not provided. See Statutory Declarations Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 62), and OATH.

Voluntary Schools. The popular name for public elementary day schools not provided by the local education authority to which grants are made when recognized under the Education Act, 1921.

Voluntary Waste, that which is the result of the voluntary act of the tenant of property, as where he pulls down a wall, or cuts timber; opposed to permissive waste. See WASTE.

Voluntas reputatur pro facto. 3 Inst. 69.—(The intention is to be taken for the deed.)

Volunteer, a person who takes under a voluntary conveyance, or who, though the conveyance may have been for value, is not within the scope of the consideration, e.g., persons not issue of the marriage claiming under limitations in a marriage settlement.

Also, a person who has voluntarily joined a corps raised either for home or foreign service. See TERRITORIAL ARMY.

Vote, suffrage, voice given. See titles BALLOT and ELECTORAL FRANCHISE.

Voter, one who has the right of giving his vote or suffrage.

Votum, a vow or promise. Dies votorum, the wedding-day.—Fleta, l. 4.

Vouch, to give testimony, to answer for.

Vouche [fr. voco, Lat.], to call one to warrant lands.

Vouchee, the person vouched in a writ of right.

Voucher, (1) a witness, testimony; (2) acquittance, or receipt

Vrale, seaweed. It is used in great quantities by the inhabitants of Jersey and Guernsey for manure, and also for fuel by the poorer classes. In Benest v. Pipon, (1829) 1 Kn. 60, on appeal from Jersey to the Privy Council, it was held that the lord of a manor could not establish a claim to the exclusive right of cutting seaweed on rocks situate below low-water mark, except by a grant from the Crown, or by such long and undisturbed enjoyment of it as to give him a title by prescription.

Vulgaris purgatio. See JUDICIUM DEI.

W.

Wadset, corresponds in Scotland to mortgage in England. The lender is called the wadsetter, and the borrower the reverser. Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Waltors, conductors of vessels at sea.

Wage [fr. vador, Lat.; gage, Fr.], the giving of a security for the performance of anything.

Wager, a contract by A. to pay money to B. on the happening of a given event, in consideration of B. paying money to him on the event not happening; and see the elaborate definition of 'wagering contract' in Carlill v. Carbolic Smoke Ball Co., 1892, 2 Q. B. at p. 490, by Hawkins, J.

At Common Law a wager was a legal contract, which the Courts were bound to enforce, so long as it was not against morality, decency, or sound policy (Johnson v. Lumley, (1852) 12 C. B. 468). But by the Gaming Act, 1845, s. 18:—

All contracts or agreements, whether by parol or in writing, by way of gaming or wagering, shall be null and void; and no suit shall be brought or maintained in any court of law or equity for recovering any sum of money or valuable thing alleged to be won upon any wager, or which shall have been deposited in the hands of any person to abide the event on which any wager shall have been made: Provided always, that this enactment shall not be deemed to apply to any subscription or contribution, or agreement to subscribe or contribute, for or toward any plate, prize, or sum of money to be awarded to the winner or winners of any lawful game, sport, pastime, or exercise.

In Read v. Anderson, (1884) 13 Q. B. D. 779, it was held by a majority of the Court of Appeal, that a turf commission-agent might recover the amount of lost bets paid by him, in defiance of a revocation of the authority to make them; but the correctness of this decision was much questioned, and the law has been since altered by the Gaming Act, 1892, by which any promise to pay any person any sum paid by him in respect of any contract made void by the Act of 1845, or any commission in respect of any such contract, is itself made void; and the effect of this Act is that money paid by A. for B. at the request of B. in discharge of bets lost by B. to other persons cannot be recovered by A. from B. (Tatum v. Reeve, 1893, 1 Q. B. 44). The consideration for a cheque given, or in repayment of a loan made for wagering is bad (Gaming Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 41), even though the cheque was drawn in a country where wagering is legal (Moulis v. Owen, 1907, 1 K. B. 746); but money lent for such a purpose can be recovered in the courts of this country (Saxby v. Fulton, 1909, 2 K. B. 208), but see Carlton Hall Club v. Lawrence, 1929, 2 K. B. 153. There may, however, be a new consideration, e.g., an agreement to hold the cheque back and not present it for a certain time; such new consideration will support an action. The deposit given to a stakeholder on a wagering contract may be recovered if not, or before it has been, paid over (Burge v. Ashley and Smith, 1900, 1 Q. B. 744; Hyams v. Stuart King, 1908, 2 K. B. 696). See, generally, the Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 58). Consult Coldbridge and Hawksford's or Shoolbred's Law of Gambling.

Wager of Battel. See BATTEL.

Wager of Law [fr. vadatio legis. Lat.], a proceeding which consisted in a defendant's discharging himself from the claim on his own oath, bringing with him at the same time into court eleven of his neighbours (compurgatores) to swear that they believed his denial to be true. It was abolished after long disuse (see, however, a revival of it in 1824 in King v. Williams, (1824) 2 B. & C. 538) by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 13.

Wagering Policies, those effected for gambling purposes, which are void by 14 Geo. 3, c. 48. As far as marine insurance is concerned the matter is dealt with by s. 4 of the Marine Insurance Act, 1906, and the Marine Insurance (Gambling Policies) Act, 1909. See INSURANCE.

Wages, the compensation agreed upon by a master to be paid to a servant, or any other person hired to do work or business for him. An infant can recover wages up to 100l. in the county court, by s. 77 of the County Courts Act, 1934, as if he were of full age.

Wages of any 'servant, labourer, or workman' cannot be attached to satisfy judgments.—Wages Attachment Abolition Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 30).

Seamen have a lien on the ship for their wages; they may enforce their claim by an action in rem or in personam. Courts of Summary Jurisdiction are given jurisdiction to try cases where wages not exceeding 50l. are claimed by a seaman (Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 164). See also title MASTER AND SERVANT; PREFERENTIAL PAYMENTS; TRUCK ACTS.

Wagessum, a doubtful word, perhaps Mussel Onze. See Re Alston's Estate, (1856) 5 W. R. 189.

Waggonage, money paid for carriage in a waggon.

Waif or Waift, Welf or Welt (waiviatum, Low Lat.). (1) Goods found but claimed by nobody; that of which every one waives the claim. (2) Goods stolen and waived (bona) or thrown away by the thief in his flight (bona waivata), for fear of being apprehended. These are given to the sovereign by the law, as a punishment upon the owner for not himself pursuing the felon and taking away his goods from him.—Cro. Eliz. 694; 1 Bl. Com. 297.

Wainable, land that may be ploughed, manured, or tilled.—Chart. Antig.

Wainagium or Wonogium, the countenance of a vellein; that which is necessary for the cultivation of land.—Barr. on Stat. 12; 4 Steph. Com. See CONTENEMENT.

Waiver-bote, timber for waggons or carts.

Waiting-clerks in Chancery. Their offices were abolished by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103.

Waive, to forego, decline to take advantage of. 'A woman which is outlawed is called waived.'—Co. Litt. 122 b.

Waiver. (1) The passing by an occasion to enforce a legal right whereby the right to enforce the same is lost; a common instance of this is where a landlord waives a forfeiture of a lease by receiving rent, or distraining for rent, which has accrued due after the breach of covenant causing the forfeiture became known to him; see Davenport v. The Queen, (1877) 3 App. Cas. 115. Mere lying by is no waiver for this purpose; there must be some positive act on the part of the landlord, which act, however, if done, is a waiver in law, notwithstanding any protest. (2) Declining to take advantage of irregularities in proceedings. Consult Bullen and Leake's Prec. of Plead., and Broom's Leg. Max. under the titles Consensus tollit errorem, Quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto. See RELEASE.

Waiver Clause. That clause in the prospectus of a joint stock company, or in the application for its shares, which, as in Greenwood v. Leather Shod Wheel Co., 1900, 1 Ch. 421 (where it was held bad), waives claims of shareholders against directors for damages caused by the issue of a prospectus not disclosing contracts as required by s. 38 of the Companies Act, 1867. An honest waiver clause protected the defendant in Calthorpe v. Tail, 1906, A. C. 24. These waivers are rendered void by s. 35 (2) of the Companies Act, 1929, replacing s. 81 (4) of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908. Consult Buckley on the Companies Acts.

Wake. By s. 165 of the Public Health Act, 1936, replacing after 31st October, 1936, s. 68 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907, it is provided as follows :—

68. It shall not be lawful to hold a wake over the body of a person who has died while suffering from a notifiable disease, and the occupier of any premises who permits or suffers any such wake to take place thereon, and every person who takes part in the wake, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds.

Wakeman [quasi, watchman], the chief magistrate at Ripon, in Yorkshire.—Camden.

Wakening, a citation narrating that a complainant has raised a summons which he had let sleep for a year and a day, concluding that all persons cited on the first should compare, hear, and see the aforesaid action called, awakened, and debated, till sentence be given.—Bell's Scots Law Diet.

Wales. After Edward I. conquered the Welsh line of their ancient princes was abolished, and the King of England's eldest son was created their titular prince, and the territory of Wales was then entirely annexed to the British Crown. The Act 27 Hen. 8, c. 26, confirmed by 34 & 35 Hen. 8, c. 36, gave the utmost advancement to their civil prosperity, by admitting them to a thorough communion of laws with the subjects of England.

By the Wales and Berwick Act, 1746 (20 Geo. 2, c. 42), it is declared that where England only is mentioned in any Act of Parliament, it shall be deemed to comprehend the dominion of Wales and town of Berwick-upon-Tweed.

By 1 Wm. 4, c. 70, the jurisdiction of the Court of Great Sessions was abolished, and assizes are held in Wales as in England; and by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 11, the manner of assigning sheriffs in Wales is regulated by and assimilated to that of England.

Welsh-speaking inspectors of factories, mines, and quarries are required in Wales and Monmouthshire by s. 118 (2) of the Factories and Workshops Act, 1901 (re-enacting s. 23 of the Act of 1891), s. 97 of the Coal Mines Act, 1911, and s. 2 (3) of the Quarries Act, 1894.

By the Welsh Church Act, 1914, the Church of England in Wales and Monmouthshire was disestablished and disendowed. The operation of the Act was postponed, but eventually took effect as from 31st March, 1920. See WELSH CHURCH.

Wales, Prince of. See PRINCE OF WALES.
Wales, Statute of (12 Edw. 1, A.D. 1284).—2 Reeves, c. ix., 95.

Waleschery, the being a Welshman.—Spelm.

Wallsisc [servus, Lat.], a servant, or any other ministerial officer.—Leg. Jud. c. 34.

Walkers, foresters who have the care of a certain space of ground.

Wall. A demise in writing of the 'rooms situate on the first and second floors' of business premises, prima facie includes the external walls of the two floors (Goldfoot v. Welch, 1914, 1 Ch. 213). See PARTY WALL.

Waltham Black Act, The. See BLACK ACT.
Waltham Forest. See 12 & 13 Vict. c. 81.

Wanlass, an ancient tenure of lands, i.e. to drive deer to a stand, that the lord may have a shot.—Blount's Tenures, 140.

Wapentake, or Wapentachum, synonymous with 'hundred' in Yorkshire, Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire, Derbyshire, Rutland, and Leicestershire; the term is said to be derived from recognition of the local magistrate by touching his arms, but this is very questionable, though it unquestionably has reference to armed gatherings of the free-men.—Stubbs's Constitutional History, vol. i., p. 96.

War. The sovereign has the sole prerogative of making war or peace.

Where war actually prevails, the ordinary courts have no jurisdiction over the action of the military authorities (Ex parte D. F. Marais, 1902, A. C. at p. 115). See ARMY; DECLARATION OF WAR; and consult Owen's Declaration of War; Holland's Laws of War on Land; Hall's International Law; Grot. De Jure Pac. et Bel.

War Department, a department from which the sovereign issues orders to his forces. This department was formerly united with the Colonial Office under an official called the 'Secretary at War,' who was not a Secretary of State; but an additional Secretary of State was appointed, for affairs of war solely, in the year 1854. See the War Office Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 17).

By the Army (Annual) Act (9 Edw. 7, c. 3), certain powers formerly exercisable by the Secretary of State, and all powers of the Commander-in-Chief and the Adjutant-General under the Army Act, were transferred to the Army Council. See ARMY COUNCIL.

War Memorial. The War Memorials (Local Authorities Powers) Act, 1923, enables local authorities under certain circumstances to maintain and repair memorials vested in them.

War Office, the address and offices of the Secretary of State for War and Army Council.

Ward, a child under guardianship. A ward of Court is an infant under the protection of the High Court. An infant is constituted a ward of Court by an action relating to his estate; by an order made on an application for the appointment of a guardian; 'or by a payment into Court under the Trustee Act, 1925, s. 63; or in an administration action, to which he is a party (see Brown v. Collins, (1884) 25 Ch. D. 56). The control of the Court ceases when the infant comes of age (Bolton v. Bolton, 1891, 3 Ch. 270); see Seton on Judgments; Dan. Ch. Pr.; Simpson on Infants. See INFANT.

Also, an electoral subdivision of a borough for the purposes of the local government elections (Local Government Act, 1933, ss. 24 to 30). In boroughs divided by wards, an alderman or, in some cases, a councillor, not the mayor, is returning officer (s. 28). As to district councils, see ss. 36 and 37. Parishes may be divided into wards by the county council (s. 52). This Act, replacing the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, and previous Acts, all repealed except as to London, provides that the number of councillors in each ward is to be always divisible by three. There is to be a separate election for each ward, and every elector may give one vote and no more for each candidate. For qualification to vote, see Representation of the People Act (ibid., s. 51). See also WATCH AND WARD.

Wards, the custody of a town or castle, which the inhabitants were bound to keep at their own charge.—Dugd. Mon., i. 372.

Wardage, money paid and contributed to watch and ward.—Domesday.

Warden, guardian or keeper. The Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports is prohibited from recommending Members of Parliament to those places by 2 W. & M. sess. 1, c. 7. As to wardens of the Society of Apothecaries, see 55 Geo. 3, c. 194; 3 Steph. Com.

Ward-holding, the ancient military tenure in Scotland. Abolished by 20 Geo. 2, c. 50.

Wardmote, a court held in every ward in London.

The wardmote inquest has power to inquire into and present all defaults concerning the watch and police doing their duty, to see that engines, etc., are provided against fire, that persons selling ale and beer be honest and suffer no disorders, nor permit gaming, etc., that they sell in lawful measures; searches are to be made for beggars, vagrants, and idle persons, etc., who shall be punished.

Ward-penny, wardage, which see.

Wards and Liveries, Court of, a court erected by Henry III., and abolished by 12 Car. 2, c. 24.

Wardship, pupilage, guardianship; an incident to tenure in socage. See TENURE.

Wardship in Chivalry, the tenure of knight-service. See Ibid.

Wardship in Copyholds, the lord is guardian of his infant tenant by special custom.

Wardship of Infants. The wardship of infants and the care of infants' estates is assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34; see now Jud. Act, 1925, s. 56 (1) (b)). See INFANT; WARD OF COURT.

Wardstaff, a watchman's staff.

Wardwrit, the being quit of giving money for the keeping of wards.—Spelm.

Warectare, to plough up land designed for wheat in the spring, in order to let it lie fallow for better improvement, which in Kent is called summer-land.—Jac. Lav. Dict.

Warectum, otherwise called warecum or varectum, 'doth signify fallow.'—Co. Litt. 5 b.

Warehousing System, the allowing of goods imported to be deposited in public warehouses, at a reasonable rent, without payment of the duties on importation if they are re-exported; or if they are ultimately withdrawn for home consumption, without payment of such duties until they are so removed, or a purchaser found for them.—2 Steph. Com.

Wargus, a banished rogue.—Leg. Hen. 1, c. 83.

Waring, Ex parte, Rule of. The principle established in Ex parte Waring, (1815) 19 Ves. 345, that securities held by the acceptor of a bill against his acceptances are available to the bill-holders if both acceptor and drawer are insolvent, even though the bill-holders had no knowledge that the securities had been appropriated for the purpose.

Warnelstura, garniture, furniture, provision, etc.

Warning of a Caveat, a notice to a person who has entered a caveat in the Probate branch of the High Court to appear and set forth his interest. Consult Tristram and Coote's Probate Practice. See CAVEAT.

Warnoth, an ancient custom, that if any tenant holding of the castle at Dover failed in paying his rent at the day, he should forfeit double, and for his second failure treble; and the lands so held are called terre cultæ et terræ de warnoth.—Dugd. Mon., ii. 589.

Warping. A mode of fertilizing land by the 'warp' or deposit of flooded or tidal rivers artificially let in over the land and let off from it. Warping is an improvement within the Agricultural Holdings Act for which compensation is payable if executed with the consent of the landlord, and an improvement upon which a tenant for life may expend capital money under the Settled Land Act, 1925. See 3rd Sched., Part I. (iii.), and AGRICULTURAL HOLDINGS and SETTLED LAND.

Warrantice, warranty.—Scots term.

Warrant, an authority; a precept under hand and seal to some officer to arrest an offender, to be dealt with according to due course of law; also, a writ conferring some right or authority, a citation or summons.

Warrant of Attorney, a written authority addressed to one or more solicitors to appear for the party executing it, and receive a statement of claim for him in an action at the suit of a person therein mentioned, and thereupon to confess the same, or to suffer judgment to pass by default and to permit judgment to be entered up against him. The practice of giving warrants of attorney is seldom resorted to. A warrant of attorney may be executed as a security for the performance of any agreement between the parties; but it does not extinguish an original debt, or affect the right to sue upon it, unless judgment has been signed, for until this is done it is merely a collateral security. It is usual to make the warrant subject to be defeated on the performance of certain conditions, and when this is the case, they are set forth in an agreement, hence called the defeasance.

The Debtors Act, 1869, contains various provisions in regard to warrants of attorney, e.g., they must be executed in the presence of a solicitor acting on behalf of the person signing and explaining the consequences and effect of the warrant, and filed at the Central Office (Bills of Sales Department) of the Supreme Court within twenty-one days, and if affecting land, registered under the Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 6, every five years. See LAND CHARGES. If a warrant of attorney be obtained by fraud, duress, or misrepresentation, or upon illegal consideration, the Court will order it to be delivered up to be cancelled, and will set aside all proceedings upon it, and so if a material alteration be made in it. If the warrant is good in part, and bad in part, the Court will sustain it quoad the good part. If the fact of the consideration be doubtful, the Court may direct an issue to try it. See COGNOVIT and Chitty's Archbold.

Warrantee, a person to whom a warranty is made.

Warrantia chartæ, a writ where one was enfeoffed of lands with warranty, and then he was sued or impleaded in assize or other action in which he could not vouch or call to warranty.—Fitz. N. B. 134. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27.

Warrantia dilei, an ancient writ, where one having a day assigned personally to appear in court to any action, is in the meantime employed in the royal service, so that he cannot come on the day appointed; it was addressed to the justices to this end, that they neither take nor record him in default for that time.—Fitz. N. B. 17.

Warrantizare nihil aliud est, quam defendere et acquietare tenentem qui warrantum vocavit in seisinâ suâ. Co. Litt. 365 a.—(To warrant is simply to defend and ensure in peace the tenant who calls for warranty in his seisin.)

Warranty of lands, by s. 39 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27), cannot defeat a right of entry.

Warrantor, a person who warrants; the heir of one's husband.

Warrantor potest excipere quod querens non tenet terram de qua petit warrantiam, et quod donum fuit insufficientens. Hob. 21.—(A warrantor may object that the complainant does not hold the land of which he seeks the warranty, and that the gift was insufficient.)

Warranty, a guarantee or security; formerly a promise or covenant by deed by the bargainer, for himself and his heirs, to warrant and secure the bargainee and his heirs against all persons for the enjoying of the thing granted, accompanied by a promise, express or implied, that if eviction should take place, the warrantor would substitute an equivalent estate in its place — see Co. Litt. 365 a. In that form it has been superseded in practice by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, cc. 27 (s. 39) and 74 (s. 14). See RECOVERY.

More generally, a warranty is any agreement either accompanying a transfer of property, or collateral to the contract for such transfer (see Lawrence v. Cassell, 1930, 2 K. B. 83, and Miller v. Cannon Hill Estates Ltd., 1931, 2 K. B. 113), or to any other agreement or transaction, and in so far as it is a contract a warranty does not differ from any other contractual promise. A warranty may be express or implied by law or statute.

For instances of implied warranties, see that title, CAVEAT EMITOR, TITLE, COVENANTS FOR, and infra. Implied warranties have been said to underlie or to be the gist of actions for negligence or breach of duty arising out of the special relations between parties; cf. the judgment of Gould, J., in, and notes to, Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Lord Raymond, 1 Sm. L. C., and see NEGLIGENCE.

As a general rule an express warranty, or a known usage, excludes any implication of warranty in regard to the same subject-matter. See expressum facit cessare tacitum, and e.g., QUIET ENJOYMENT. But upon sale of goods if the express warranty (which includes representation, such as 'sample') has been superadded for the benefit of the buyer or is not inconsistent with the implied warranty, the latter is not excluded: cf. Sale of Goods Act, 1893, ss. 14 and 55; and see Drummond v. Van Ingen, (1887) 12 App. Cas. 284.

The expression 'warranty' in the Sale of Goods Act (see that title and s. 62 (1) of the Act) 'as regards England and Northern Ireland means an agreement with reference to goods which are the subject of a contract of sale, but collateral to the main purpose of such a contract, the breach of which gives rise to a claim for damages, but not to a right to reject the goods and treat the contract as repudiated,' and 'as regards Scotland' it is provided by the same section that 'a breach of warranty shall be deemed to be a failure to perform a material part of the contract.'

The same Act does not define a condition which, in contract, is a stipulation which goes to the root of the contract and the breach or non-performance of which absolves the promisee from his part of the contract and entitles him to repudiate it in toto. Whether a stipulation is a condition or a warranty depends entirely on the construction of the contract (s. 11), Bentsen v. Taylor, No. 2, 1893, 2 Q. B. 274; and generally, see, e.g., Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 11.

There is nothing, if the facts are present, to prevent the performance or fulfilment of a warranty in its strict sense of a collateral agreement from being at the same time a condition either of a transfer of property or of the entire contract. On the other hand, the person entitled to the benefit of a condition is at liberty to waive his right to repudiate upon condition broken and merely claim damages or compensation for breach of the collateral agreement: see Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 11; and the right to repudiate may also be lost if the promisee has adopted the transaction, or the rights of the parties have been so altered as to prevent a return to the status quo ante. In the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, specific rules are provided in respect of conditions and warranties. These rules are, in the main, merely declaratory of law which is applicable to many transactions other than sales: see REPRESENTATION; TRADE MARKS; LANDLORD AND TENANT; PROVISO FOR RE-ENTRY; HOUSING; and, upon sales of certain goods, Anchor and Chain Cables Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 23), s. 2 (warranty of test of anchors exceeding 168 lbs. and cables); Fertilizers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 45); Fabrics (Misdescription) Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 17) (inflammable textiles); Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, s. 17; Sale of Food and Drugs Acts, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 63) and 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 31), and other statutes.

In marine insurance a 'warranty' means a condition: see Marine Insurance Act, 1906, ss. 33–41.

Warren [fr. waerande, Dut.; guerenne, Fr.]. A free warren is a franchise to have and keep certain wild beasts and fowls, called game, within the precincts of a manor, or other known place; in which animals the owner of the warren has a property, and consequently a right to exclude all other persons from hunting and taking them. It must be derived from a royal grant, or from prescription, which supposes such a grant.—Williams on Rights of Common, p. 238. See Earl Beauchamp v. Winn, (1873) L. R. 6 H. L. at p. 238; Robinson v. Duleep Singh, (1879) 11 Ch. D. 798; Fitzhardinge (Lord) v. Purcell, 1908, 2 Ch. 139.

Warseot, a contribution usually made towards armour in the time of the Saxons.

Warth, a customary payment for castle guard.

Wash, a shallow part of a river or arm of the sea.

Washhouses, Public. See BATHS.

Washing-horn [fr. corner l'eau, Fr.], the sounding of a horn for washing before dinner. The custom was formerly observed in the Temple.

Washington, Treaty of. A treaty signed on May 8th, 1871, between Queen Victoria and the United States of America, as to certain differences arising out of the war between the Northern and Southern States of the Union, the Canadian Fisheries, and other matters. See 35 & 36 Vict. c. 45.

Waste [fr. vastum, Lat.], any spoil or destruction in houses, gardens, trees, etc., by a tenant; as to what acts amount to waste, see Co. Litt. 53 a. It is either (1) legal, sub-divided into (a) voluntary or commisive, as where the tenant pulls down a house or a part thereof, or ploughs up ancient meadow, and (b) permissive or omissive, as where a tenant suffers a house to fall out of repair; or (2) equitable, which comprehends acts not deemed waste at Common Law. Both for voluntary and permissive waste an action lies against a tenant, whether for life or years, by virtue of the statute of Gloucester, 6 Edw. 1, c. 5. A tenant from year to year is liable for voluntary waste only. An injunction will be granted to restrain voluntary waste, as by ploughing up ancient meadow. See Woodfall, L. & T., and Aggs on Agricultural Holdings. A mortgagor in possession will be restrained from cutting down timber, for as the whole estate is the security for the money advanced, the mortgagor ought not to be suffered to diminish it; but he may cut underwood of a proper growth at seasonable times. As to an estate under forestry management, see Dashwood v. Magniac, 1892, 2 Ch. 253.

Equitable waste (which is voluntary only) is an unconscientious abuse of the privileges of non-impeachability for waste at Common Law, whereby a tenant for life, without impeachment of waste, will be restrained from committing wilful, destructive, malicious, or extravagant waste, such as pulling down houses, cutting timber of too young a growth, or trees planted for ornament, or for shelter of premises; for, though in some cases fortior est dispositio legis quam hominis, yet that shall not extend to encumber or spoil estates. See Baker v. Sebright, (1879) 13

Ch. D. 179; Garth v. Cotton, (1750) 1 Ves. Sen. 524, 546; 1 W. & T. L. C.

By the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 135, replacing the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25 (3), it is provided that an estate for life without impeachment of waste shall not confer upon the tenant for life any legal right to commit waste of the kind known as equitable waste, unless an intention to confer such right shall expressly appear by the instrument creating such estate. And see s. 89, Settled Land Act, 1925, which enables a tenant for life to effect authorized improvements without impeachment of waste by remaindermen, etc.

Wastors, thieves.

Watch, The, a body of constables on duty on any particular night.

Watch and Ward. One of the principal duties of constables is to keep watch and ward. Ward [custodia, Lat.] is chiefly applied to the daytime, in order to apprehend rioters and robbers on the highways. Watch [fr. watcht, or wacta, Teut.] is applicable to the night only, and begins at the time when ward ends.—1 Bl. Com. 356.

Watch Committee, a committee of the town council of a municipal borough, not exceeding one-third of the council in number, having the appointment and control of the borough constables.—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, ss. 5, 190, 191. Prior to this Act, it was a common custom for a town council to constitute the whole of their number the watch committee.

Watching and Lighting. See LIGHTING AND WATCHING ACT, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 90).

Watch Rate, a rate leviable in many municipal boroughs by order of the council which is carried to the borough fund.—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, ss. 197–200; repealed by the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925; see ss. 10 and 11, and RATE.

Water and Watercourse. In the language of the law the term 'land' includes water.—2 Bl. Com. 18. An action cannot be brought to recover possession of a pool or other piece of water by the name of water only, but it must be brought for the land that lies at the bottom, e.g. 'twenty acres of land covered with water.'—Brownl. 142. See POOL. By granting a certain water, though the right of fishing passes, yet the soil does not. Water being a movable, wandering thing, there can be only a temporary, transient, usufructuary property therein. Consult Coulson and Forbes on the Law of Waters, Gale on Easements, and Angell on Watercourses. 'Water' does not include the land on which it stands, unless perhaps in the case of salt pits or springs, where the interest of each owner is measured by builleries, ballaries or buckets of brine.—Burt. Comp. pl. (550), and see Co. Litt. 4 b.

The Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, and the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Water,' and Michael and Will on Gas and Water Supply), each of them consolidate in one Act provisions usually contained in special Acts authorizing the construction of waterworks by companies for the supply of water to the public at a limited profit to the shareholders by means of water rates. By s. 68 of the Act of 1863 these rates are payable according to the annual value of the tenement supplied with water.

London.—The Metropolis Water Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 41), and the rules made thereunder (see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Metropolis'), established a Metropolitan Water Board consisting of members appointed by the London County Council, the Metropolitan Borough Councils (the County Council appointing fourteen, and the borough councils appointing one each), and other Councils (the quorum being one third of the whole number), to manage the supply of water within London and certain adjoining districts. The Act effected a transfer to the Board of the undertakings and liabilities of each of the Metropolitan water companies, at a price to be agreed on between the Board and the companies, or in default of agreement by Sir Edward Fry (formerly Fry, L.J.), Sir Hugh Owen, and Sir J. W. Barry.

The supply of water to their districts by local authorities was provided for by the Public Health Act, 1875, ss. 51–68, and as to obligation of owners of houses to provide water supply, see Public Health (Water) Act, 1878. Both these Acts have been repealed and replaced by Part IV. of the Public Health Act, 1936, ss. 111 to 142; and see also Rural Water Supplies Act, 1934, enabling the Minister of Health and the Health Department for Scotland to contribute towards the expenses of any local authorities for water supplies; the Water Supplies (Exceptional Shortage Orders) Act, 1934, enabling the same Minister and Department respectively to provide against exceptional deficiencies of water due to drought; and other statutes. See RESERVOIR.

Watercourse, an incorporeal hereditament, being a natural right which a man has to the benefit of the flow of a river or stream, such right commonly referring to a stream passing through a man's own land, and the banks of which belong either to himself on both sides, or to himself on one side, and to his neighbour on the other, in which latter case (unless the stream be navigable, for then the bed of it, so far at least as the tide of the sea flows, presumably belongs to the Crown) the proprietor of each bank is considered as prima facie the proprietor also of half the land covered by the stream, i.e., usque ad medium filum aquæ. A prescriptive prima facie right affecting watercourses or waterways (q.v.) is gained by twenty years' uninterrupted enjoyment, and an indefeasible right after forty years; and when the land over which such rights as these are claimed has been held for term of life, or a term exceeding three years, such term shall be excluded from the computation of the forty years, in the event of the person who may be entitled in reversion resisting the claim within three years after the term determines.—2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 71.

A right of the public to enter upon land belonging to another to take water is not a profit à prendre and is not, apparently, a subject of prescription, but it may be acquired by custom or usage. See Halsh. L. E., tit. 'Customs and Usages,' and Gateward's Case, (1607) 6 Rep. 69.

So, also, a prescriptive right to a watercourse is not lost by unity of possession (see EASEMENT) because the right begins ex jure naturæ and cannot be averted. See Gale or Goddard on Easements and Angell on Watercourses; and WAY (Waterway).

Flow of Water.—Every riparian owner has a right to the uninterrupted flow of water (McCartney v. Londonderry Ry., 1905, A. C. 301), and may be liable for damage caused by neglect which prevents the free flow of water (Finch v. Bannister, 1908, 2 K. B. 441); he is also entitled to receive the water in its natural character and quality (Young v. Banker Distillery Co., 1893, A. C. 691). Any one who interferes with the natural channel of a stream must see that the works which he substitutes are sufficient to carry off the water, even in the case of extraordinary rainfall (Corp. of Greenock v. Caledonian Ry. Co., 1917, A. C. 556). The above rights apply to water flowing in known channels whether above or below ground.

A distinction must be drawn, however, in the case of water which merely percolates through the soil: see Chasemore v. Richards, (1859) 7 H. L. C. 349; Bradford Corporation v. Pickles, 1895, A. C. 587; and Acton v. Burnell, (1843) 12 M. & W. 324. As to nuisances, cleansing, etc., in connection with watercourses, see Public Health Act, 1936, ss. 259 to 267.

Water-bailiff, an officer in port towns, whose duty it is to search ships; also an officer appointed under the Salmon Fishery Acts to enforce the provisions of those Acts by searching for illegal engines, etc. See Salmon and Fresh Water Fisheries Act, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 16), ss. 66 et seq.

Water-gage, a sea-wall or bank to restrain the current and overflowing of water; also gauge, an instrument to measure water.

Water-gang, a trench or course to carry a stream of water.

Water-gavel, a rent paid for fishing in, or other benefit received from, some river.

Water-measure, a greater measure than the Winchester, formerly used for selling coals in the Pool, etc.—22 Car. 2, c. 11.

Watermen. See THAMES WATERMEN.

Water-ordeal. See ORDEAL.

Waterscape, an aqueduct or passage for water.

Waveson, goods swimming upon the waves after a shipwreck.

Waviata, Bona, goods stolen and waived or thrown away by the thief in his flight, for fear of being apprehended. They are given by the law to the king.—1 Bl. Com. 297. See WAIVE.

Wax Scot [fr. cerarium, Lat.], duty anciently paid twice a year towards the charge of wax candles in churches.

Way [fr. weg, Sax.; weigh, Dut.; wig or wig, M. Goth.], road made for passengers.

There are three kinds of ways:—1st, a footway (iter); 2nd, a footway and horseway (actus), vulgarly called packe and prime way; 3rd, via or aditus, which contains the other two, and also a cartway, etc.; and this is two-fold, viz., regia via, the king's highway for all men, and communis strata, belonging to a city or town or between neighbours and neighbours. This is called in our books chimin.—Co. Litt. 56 a.

All ways are divided into highways and private ways. A right of way strictly means a private way, i.e. a privilege which an individual or a particular description of persons may have of going over another's ground. Such a right is an incorporeal hereditament.

A highway is a public passage for the sovereign and all his subjects, and it is commonly called the king's public highway; and the turnpike roads, created and regulated by specific Acts of Parliament, have now for many years become ordinary highways. See TURNPIKE-ROADS. Highways generally become so by what is called a 'dedication' of them to the public by the owner of the soil.

Public bridle-paths and footways are highways within the meaning of the Highway Acts.

As highways are for public service, if they are so out of repair that the usual track is impassable, people may pass, by going out of the track, upon the land of the owners of the adjoining closes; but this privilege is confined to highways; for as private ways are presumed to have originated in grants from the owner of the soil, the want of repair, amounting to a foundering state, does not authorize passengers to go out of the way upon the adjacent land.

The inhabitants of a parish are primâ facie bound to repair a highway of common right; unless by prescription they can throw the burden on particular persons by reason of their tenure; and if the inhabitants of a township, bound by prescription to repair, be expressly exempted by an Act of Parliament from repairing the roads to be made within the township, it falls on the rest of the parish.

By the General Highway Act, 1835, power is given to stop up and divert highways, and the mode of proceeding to effect this object is pointed out. Parties grieved have a right of appeal to the sessions.

Bridges are public highways. See BRIDGE.

A private right of way may be claimed by prescription and immemorial usage; thus where the inhabitants of a particular hamlet, or the owners or occupiers of a particular close or farm, have immemorially been used to cross a particular piece of land, a right of way is created by the immemorial usage, which supposes a grant. By the Prescription Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 71), s. 2, it is enacted that no claim by custom, prescription, or grant, to any way or other easement, or to any watercourse or the use of any water which has been enjoyed twenty years without interruption, shall be defeated by showing the commencement of the right within the time of legal memory; and where the right shall have existed forty years, it shall be absolute and indefeasible, unless it appears to have been enjoyed by express agreement made for that purpose by deed or writing. The right must be proved by user down to the time of the commencement of the action; and, therefore, if there be no proof of user for the last four or five years, it is insufficient. Unity of possession operates as an extinguishment of a right of way by prescription. See Shury v. Pigott, (1627) 3 Bulstrode 339, and EASEMENT.

A highway can always be dedicated to the public, and as to what will constitute dedication, see Simpson v. A.-G., 1904, A. C. 476.

By the Rights of Way Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 45), public use of way as of right and without interruption for a full period of twenty years is conclusive that that way is a public highway, unless of such a character that user by public could not give rise at common law to any prescription of dedication; or unless there is evidence that there was no intention to dedicate, or unless there was not at any time any person in possession of such land capable of dedicating such way. Enjoyment of a way as of right and without interruption for a full period of forty years is conclusive evidence of dedication unless there is sufficient evidence that there was no intention to dedicate such way. The dedication could be made by a tenant for life and remainderman (Farquhar v. Newbury District Council, 1909, 1 Ch. 12), and see Rights of Way Act, 1932, s. 4, as to the rights of remaindermen or reversioners next entitled in possession.

A quasi-private right of way may also be grounded on a special permission; as when the owner of lands grants to another a liberty of passing over his grounds, to go to church, market, or the like, in which case the gift or grant is particular and confined to the grantee alone; it dies with the person; the grantee cannot assign it, or justify taking another person in his company—it is a mere personal licence.

A right of way may also arise by act and operation of law; for if a man grant a piece of ground in the middle of his field, he at the same time tacitly and impliedly gives a way to come to it, and the grantee may cross the grantor's land without being a trespasser. Such a 'way of necessity' is limited by the necessity which created it; and when such necessity ceases, the right of way also ceases. See EASEMENTS.

Disturbance of way happens when a person, who has a right of way over another's grounds, by grant or prescription, is obstructed by inclosures or other obstacles, or by ploughing across it, by which means he cannot enjoy the right of way, or at least not in so commodious a manner as he might have done. The remedy is usually by action on the case for damages. A right of way is often contested in an action of trespass. The remedy for the want of repair of or obstruction to public highways is by indictment. Consult Gale or Goddard on Easements; Glen on Highways; and see HIGHWAYS; TRUNK ROADS.

Waterway.—A navigable river is deemed to be a highway; and if the water, which is the highway, change its course and flow upon the land of another, the highway extends over the place where the water newly flows in like manner as it existed over the ancient course, so that the owner may not disturb it. With respect to navigable rivers there is this difference, however, between them and highways, that the right to the soil of a navigable river is not, by presumption of law, in the owners of the adjoining lands.

Ferries may be said to be common highways, as they are a common passage over rivers. They differ, however, in some measure, as they are the private property of individuals, who may maintain an action for the disturbance of their rights. See FERRY.

Way, Under, a ship is 'under way' within the meaning of the Sea Regulations, 1910, when she is not at anchor or made fast to the shore or aground (see The Palembang, 1929, P. 246).

Way-bill, a writing in which is set down the names of passengers who are carried in a public conveyance, or the description of goods sent with a common carrier by land.

Way - going Crops. See AWAY - GOING CROPS.

Waynaglum, implements of husbandry.—1 Reeves, c. v., 268.

Weald, Wald, Walt [Sax.], a wood or grove.

Wealreaf, the robbing of a dead man in his grave.

Wealth, all useful or agreeable things which possess exchange-value, or, in other words, all useful and agreeable things except those which can be obtained in the quantity desired without labour or sacrifice.—1 Mill's Pol. Eco. 10. The actual and potential possessions and resources of one or more individuals, or a community, either convertible into terms of money, or measured by any other standard of value. See VALUE.

Wear, or Weir, a great dam or fence made across a river, or against water, formed of stakes interlaced by twigs of osier, and accommodated for the taking of fish, or to convey a stream to a mill. Prohibited by Magna Charta and other early statutes in navigable rivers.—Lord Leonfield v. Earl of Lonsdale, (1870) L. R. 5 C. P. 657. Prohibited for the purpose of catching salmon by the Salmon Fishery Act, 1861, unless 'lawfully in use' at the time of the passing of that Act by virtue of a grant or charter or immemorial usage. Weirs and mill dams for taking or obstructing salmon and trout not in use before 1861 are prohibited: see Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Acts, 1923-35.

Wear and Tear, Reasonable, the waste of substance by the ordinary use of it. This expression commonly occurs in connection with leases, in which the lessee agrees to return the subject-matter of the lease at the end of the lease in the same state as it was at the beginning of it, 'reasonable wear and tear excepted'; as to the meaning of which, see Manchester Bonded Warehouse Co. v. Carr, (1880) 5 C. P. D. at p. 513; Terrell v. Murray, (1901) 17 T. L. R. 570; Miller v. Burt, (1918) 63 Sol. Jo. 117; Citron v. Cohen, (1920) 36 T. L. R. 560; and cases under LANDLORD AND TENANT. As to the insertion of the exception in a lease made by a tenant for life, see Davies v. Davies, (1888) 38 Ch. D. 499.

Wed [Sax.], a covenant or agreement.

Wedbedrip, the customary service which inferior tenants paid to their lords in cutting down their corn, or doing other harvest duties.

Wedding-rings. As to the assaying and marking of gold wedding-rings, see 18 & 19 Vict. c. 60, s. 1.

Welghage, a toll or duty paid for weighing merchandise.

Weight of Evidence, such superiority in the evidence for one side over that for the other as calls for a verdict for the first. When a new trial is asked for on the ground that the verdict is against the weight of the evidence, the judge who tried the cause is consulted, and it does not very often happen that a new trial is ordered if he reports that he is satisfied with the verdict (R. S. C. Ord. XXXIX., r. 6, and notes thereto in Annual Practice).

Weights and Measures, instruments for reducing the quantity and price of merchandise to a certainty, that there may be the less room for deceit and imposition. See AVOIRDUPOIS; TROY WEIGHT; and METRIC SYSTEM.

The adjustment of weights and measures is a prerogative of the Crown, and has from an early date been regulated by statute—the Weights and Measures Act, 1878. The 25th and 26th sections enact that:—

25. Use or Possession for Use.—Every person who uses or has in his possession for use for trade any weight, measure, scale, balance, steelyard, or weighing machine which is false or unjust, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding 5*l.*, or in the case of a second offence 20*l.* [as amended by the W. and M. Act, 1889], and any contract, bargain, sale, or dealing made by the same shall be void, and the weight, measure, scale, balance, or steelyard shall be liable to be forfeited.

26. Fraud in Use.—Where any fraud is wilfully committed in the using of any weight, measure, scale, balance, steelyard or weighing machine, the person committing such fraud, and every person party to the fraud, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding 5*l.*, or in the case of a second offence 20*l.* [as amended by the 1889 Act], and the weight, measure, scale, balance, or steelyard shall be liable to be forfeited.

Section 25 applies to a vendor's churn conveying milk by rail (Harris v. London County Council, 1895, 1 Q. B. 240), but not to post-office scales (Reg. v. Justices of Kent, (1889) 21 Q. B. D. 181). Paper bags for tea may come within s. 25 (London County Council v. Payne (No. 1) and (No. 2), 1904, 1 K. B. 194; 1905, 1 K. B. 410), but a paper bag for sugar was held not to be within s. 26 in Stone v. Tyler, 1905, 1 K. B. 290.

An amending Weights and Measures Act, 1889, provides for the verification of weighing instruments, authorizes the publication of convictions, prescribes that coal is to be sold by weight only, and otherwise increases the severity of the law; and an amending Weights and Measures Act, 1904, substitutes for the power of the Board of Trade to disapprove of regulations of local authorities an initiative power to that Board to make regulations as to verification and stamping of weights and measures, obliteration of stamps, application of tests of accuracy, limits of error to be allowed, 'and generally for the guidance of local authorities,' but adds that these regulations may confer on local authorities power to make special local regulations of their own in suitable cases. There are also many small amendments of the Acts of 1878 and 1889, as that the existing fines for increasing or diminishing weights are to apply to measures, that inspectors are disabled from receiving an informer's part of a fine, that imprisonment with hard labour may be awarded on conviction of any offence (instead of only on conviction of a second or subsequent offence) committed with intent to defraud, that local authorities, under the Act of 1889 only enabled to provide working standards of measure and weight for their officers, become bound to provide them if the Board of Trade so direct. Moreover, for the vague general prohibition of discount being allowed by an inspector on his scheduled fees for verification and stamping there is substituted (s. 13) the specific and comprehensive enactment that:—

No discount, commission, or rebate of any kind shall be given, nor any allowance made, by such inspector, or by the local authority, for the use of tools, premises, machinery, or instruments, or assistance rendered: . . . except when verification and stamping take place on the premises of a glass or earthenware manufacturer, in which case such adequate and reasonable allowance as may be agreed upon by the local authority with the consent of the Board of Trade may be made.

The Weights and Measures (Amendment) Act, 1926, amends the law with respect to measuring instruments, and the power to charge fees in connection with the listing and measuring apparatus.

The Sale of Food (Weights and Measures) Act, 1926, provides for the better protection of the public in relation to the sale of food, including agricultural and horticultural produce. See Cave v. Dudley Co-operative Society, 103 L. J. K. B. 569, as to meaning of 'average' in the Act; CORN SALES ACT, 1921; TEA; CRAN; and Fees (Increase) Act, 1923, s. 6, and the Weights and Measures (Leather Measurement) Act, 1919; and also Builer or Robert on Weights and Measures, and Chit. Stat., tit. 'Weights and Measures.'

Weights of Auncel. See AUNCLE WEIGHT.
Weir. See WEAR.

Welcher, a person who receives money which has been deposited to abide the event of a race, and who has a predetermined intention to keep the money, and not to part with it in any event: see Blackman v. Bryant, (1872) 27 L. T. 491, where, in an action of slander, the word was held not actionable without proof of special damage; but see Williams v. Magyer, Times, 1st March, 1883; Odgers on Libel, p. 49.

Welsh Church. The Welsh Church Act, 1914, provided for the disestablishment of the Church of England in Wales and Monmouthshire. Its operation was suspended by the Suspensory Act, 1914, but it came into effect under, and was amended by, the Welsh Church (Temporalities) Act, 1919, as from 31st March, 1920. All ecclesiastical corporations are dissolved and disendowed, but churches, ecclesiastical residences and certain endowments, as well as a million pounds under a scheme of commutation of existing interests, are transferred to a 'representative body' which has been incorporated by Royal Charter. See the above-mentioned Acts and the Welsh Church Rules.

Welsh Mortgage (now rare), a conveyance of an estate redeemable at any time by the mortgagee, on payment of the loan; the rents and profits of the estate being received in the meantime by the mortgagee, in satisfaction of interest, subject, however, to an account in Chancery. There is no covenant for the repayment of the loan, and the mortgagee cannot compel either redemption or foreclosure. A Welsh mortgage differs from a vivum vadium or vifage, which is a conveyance of property to the creditor and his heirs, until out of the rents and profits of the estate he has satisfied the debt with interest; it was so called because neither debt nor estate was lost. The distinction between these securities is, that in the vifage the profits are applied in the periodical reduction of the debt, while in the Welsh mortgage they are applied in satisfaction of the interest, the principal remaining undiminished. In neither, however, is the estate ever forfeited. See 2 Br. & Had. Com. 299, and consult Coot on Mortgages, 8th ed. pp. 31 et seq., and see LAND CHARGES.

Wend, a certain quantity or circuit of land.

Were [capitis stimatio], a pecuniary compensation for any injury. See WIRE.

Werelada, a purging from the crime by the oaths of several persons according to the degree and quality of the accused.

Wergild, Weregild, Weregildum [fr. wer, man, and geld, satisfaction, Ang.-Sax.], the price of homicide or other enormous offences, paid partly to the Crown for the loss of a subject, partly to the lord whose vassal he was, and partly to the party injured or the next of kin of the party slain. This is the earliest award of damages in our law.—4 Bl. Com. 188. Obsolete Saxon custom.

Westminster, a city by express creation of Henry VIII. It was dissolved as a see and restored to the bishopric of London by Edward VI., and turned into a collegiate church, subject to a dean, by Queen Elizabeth. The Superior Courts sat here until 1822 in Westminster Hall itself, and after 1822 in courts opening into it—the Court of Chancery only upon the first day of certain sittings, after which it sat at Lincoln's Inn. The same course was observed under the Judicature Act by the Divisions representing the respective courts until the opening of the Royal Courts of Justice in 1883 (see that title).

It has been provided by many Acts of Parliament, e.g., by the repealed County Courts Act, 1850, s. 14, which gave an appeal from a county court, that certain jurisdiction shall be exercised by the courts 'at Westminster.' All such Acts are, by s. 18 of the Courts of Justice Building Act, 1865, to be construed as if the Royal Courts of Justice had been referred to therein instead of the courts at Westminster.

Westminster Confession, a document containing a statement of religious doctrine drawn up at a conference of British and Continental Protestant divines at Westminster in the year 1643, which subsequently became the basis of the Scotch Presbyterian Church.

Westminster, Statute of, 1931 (22 Geo. 5, c. 4). This Act was passed to confirm and ratify certain declarations made by the delegates to the Imperial Conferences of 1926 and 1930. Six Dominions are affected: Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, the Irish Free State, and Newfoundland. The arrangement is as follows:—

Sect. 1. Meaning of 'Dominion' in this Act.

Sect. 2. Validity of laws made by Parliament of a Dominion; the Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865, shall not apply to any law made by the Parliament of a Dominion.

Sect. 3. Power of Parliament of Dominion to legislate extra-territorially.

Sect. 4. Parliament of United Kingdom not to legislate for 'Dominion' except by consent.

Sect. 5. Powers of Dominion Parliaments in relation to shipping.

Sect. 6. Powers of Dominion Parliaments in relation to Courts of Admiralty.

Sect. 7. Saving for British North America Acts and application of Act to Canada.

Sect. 8. Saving for Constitution Acts of Australia and New Zealand.

Sect. 9. Saving with respect to States of Australia.

Sect. 10. Certain sections of Act not to apply to Australia, New Zealand or Newfoundland unless adopted.

Sect. 11. Meaning of 'Colony' in future Acts.

Sect. 12. Short title.

As to the right of appeal to the Privy Council, see an article in the Law Quarterly Review, vol. lii., No. 206, April, 1936; and see British Coal Corp. v. The King, 1935, A. C. 500; Moore v. A.-G. of Irish Free State, 1935, A. C. 484.

Westminster the First, Statute of (3 Edw. 1, A.D. 1275). This statute, which deserves the name of a Code rather than an Act, is divided into fifty-one chapters. Without extending the exemption of churchmen from civil jurisdiction, it protects the property of the Church from the violence and spoliation of the king and the nobles, and provides for freedom of popular elections, because sheriffs, coroners, and conservators of the peace were still chosen by the freeholders in the county court, and attempts had been made to influence the election of knights of the shire, from the time when they were instituted. It contains a declaration to enforce the enactment of Magna Charta against excessive fines, which might operate as perpetual imprisonment; enumerates and corrects the abuses of tenures, particularly as to marriage of wards; regulates the levying of tolls, which were imposed arbitrarily by the barons, and by cities and boroughs; corrects and restrains the power of the king's escheator and other officers; amends the criminal law, putting the crime of rape on the footing to which it has been lately restored, as a most grievous but not capital offence, and embraces the subject of procedure, civil and criminal matters, introducing many regulations to render it cheap, simple, and expeditious.—Lord Campbell's Lives of the Chancellors, v. 1, p. 167; 2 Reeves, c. 9, p. 107. Certain parts of this Act are repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1863, and other statutes.

Westminster the Second, Statute of (13 Edw. 1, st. 1, A.D. 1285); otherwise called the Statute De donis conditionalibus; see TAIL. 2 Reeves, c. 10, p. 163. Certain parts of this Act are repealed by Statute Law Revision Act, 1887.

Westminster the Third, Statute of (18 Edw. 1, st. 1, A.D. 1290); otherwise called the Statute Quia emptores terrarum. See QUIA EMPTORES, STATUTE OF.

Westmoreland, the Shrievalty of, was hereditary in the family of the Earl of Thanet, and descended to females as well as males. Anne, Countess of Pembroke, exercised this office in person, and, at the assizes at Appleby, sat with the judges on the bench.—Co. Litt. 326 n. After the death of the Earl of Thanet in 1849, without issue, an Act was passed abolishing all hereditary claims and titles to the office and empowering her Majesty to appoint as in other counties. See 13 & 14 Vict. c. 30.

West-Saxon-lage, the laws of the West Saxons.

Whales, like sturgeon, are royal fish, which when taken belong of right to the Crown; but the right to them may be vested in the lord of a manor or other subject by grant from the Crown, or by prescription (Williams on Commons, p. 292).

The whaling industry is regulated by the Whaling Industry (Regulation) Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 49). The Act prohibits the catching and treatment of whales within waters of the United Kingdom and provides for the licensing of whaling ships and whale-oil factories.

Wharf, a broad plain place, near some creek or haven, to lay goods and wares on that are brought to or from the water. See Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 27), s. 68, and Port of London (Consolidation) Act, 1920 (10 Geo. 5, c. clxxiii.).

There are two kinds—1st, legal, which are certain wharves in all seaports, appointed by commission from the Court of Exchequer, or legalized by Act of Parliament; 2nd, sufferance, which are places where certain goods may be landed and shipped, by special sufferance granted by the Crown for that purpose.—2 Steph. Com. See as to both kinds, Customs (Consolidation) Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36). As to larcenies from a wharf, see Larceny Act, 1916, s. 15. As to implied liability or warranty for fitness of wharf for a ship unloading, see The Moorcock, (1889) 14 P. D. 64.

Wharfage, money paid for landing goods at a wharf, or for shipping and taking goods into a boat or barge thence. See London County Council v. General Steam Nav. Co. Ltd., (1907) 97 L. T. 863, and Harbours and Clauses Act, 1847, and Port of London (Consolidation) Act, 1920, supra.

Wharfinger. This term is defined in s. 49 of the Port of London Act, 1908, as follows:—

The expression 'wharfinger' means the occupier of a wharf, quay, warehouse, or granary adjoining the Port of London mainly used for warehousing the goods, imported into the Port of London, of persons other than the occupier of such premises.

See also Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 492.

Wharfingers, who transport goods of their customers by lighter from importing ships, do not come under liability as common carriers (Consolidated Tea, etc., Co. v. Oliver's Wharf, 1910, 2 K. B. 395). As a rule, they have a general lien for the balance of their account. Consult Chitty or Addison on Contracts.

Wheat. See CORN; QUOTA. The Wheat Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 24), was passed to secure to registered growers of wheat grown in the United Kingdom a standard price and a market, and to provide payments by millers and importers of flour by reference to a quota of home-grown wheat and to provide for the purchase by the Flour Millers Corporation representing such millers of unsold stocks of such wheat up to 12½ per cent. of the anticipated home-grown supply at the fair market price in the locality.

Wheelage, duty or toll for carts, etc., passing over certain ground.

Whereas, a word which implies a recital of a fact. The word whereas, when it renders the deed senseless or repugnant, may be struck out as impertinent, and shall not vitiate a deed in other respects sensible. See Platt on Coven. 35.

Whichwood Forest. As to the disafforesting of this, see 16 & 17 Vict. c. 36, and 19 & 20 Vict. c. 32.

Whig, said to be a word meaning sour milk. The name was applied in Scotland, in 1648, to those violent Covenanters who opposed the Duke of Hamilton's invasion of England in order to restore Charles the First. Sir Walter Scott, however, gives a different derivation. Speaking of the rising of the Covenanters on this occasion, he says: 'This insurrection was called the Whigamores' Raid, from the word whig, whig, that is, get on, get on, which is used by the western peasants in driving their horses—a name destined to become the distinction of a powerful party in British history.'—Tales of a Grandfather, ch. xlv.

The appellation of Whig and Tory to political factions was first heard of in 1679, and though as senseless as any cant terms that could be devised, they became instantly as familiar in use as they have since continued.—2 Hallam's Const. Hist., c. 12.

Whig and Tory differed mainly in this, that to a Tory the Constitution, inasmuch as it was the Constitution, with an ultimate point beyond which he never looked, and from which he thought it altogether impossible to swerve: whereas a Whig deemed all forms of government subordinate to the public good, and, therefore, liable to change when they should cease to promote their object. See TORY.

Whipping, a punishment not authorized in modern times except under a statutory enactment (Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914). No person can be whipped more than once for the same offence (ibid., s. 36). Numerous Acts provide for the whipping of boys under 16: adult males may be whipped, e.g., under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1912, when convicted on indictment under the Vagrancy Act, 1898, for the second time, or when convicted of certain offences against women under s. 2 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885; and also for robbery with violence. See VAGRANT; GARROTING.

The punishment was abolished for females by 1 Geo. 4, c. 57. As to the power of justices to order whipping of a male child (7-14), see Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), s. 10, as substituted by the Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 Geo. 5, c. 12), s. 60, 3rd Sched.

Whirligig, or 'merry-go-round,' or 'round-about.' If it be driven by steam power, bye-laws for the prevention of danger from it may be made by an urban authority, under the adoptive Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890.

Whitefriars, a place in London between the Temple and Blackfriars, which was formerly a sanctuary, and therefore privileged from arrest. See ALSATIA.

Whitehart Silver, a mulct on certain lands in or near to the forest of Whitehart, paid into the Exchequer, imposed by Henry III. upon Thomas de la Linda, for killing a beautiful white hart which that king before had spared in hunting.—Camd. Brit. 150.

White Meats, milk, butter, cheese, eggs, and any composition of them.—Cowd.

White Phosphorus. The White Phosphorus Matches Prohibition Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 42), prohibits the use of this substance in the manufacture of matches.

White Rents [reditus albi, Lat.], payments received in silver or white money.—2 Br. & Had. Com. 54; 1 Steph. Com.

White Slave Traffic. See the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 20), as amended by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 56), passed to prevent the procuration and attempted procuration of young girls and women for purposes of prostitution, and to strengthen the criminal law in relation to brothels, procurers, and the immoral trafficking in females.

White-spurs, a kind of esquires.

Whit Monday. See WHITSUNTIDE.

Whitsun Farthings, pentecostals, which see.

Whitsuntide, the Feast of Pentecost, being the fiftieth day after Easter, and the first of the four cross-quarters days of the year.

Whitsuntide offerings were held assessable to income tax in Staney v. Starkey, 1931, 2 K. B. 148.

Whit Monday is, by the 34 & 35 Vict. c. 17, and 38 & 39 Vict. c. 13, made a holiday in banks, custom-houses, docks, inland revenue offices, and bonding-warehouses. Whit Monday is a holiday in the several courts and offices of the Supreme Court (R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LXIII., r. 6).

Whittlewood Forest. As to disafforesting this forest, see 16 & 17 Vict. c. 42; see also 18 & 19 Vict. c. 16.

Whole Blood. 'A kinsman of the whole blood is he that is derived not only from the same ancestor, but from the same couple of ancestors.'—1 Steph. Com.

Wile, a place on the sea-shore or the bank of a river.

Wica, a country house or farm.

Wichenorif, witchcraft.

Widow, a woman whose husband is dead.

A widow is entitled equally with next of kin to administration of her deceased husband's estate subject to the discretion of the Court (see In the Estate of Paine, A. J., (1916) 115 L. T. 935).

In regard to deaths after 1925, by the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 46 :—

(1) The residuary (real and personal) estate of an intestate shall be distributed in the manner or be held on the trusts mentioned in this section, namely :—

(i.) If the intestate leaves a husband or wife (with or without issue) the surviving husband or wife shall take the personal chattels (q.v.) absolutely and in addition the residuary estate of the intestate shall stand charged with the payment of a net sum of 1000*l.* free of death duties and costs to the surviving husband or wife (with interest from date of death at 5 per cent. per annum until paid or appropriated and subject thereto as provided).

(a) If the intestate leaves no issue, upon trust for the surviving husband or wife during his or her life :

(b) If the intestate leaves issue, upon trust as to one-half for the surviving husband or wife during his or her life and subject to such life interest, on the statutory trusts for the issue of the intestate; and as to the other half, on the statutory trusts for the issue of the intestate, but if those trusts fail or determine in the lifetime of a surviving husband or wife of the intestate, then upon trust for the surviving husband or wife during the residue of his or her life.

(ii.) If the intestate leaves issue but no husband or wife, the residuary estate of the intestate shall be held on the statutory trusts for the issue.

And see Legitimacy Act, 1926, s. 9, as to rights of succession of a bastard and succession to a bastard dying intestate. The Statutory Trusts (s. 47) are, in effect, for the children living at the death of the intestate and attaining 21 years or marrying, and the issue of any child predeceasing the intestate, such issue being living at the death of the intestate and attaining 21 years or marrying, per stirpes (q.v.), in equal shares, so that no issue takes more than a parent's share or takes if his parent is living at the death of the intestate. A married infant can give a receipt for income. The statutory powers for advancement, maintenance, accumulation of income and hotchpot (q.v.) are to apply and the personal representatives may allow infants to use personal chattels.

If the intestate leaves no issue surviving him or her and attaining a vested interest, then subject to the life interest of the surviving husband or wife the residuary estate is to be held :—

(iii.) For the intestate's father and mother, if both survive him or her, absolutely, if not,

(iv.) For the one parent, if any surviving, absolutely, if none,

(v.) For brothers and sisters of the whole blood of the intestate under the trusts, if none,

(vi.) For brothers and sisters of the half blood of the intestate under the statutory trusts, if none,

(vii.) Grandparents of intestate, if more than one, in equal shares absolutely, if none,

(viii.) Uncles and aunts of the whole blood of the intestate under the statutory trusts, if none,

(ix.) Uncles and aunts of the half blood in like manner, if none of the above, (x.) For the surviving husband or wife absolutely.

'Statutory trusts' in this connection means the persons named and their issue respectively attaining vested interests upon trusts corresponding to s. 47, supra (see s. 47 (3)). Husband and wife, beneficiaries, count as two persons.

In default of the above, see. BONA VACANTIA. See also DOWER; INHERITANCE; DISTRIBUTION, STATUTE OF; INTESTATES' ESTATES ACT (for deaths before 1926).

Widows are privileged by many statutes—see, e.g., PENSIONS; ACTIO PERSONALIS; HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Widow-Bench, the share of her husband's estate which a widow is allowed besides her jointure.

Widower, one whose wife is dead. A condition in restraint of the second marriage, whether of a man or a woman, is valid (Allen v. Jackson, (1875) 1 Ch. D. 399).

Widow's Chamber. In London the widow of a freeman was, by the custom of the city, entitled to her apparel and the furniture of her bed-chamber, but this custom was abolished by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 94.

Widow's Tercer, the right for life which a wife has after her husband's death to a third of the rents of his heritable estate in Scotland; dower.

Wife [wif, Sax.; wiff, Dut.; wyf, Icel.; uxor, Lat.], a woman that has a husband. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Wife's Equity to a Settlement. See EQUITY TO A SETTLEMENT.

Wigrove, the overseer of a wood.

Wike, a farm.—Co. Litt. 5 a.

Wild Animals, or animals feræ naturæ, animals of an untamable disposition. See ANIMALS, and FERE NATURE.

Wild Birds. See BIRDS.

Wild's Case, Rule in. A devise to B. and his children or issue, B. having no issue at the time of the devise, gives him an estate-tail; but if he have issue at the time, B. and his children may, upon construction, take joint estates for life.—6 Rep. 16 b; Tud. L. C. on Real Property, 2nd ed. 542, 581.

The rule did not apply to personality; see Audsley v. Horn, (1858) 26 Beav. 195, 1 De G. F. & J. 226; 2 Jarm. on Wills; Theobald on Wills.

The rule has apparently been abolished in regard to wills coming into operation after 1925. See TAIL.

Will, Estate at. This estate entitles the grantee or lessee to the possession of land during the pleasure of both the grantor and himself, yet it creates no sure or durable right, and is bounded by no definite limits as to duration. It must be at the reciprocal will of both parties expressly or by implication (Co. Litt. 55 a), and the dissent of either determines it. The grantee cannot transfer the estate to another, although after he has entered into possession he may accept a release of the inheritance from the grantor, for there exists a privity between them. It must end at the death of either party, for death deprives a person of the power of having any will. If a lessee for years accept an estate at will in the property leased, his term of years would in law be surrendered.

An estate at will is created either by the stipulation or express agreement of the parties, or by construction of law.

Sect. 54 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, enacts that a lease by parol for a longer term than three years shall have the force and effect of an estate at will only.

A tenant-at-will is entitled to emblements where his estate is determined by the lessor or by his death, and his personal representatives are entitled to them where the estate is determined by his own death; but if the lessee forfeit or determine the estate himself he is not then entitled to them. He is not bound to maintain or repair the premises, but is liable for wilful waste.

We have seen that either party may determine this estate. The lessor can do so by an express declaration that the lessee shall hold no longer, which should either be made on the land or notice of it served upon the lessee. But if he exercise any right of ownership, unless it be with the lessee's consent, inconsistent with the enjoyment of the estate, as entering upon the land, cutting down trees demised, making a transfer or lease for years to commence immediately, the estate will be determined. So also if the lessee commit an act of desertion or do anything inconsistent with his estate, as assigning it to another person to the landlord's knowledge, or committing waste, but a verbal declaration that he will hold the lands no longer does not determine his estate unless he at the same time waive possession.

If the lessor determine his estate, the tenant-at-will shall have reasonable ingress and egress to take away his goods and chattels without being a trespasser.—Co. Litt. 56 a. But the mere demand of possession by the lessor determines the will (Doe d. Nicholl v. M'Kaeg, (1830) 10 B. & C. 721). Consult Woodfall or Foa on Landlord and Tenant.

Wills, the relation between a master or patron and his freed-man, and the relation between two persons who had made a reciprocal testamentary contract.—Macnaghten's Mahomedan Law, 34 n.

Wills. A will is the valid disposition by a living person, to take effect after his death, of his disposable property. 'But in law ultima voluntas in scriptis is used, where lands or tenements are devised, and testamentum, when it concerneth chattels': Co. Litt. 111 a.

Depository of Will of Living Person.—By the Jud. Act, 1925, s. 172, replacing s. 91 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857:—

There shall, under the control and direction of the High Court, be provided safe and convenient depositories for the custody of the wills of living persons, and any person may deposit his will therein.

And see Administration of Justice Act,

1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 26), s. 11, as to deposit of wills under control of the High Court.

Law before 1838.—The right of testamentary alienation of lands is a matter depending on Act of Parliament. Before 32 Hen. 8, c. 1, a will could not be made of land, and before the Statute of Frauds a will (see NUNCUPATIVE WILL) could be made by word of mouth. Moreover, the testamentary power conferred by the statute of Hen. 8 did not extend to infants or married women. The Statute of Frauds, 1677, by s. 5 required wills of land to be in writing signed by three credible witnesses, and ss. 19–24 required nuncupative wills, where the estate bequeathed should exceed 30*l.*, to be proved by three witnesses at the least, and to have been made at the time of the last sickness of the deceased, and in his dwelling-house or where he had resided ten days before; that after six months no nuncupative will should be proved, unless the words or their substance had been committed to writing within six days; and that no probate should be granted till after fourteen days from the death of the testator. These and many subsequent enactments are all and wholly repealed by s. 2 of the Wills Act, 1837, which does not extend to Scotland, where, as generally in Europe, except in England and Ireland, a man cannot deprive his wife and children of a reasonable part (see REASONABLE PARTS) of his personal property.

The Wills Act, 1837, deals with four classes of subjects touching wills, viz.:—

- (1) What may be the subject-matter of wills.
- (2) Who may execute a will.
- (3) What are the formalities required in the execution of a will.
- (4) How wills are to be construed.

(1) Subject-matter of wills.

The first section enacts that the word 'will' shall extend to a testament, and to a codicil, and to an appointment by will or by writing in the nature of a will in exercise of a power, and to a disposition by will and testament or devise of the custody and tuition of any child, by virtue of 12 Car. 2, c. 24, or of 14 & 15 Car. 2 (Ireland), and to any other testamentary disposition, and also defines the meaning of the words 'real estate' and 'personal estate' as used in the Act.

The second section (repealed by 37 & 38 Vict. c. 35) repeals (amongst others) prior Acts relating to wills, leaving unrepealed, however, that part of Magna Charta which presented to a man's wife and children their 'reasonable parts.' See REASONABLE PARTS.

The third section, termed the 'general enabling clause,' as explained by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 178, enacts that it shall be lawful for every person to devise, bequeath, or dispose of all real and personal estate which he shall be entitled to at the time of his death, notwithstanding that by reason of illegitimacy or otherwise he did not leave an heir or next-of-kin surviving him.

The fourth and fifth sections relate to dispositions of copyhold estates, and the sixth to estates pur autre vie of a freehold nature. See SPECIAL OCCUPANCY.

(2) Who may execute a will.

The seventh section enacts that no will made by any person under the age of twenty-one years shall be valid, repealing the old law, by which an infant of the age of fourteen years if a male, or of twelve years if a female, could make a valid will of personalty, although, not of realty; and the eighth, that no will made by any married woman shall be valid, except such a will as might have been made by a married woman before the passing of the Act; but this section is impliedly repealed by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. See MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY.

(3) How wills are to be executed (ninth section). See EXECUTION OF WILLS; ATTESTATION CLAUSE.

The tenth section requires wills in exercise of powers of appointment to be executed like other wills. See APPOINTMENT.

The eleventh section excepts from the rule that all wills must be in writing, wills of personal estate made by soldiers in actual military service, or seamen at sea. This exception includes military and naval officers of all ranks. A will made under this section requires no attestation, and s. 15 does not apply to it; see Re Limond, 1915, 2 Ch. 240. The Wills (Soldiers and Sailors) Act, 1918, declares that the section authorized any soldier being in actual military service, or any mariner or seaman being at sea, to dispose of his personal estate, although under 21 years of age, as he might have done before the passing of the Act of 1837. Section 11 is extended to members of H.M. naval and marine forces, when so circumstanced that if they were soldiers they would be in actual military service within the section, and 'soldier' now includes a member of the Air Force. The Act of 1918 extends the operation of s. 11 to real property in the case of persons within the section. See NUNCUPATIVE WILL.

The twelfth section (now repealed) dealt with petty officers, seamen, and marines. It has been replaced by the Navy and Marines (Wills) Acts of 1865 to 1930. See above.

The fourteenth section enacts that if any person who shall attest the execution of a will shall, at the time of the execution, or at any time afterwards, be incompetent to be admitted a witness to prove the execution thereof, such will shall not on that account be invalid.

The fifteenth section enacts that if any person who shall attest the execution of any will, to whom or to whose wife or husband any beneficial devise, legacy, estate, interest, gift, or appointment, of or affecting any real or personal estate (other than and except charges and directions for the payment of any debt or debts), shall be thereby given or made, such devise, etc., shall, so far only as concerns such persons attesting the execution of such will, or the wife or husband of such person, or any person claiming under such person or wife or husband, be utterly null and void, and such person so attesting shall be admitted as a witness to prove the execution of such will, or to prove the validity or invalidity thereof, notwithstanding such devises, etc.

The sixteenth section enacts that, in case by any will any real or personal estate shall be charged with any debt or debts, and any creditor, or the wife or husband of any creditor whose debt is so charged, shall attest the execution of such will, such creditor shall be admitted a witness to prove the execution of such will, or to prove the validity or invalidity thereof.

The seventeenth section enacts that no person shall, on account of his being an executor of a will, be incompetent to be admitted a witness to prove the execution of such will or a witness to prove the validity or invalidity thereof.

With regard to the revocation of wills, it is enacted by the eighteenth section that every will shall be revoked by marriage, but if the will has been made in contemplation of a particular marriage it will not be revoked by that marriage: Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 177, and see Sallis v. Jones, 1936, P. 43, except a will made in exercise of a power of appointment, when the estate thereby appointed would not, in default of appointment, pass to the heir, executor, or administrator, or person entitled as next of kin under the Statute of Distributions ; by the nineteenth section, that no will shall be revoked by presumption of an intention on the ground of alteration in circumstances ; by the twentieth section, ' that no will or codicil shall be revoked otherwise than as aforesaid, or by another will or codicil executed in the manner hereinbefore required, or by some writing declaring an intention to revoke the same, and executed in the manner in which a will is hereinbefore required to be executed, or by the burning, tearing, or otherwise destroying the same by the testator, or by some person in his presence and by his direction, with the intention of revoking the same ' ; and by the twenty-third section, ' that no conveyance or other act made or done subsequently to the execution of a will or of relating to any real or personal estate therein comprised, except an act by which such will shall be revoked as aforesaid, shall prevent the operation of the will with respect to such estate or interest in such real or personal estate as the testator shall have power to dispose of by will at the time of his death.'

The twenty-first section relates to obliterations, interlineations, and other alterations in wills, and enacts ' that no obliteration, interlineation, or other alteration made after execution shall be valid except so far as the words or effect of the will before such alteration shall not be apparent, unless such alteration shall be executed as is required for the execution of the will, but the will with such alteration as part thereof shall be deemed to be duly executed if the signature of the testator and the subscription of the witnesses be made in some part of the will.'

As a rule if the testator and each of the witnesses respectively signs his initials in the margin against or near each alteration or interlineation, it will be accepted for probate : see In the Goods of Blewitt, (1880) 5 P. D. 116.

By s. 175 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, contingent, specific or residuary devises of real or personal property carry the income, and see the Trustee Act, 1925, s. 31.

Sect. 179, L. P. Act, 1925, enables testators to incorporate the Statutory Will Forms in their wills : see Statutory Will Forms, 1925, S. R. & O. 1925, No. 780/L 15.

With regard to the revival of a revoked will, provided for by the twenty-second section, see REPUBLICATION OF WILLS.

As to wills of British subjects executed abroad, and of foreigners dying in this country, see DOMICIL, and the Wills Acts, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. cc. 114 and 121), and see RENOVI.

(4) How wills are to be construed.

As to the time from which a will speaks, the twenty-fourth section enacts ' that every will shall be construed, with reference to the real estate and personal estate comprised in it, to speak and take effect as if it had been executed immediately before the death of the testator, unless a contrary intention (see Re Chapman, 1905, A. C. 106, as explained by Re Hewitt, 1926, Ch. 740) shall appear by the will.' The effect of this is that if a legatee die before the testator, the representatives of the legatee take nothing, the legacy 'lapsing' for the benefit of the residuary legatee or next of kin, but from this rule of lapse the thirty-third section makes an important exception for legacies to children or other issue of the testator who may have died leaving issue living at the testator's death : in such a case the legacy takes effect as if the death of the legatee had taken place immediately after the testator's death. And section thirty-two provides in certain events against the lapse of devises of estates tail.

By the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 176, a tenant-in-tail in possession may bar the entail by disposing of the entailed property by his will if executed, confirmed or republished after 1925, by a devise or bequest referring specifically either to the property or the instrument under which it was created or acquired, or to entailed property generally. If not so disposed of, the property does not become subject to his debts and liabilities under s. 176. The section extends to estates tail created either before or after 1925 but does not apply to tenants in tail after possibility of issue extinct or to a tenant-in-tail who is restrained by statute from barring or defeating the entail.

Section twenty-five includes lapsed and void devises in a residuary devise ; section twenty-six makes a good devise of lands include copyholds and leaseholds as well as freeholds ; section twenty-nine provides that words importing failure of issue shall mean issue living at his death ; and sections thirty and thirty-one deal with the estates of trustees.

As to the expressions necessary to execute a general power, the twenty-seventh section enacts that a devise or bequest in general terms of real or personal property shall be construed to include any property coming within the description which the testator may have power to appoint in any manner he may think proper, unless a contrary intention shall appear. Under the old law it was necessary that such a devise or bequest should refer either to the power or to the specific property which was the subject of it, in order that it might have that effect, and this is still the rule where the testator has only a special, as distinguished from a general, power of appointment.

As to the devise of a fee, the twenty-eighth section enacts 'that where any real estate shall be devised to any person without any words of limitation, such devise shall be construed to pass the fee-simple, or other the whole estate or interest which the testator had power to dispose of by will in such real estate, unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will.' Under the old law only a life estate passed, unless words were used to show an intention to pass the fee.

As to stealing wills, see Larceny Act, 1916, s. 6. Forgery of a will is a felony punishable with penal servitude for life: see Forgery Act, 1913, s. 2 (1).

And see Jarman, Hawkins, or Theobald on Wills; and Chit. Stat., tit. 'Wills'; and EXECUTION OF WILLS; LAPSE; PROBATE; MARRIED WOMEN; and, for Scots Law, HOLOGRAFE.

Winchester, the standard measure which was originally kept at Winchester. It was abolished by 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 63.

Windas, or Windlass. See WANLASS.

Winding-up, the process by which an insolvent estate is distributed, as far as it will go, amongst the persons having claims upon it. The term is most frequently applied to the winding-up of joint-stock companies.

The property of a company is collected and distributed firstly in discharge of its liabilities, and secondly, among its members according to their respective rights with a view to its dissolution. If the assets are not sufficient to meet the liabilities, a company is usually wound up by the Court. In other cases the winding-up is usually voluntary and conducted by the company itself either with or without the supervision of the Court. The provisions of the Companies Act, 1929, govern a winding-up in any of these three modes (s. 156). In any winding-up the members who may be called upon to contribute are ascertained and their liability determined under ss. 157-162; see COMPANIES. Debts and claims of all kinds require to be proved and if not of certain value to be estimated justly (s. 261).

If the company is insolvent, the rights of secured and unsecured creditors, the admissibility of debts and claims, and the valuation of annuities and future or contingent liabilities are to be regulated according to the law of bankruptcy (s. 262). Sect. 264 provides for preferential payments and (if the company is registered in England) postpones the claims of debenture holders under any floating charge created by the company, but only so far as the assets are insufficient to meet the claims of the general creditors.

Transactions which would be avoided against an individual in his bankruptcy as a fraudulent preference (Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 44, see FRAUDULENT PREFERENCE) are avoided by s. 265, the commencement of the winding-up being deemed to correspond with the presentation of a bankruptcy petition (for the date of commencement of a winding-up by the Court, see s. 175; of a voluntary winding-up, s. 277), and by s. 266, floating charges created within six months of the commencement of the winding-up are avoided unless the company was solvent immediately after the creation of the charge, subject to the provisions of the section. Onerous property may be disclaimed and rights under process of execution or attachment of creditors are restricted under ss. 267-270. Sects. 271-278 relate to offences, penalties, and the powers of the Court in connection therewith, and, among supplementary provisions, any company in liquidation must state on every invoice or order or business letter in which the name of the company appears that the company is being wound up (s. 280).

Winding-up by the Court may take place (s. 188)—

(1) In pursuance of a special resolution of the company requiring it; or

(2) If default is made in delivering the statutory report to the registrar or in holding the statutory meeting; or

(3) On non-commencement of business within one year from incorporation, or suspension of business for a year; or

(4) On reduction of members to less in number than seven, or, in a private company, below two; or

(5) On the company being unable to pay its debts; or

(6) 'Whenever the Court is of opinion that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up.'

As from the commencement of the winding-up by the Court (see s. 175), any disposition by the company of its property and any transfer of shares or alteration of the status of its members is void unless the Court otherwise orders (s. 173); and every attachment, sequestration, distress or execution if made after commencement is void under s. 174; no action or proceeding shall be proceeded with or commenced against the company except by leave of the Court (s. 177); and in England the liquidator or provisional liquidator is to take the company's property into his custody or under his control.

Voluntary Winding-up may take place (see s. 225)—

(a) By effluxion of time under the articles and by resolution of the company in a general meeting for a voluntary winding-up.

(b) By special resolution to the same effect.

(c) By an extraordinary resolution of the company to the effect that it cannot by reason of its liabilities continue its business and that it is advisable to wind up. Thereupon the business of the company is to cease except for the purposes of a beneficial winding-up, but the corporate state and powers of the company shall continue until it is dissolved (s. 228).

A Member's Voluntary Winding-up.—The name of a voluntary winding-up where the directors or a majority of them have made a statutory declaration that the company will be able to pay its debts in full within 12 months from the commencement of the winding-up (see ss. 230–236); in the absence of this declaration the winding-up is referred to in the Act as a 'creditors' voluntary winding-up' (see ss. 230 and 237–245).

Winding-up Subject to Supervision of the Court is obtained upon petition (Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1929) at any time after a company has passed a resolution for voluntary winding-up. The petition gives the Court jurisdiction over actions, and ss. 173 and 174 (see ante) will apply (ss. 257 and 258). Generally, an order for winding-up subject to the supervision of the Court is deemed to be an order for winding-up by the Court for all purposes except matters set out in the 9th Schedule to the Act (s. 260).

The Regulations of the Companies Act, 1929, relating to winding-up are contained in Part V. of the Act and extend over 137 sections, and see the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1929, S. R. & O. 1929, 612, L/16. See also LIQUIDATOR; DIRECTORS. Consult Buckley on the Companies Acts; Limley on Companies; Palmer's Co. Proc.

Window Cleaning. In urban districts, by

s. 171 of the Public Health Act, 1875, incorporating s. 28 and other sections of the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847:—

Every occupier of any house or other building or other person who orders or permits any person in his service to stand on the sill of any window in order to clean, paint, or perform any other operation on the outside of such window, or upon any house or other building . . . unless such window be in the sunk or basement story, is, if the offence be in any street and to the obstruction, annoyance, or danger of the residents, liable to fine up to forty shillings or to imprisonment up to fourteen days, and any constable of the district is directed to take him into custody without warrant and forthwith convey him before a justice of the peace if the offence shall have been committed within his view.

As to requirements in buildings in the Metropolis, see London Building Acts, and see LIGHT.

Window Tax, a tax on windows, levied on houses which contained more than six windows, and were worth more than 5*l.* per annum; established by 7 Wm. 3, c. 18. The 14 & 15 Vict. c. 36 substituted for this tax a tax on inhabited houses, which tax has been repealed. See HOUSE DUTY.

Windsor Forest, a royal forest founded by Henry VIII. (see 55 Geo. 3, cc. 122, 132, 158).

Wine, Adulteration of, an offence against public health, formerly punished with the forfeiture of 100*l.* if done by the wholesale merchant, and 40*l.* if done by the vintner or retail trader.—12 Car. 2, c. 25, s. 11, repealed by the Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 125). See ADULTERATION.

As to misdescription of 'Port' wine and Madeira, see 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 1, and 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 39.

Wine Licences. See INTOXICATING LIQUORS; the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Intoxicating Liquors'; and Paterson on Licensing.

Winter Circuit, originally an occasional circuit appointed for the trial of prisoners, and in some cases of civil causes, between Michaelmas and Hilary Sittings. See Winter Assize Act, 1876, and ASSIZE. But of late years the circuit held in spring has been termed the 'Winter Circuit.'

Winter Heyning, the season between 11th November and 23rd April, which is excepted from the liberty of commoning in certain forests.—23 Car. 2, c. 3.

Wireless Telegraphy, defined in the Wireless Telegraphy Acts, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 24), s. 7, and 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 67), s. 1, as meaning 'any system of communication by telegraph as defined in the Telegraph Acts, 1863 to 1904, without the aid of any wire connecting the points from and at which the messages or other communications are sent and received,' it being also provided that nothing in the Act shall prevent any person from making or using electrical apparatus for actuating machinery or for any purpose other than the transmission, including the reception as well as the sending, of messages. The Act of 1924 prohibits the establishment of any wireless telegraph station, or the establishment or working of any apparatus for wireless telegraphy, in any place or on board any British ship, except under and in accordance with a licence granted in that behalf by the Postmaster-General. Search-warrants may be issued by order of the Postmaster-General, the Admiralty, Army Council, Air Council, or Board of Trade. The Act extends to the whole of the British Islands, the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man, and to all British ships on the High Seas; with certain regulations (s. 3 (4)), to foreign ships in territorial waters, and see Wireless Telegraphy Order, 1908 (S. R. & O. 1908 (No. 208), s. 3 of 1904). As to foreign ships registered in the United Kingdom in port there, see Merchant Shipping (Wireless Telegraphy) Act, 1919, s. 2 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 38). That Act, as amended by the Merchant Shipping (Safety and Load Line Conventions) Act, 1932 (22 Geo. 5, c. 9) (giving effect to the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea of 1929, set out in the 1st Sched.), provides that the wireless telegraphy rules of the Board of Trade are to give effect to the Convention if not provided for by the Merchant Shipping Acts, and that steamers carrying more than twelve passengers, and ships of 1,600 tons gross tonnage and upwards, must provide wireless installation and services. The Board of Trade may exempt ships from the obligations of either Act under certain circumstances.

Passenger ships of more than 5,000 tons gross tonnage are to be provided with a wireless direction-finding apparatus (1932 Act, s. 6).

The Act of 1904 was originally limited to expire on July 31st, 1906, but is continued annually by an Expiring Laws Continuance Act, and see BROADCASTING.

Wires, Overhead. For power to urban authority to make bye-laws for prevention of danger or obstruction from overhead telegraphic wires: see the Public Health and Local Government Acts. As to the power of the Post Office to place telegraph lines across private property or property belonging to public undertakings, etc., see the Telegraph Acts (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76; 26 & 27 Vict. c. 112; and 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 40), and special or local Acts.

Wisbuy, Ordinances of, a code of maritime jurisprudence compiled at Wisbuy, a town in the Isle of Gothland, principally from the laws of Oleron, in the year 1400, for the governance of the Baltic traders. See 3 Hallam's Middle Ages, c. 9, pt. 2, p. 334.

Wista, half a hide of land, or sixty acres.

Wit, To [scilicet, or videlicet, or viz., Lat.], to know, that is to say, namely.

Witam, the purgation from an offence by the oath of the requisite number of witnesses.

Witchcraft, conjuration; sorcery.

By the Witchcraft Act, 1735 (so styled by the Short Titles Act, 1896) (9 Geo. 2, c. 5), 'no prosecution shall be carried on against any person for witchcraft, sorcery, enchantment, or conjuration, or for charging another with any such offence in Great Britain'; but it is also enacted that all persons pretending to use any kind of witchcraft, etc., shall upon conviction on indictment suffer one whole year's imprisonment, and also be obliged to give sureties for good behaviour if the Court thinks fit (R. v. Stephenson, (1904) 68 J. P. 524). See VAGRANT. Prior to this Act witchcraft was a capital offence (see 1 & 2 Jac. 1, c. 12), and a woman and her daughter aged nine years were hanged at Huntingdon for selling their souls to Satan as recently as 1716, this being the last execution in England for witchcraft. Pope Alexander the Sixth nominated a commission against witchcraft in 1494; five hundred persons were burnt as witches in Geneva in 1515; Sir Matthew Hale condemned the Suffolk witches to be burnt in 1664 (see 6 State Trials, 647); and a woman was burnt in Scotland in 1722, nine having been burnt after their own confession in 1678. See Beet on Evidence, sect. 572; Lecky's Rationalism.

Wite [Sax.], a punishment, pain, penalty, mulct, or criminal fine.

The wite was a penalty paid to the Crown by a murderer. The were was the fine a murderer had to pay to the family or relatives of the deceased, and the wite was the fine paid to the magistrate who presided over the district where the murder was perpetrated. Thus, the wite was the satisfaction to be rendered to the community for the public wrong which had been committed, as the were was to the family for their private injury.—Bosworth's Anglo-Saxon Dict.

Witeken, a taxation of the West Saxons.

Witena-gemot, or Wittena-gemote [fr. witta, Sax., a wise man, and gemot, a synod or council], the great council by which an Anglo-Saxon king was guided in all the main acts of government. It was composed of prelates and abbots, of the aldermen of shires, and, as it is generally expressed, of the noble and wise men of the kingdom. Whether the lesser thanes were entitled to a place is not certain.—2 Hallam's Middle Ages, c. 8, pt. 1.

Witens, the chiefs of the Saxon lords or thanes, the nobles and wise men.

Withdrawal of Juror. When a jury cannot agree upon a verdict, or even merely for the sake of compromise, one of them is often withdrawn by consent of the litigants, so as to put an end to the proceedings; but there may be a re-trial on breach of terms.—Thomas v. Exeter, etc., Co., (1887) 18 Q. B. D. 822.

Withernam [fr. wieder, Sax., other, and naam, a taking], reprisals. See CAPIAS IN WITHERNAM.

Withersake, an apostate, or perfidious renegade.

Withholding of Food. By the Unreasonable Withholding of Food Supplies Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 51), power was given to the Board of Trade, during the Great War, to take possession of food-stuffs unreasonably withheld.

Without Impeachment of Waste. See ABSQUE IMPETITIONE VASTI; WASTE.

Without Prejudice, a phrase used in offers, in order to guard against any waiver of right; also for the purposes of negotiating a compromise. See PREJUDICE, WITHOUT.

Without Recourse to Me [sans recours], a phrase used by an indorser of a bill or note, which protects him from liability.—Byles on Bills. See SANS RECOURS.

Without Reserve. See AUCTION.

Witness, one who gives evidence in a cause.

A witness must attend in court according to the requirement of his subpoena. If he has not been paid his lawful expenses, he may refuse to be sworn; but if he be once sworn, he must give his evidence. See OATH and AFFIRMATION.

In civil cases, as a rule, husband and wife are competent and compellable witnesses against each other (Evidence Amendment Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 83), s. 1), but husbands and wives are not compellable to disclose communications between each other (s. 3, ibid.). As to criminal cases, see Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, as amended, and that title.

A witness is not obliged to answer any question which tends to criminate him.

On the application of either party, all the witnesses on both sides are ordered to leave the court until called; and each is only called when his evidence is actually required. If a witness who has been ordered out of court remains, it is a contempt, if wilful, and may be treated as such; but his evidence is not rejected. Each witness remains in court after he has given his evidence, and is expected not to communicate with those outside. But every party to the cause is entitled to be present throughout, though he be about to give evidence. The application is made either before the opening of the case, or before the first witness is called.

A witness cannot leave the precincts of the court without leave after the evidence of the side is over, nor even when the judge has begun to sum up, for any witness may at the discretion of the judge be recalled at any time before the verdict is given.

See especially title EVIDENCE; EXPERTS; and see also SUBPENA; VOIR DIRE; CRIMINAL EVIDENCE ACT, 1898; PREJURY; CONDUCT-MONEY; CHARACTER; WILLS and ATTESTATION.

Wittena-gemote. See WITENA-GEMOT.

Wold [Sax.], a down or open country.

Wolteshead, or Wolferhufod [Sax.], the condition of such as were outlawed in the time of the Saxons, who if they could not be taken alive to be brought to justice might be slain and their heads brought to the King; for they were no more accounted of than a wolf's head.—Bract. l. 3.

Woman. By the Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 1, reproducing 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 3, words in any Act of Parliament passed after 1850 importing the masculine gender include females unless the contrary intention appears. Women became qualified to be registered as apothecaries by the Apothecaries Amendment Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 34), s. 5; as surgeons by the College of Surgeons Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 43), s. 2; and as medical practitioners by the Medical Amendment Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 41), s. 1, and see infra.

The Sex Disqualification (Removal) Act, 1919, s. 1, provides that a person shall not be disqualified by sex or marriage from the exercise of any public function, or from being appointed to or holding any civil or judicial office or post, or from entering or assuming or carrying on any civil profession or vocation, or for admission to any incorporated society (whether incorporated by Royal Charter or otherwise), and a person shall not be exempted by sex or marriage from the liability to serve as a juror. A peeress in her own right is not entitled to a writ of summons to the House of Lords (Rhondda's (Viscountess) Petition, 1922, 2 A. C. 339).

The Parliamentary Franchise was extended to women by the Representation of the People Act, 1918, which also contains provisions regulating the registration of women as local government electors, and the Representation of the People (Equal Franchise) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 12). See ELECTORAL FRANCHISE.

The Parliament (Qualification of Women) Act, 1918, provides that a woman shall not be disqualified by sex or marriage for being elected to or sitting or voting as a member of the Commons House of Parliament.

Under the British North America Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 3), s. 24, 'persons' includes women (Edwards v. A.-G. for Canada, 1930, A. C. 124).

As to employment of women in factories, see Factory and Workshop Acts, 1901 to 1929, especially the employment of women (Young Persons and Children Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 65)), for the purpose of which 'woman' means, by s. 156 of the Act of 1901, a woman of eighteen years of age or upwards, and by s. 61 of which a woman may not be employed at any time during four weeks after childbirth. The Coal Mines Act, 1911, and the Metalliferous Mines Act, 1872, prohibit employment below ground in coal and metalliferous mines; and the Agricultural Gangs Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 130), regulates it in agricultural gangs. See LAUNDRY.

At Common Law words imputing unchastity to a woman required special damage to be actionable; but this injustice was put an end to by the Slander of Women Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 51).

As to the national status of married women, in accordance with the Hague Convention of the 12th April, 1930, on the conflict of nationality laws, see the British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 49), substituting a new s. 10 in the Act of 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 17), and see also ss. 11 and 12 of the 1914 Act.

See MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY ACT.

Wong [Sax.], a field.—Spelman.

Wontner, a mole-catcher: Williams on Rights of Common, p. 102.

Wood-corn, a certain quantity of grain paid by the tenants of some manors to the lord for the liberty to pick up dried or broken wood.

Wood-geld, or Pudzeld, is to be free from payment of money for taking of wood in any forest.—Co. Litt. 233 a.

Woodmote. See FOREST COURTS.

Wood-Plea-Court, a court held twice in the year in the forest of Clun, in Shropshire, for determining all matters of wood and agistments.

Woods and Forests. A Government Department which managed the Crown Lands and collected all the Land Revenue of the Crown which goes to the public account. The Department was presided over by two Commissioners, to whom the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries was added as a third Commissioner, ex officio, by the Crown Lands Act, 1906; by Order in Council (S. R. & O. 1924 (No. 1370)) the name of the Commissioners was altered to Commissioners of Crown Lands. See CROWN LANDS; AGRICULTURE AND FISHERIES, MINISTRY OF.

Woodwards, officers of the forest, whose duty consists in looking after the wood and vert and venison and preventing offences relating to the same.—Manw. 189.

Woolmer Forest. As to disafforesting it, see 18 & 19 Vict. c. 46. See also as to leasing, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 16; and as to timber, 52 Geo. 3, c. 71, and 18 & 19 Vict. c. 46.

Woolsack, the seat of the Lord Chancellor in the House of Lords. When, in the reign of Elizabeth, an Act of Parliament was passed to prevent the exportation of wool, to keep in mind this source of our national wealth, woolsacks were placed in the House of Lords, whereon the judges sat.

Words. See DEFAMATION.

Workhouses, municipal institutions for the support and maintenance of poor persons. See Poor Law Act, 1930 (20 Geo. 5, c. 17), ss. 21 to 34; POOR LAWS. As to the position of the inmates of workhouses under the National Insurance Acts (Health and Unemployment), see NATIONAL INSURANCE, and in respect of old age and contributory pensions, see PENSIONS.

Workmen, those earning their livelihood by manual labour.

Workmen's Dwellings.—See HOUSING OF THE WORKING CLASSES.

As to facilities for small dwellings not exceeding a rateable value of 100*l.* a year, see Settled Land Act, 1925, ss. 57, 107 and 117. See LABOURERS' DWELLINGS.

Workmen (Unemployed).—The Local Government Act, 1929 (19 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 12, repealed the Unemployed Workmen Act, 1905, which established distress committees, whose functions were to ascertain conditions of labour in London and, by order of the Local Government Board (now Ministry of Health), other boroughs and districts, and assist applicants honestly desirous of obtaining work by more suitable treatment than under the poor law and (subject to the superintendence of a central body) by emigration or removal to another area; the funds being provided by a rate limited to one penny in the pound.

By the Unemployment Assistance Act, 1934, i.e., Part II. of the Unemployment Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 29), the Unemployment (Temporary) Provisions Act, 1935, and No. 2, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 6, and 25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 22), an Unemployment Assistance Board has been set up under the Ministry of Health. The functions of the Board are the assistance of persons (a) within the Contributory Pensions Acts (see PENSION), and (b) persons unemployed after attaining the age of 16 years, who might have reasonably expected to have been employed so as to qualify under those Acts if the industrial circumstances of the district had permitted, if such persons are in need of work; the promotion of their welfare; and, in particular, fitting them to obtain or return to regular employment; and the grant of unemployment allowances (ss. 35 and 36 of 1934 (c. 29)); employment lost or estimated to have been lost owing to stoppage of work due to a trade dispute will disqualify for an allowance (ibid.). Provision is made for training courses for persons above 18 years of age (ss. 37 and 43); the circumstances in which allowances may be granted are indicated (s. 38); and see the Act of 1935 (c. 6) and Unemployment Insurance Act, 1935, s. 54; officers of the Board are to determine applications (s. 39); appeals are provided for by s. 36. Sects. 44 to 47 and the temporary Act of 1935 (c. 22) relate to finance. An Unemployment Assistance Fund has been created to defray the general expenses, consisting partly of contributions by county and county borough councils and partly of moneys provided by Parliament.

As to Unemployment Insurance, see NATIONAL INSURANCE ACTS.

Workmen's Compensation Act. The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, introduced the principle of compulsory insurance of workmen by employers in a restricted number of trades. The gist of a right to compensation under the Acts is 'accident arising out of and in the course of the employment' causing personal injury to a workman (Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 84), s. 1 (1)). The compensation is not damages for negligence or any other tort at common law or by statute (see CAMPBELL (LORD) ACTS (Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846–1908) and Employers Liability Act, 1880, sub tit. MASTER AND SERVANT), and an employer is not liable both for damages and compensation; but the workman or his representatives may elect between the remedies, and in an unsuccessful action for damages the Court may assess or refer the question of compensation to the proper tribunal, subject to an equitable order for costs (Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, s. 25). Compensation is not payable for an injury which does not disable the workman for at least three days from earning full wages in his employment (s. 1 (1) (a), ibid.), and serious and wilful misconduct may disqualify unless the injury results in death or serious and permanent disablement (s. 1 (1) (b), as explained by s. 1 (2)); contracting out is not allowed except under a scheme made under the Act (s. 1 (3)). Notice, verbal or written, is necessary (s. 14) within six months from the accident, or in case of death, from time of death.

The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, together with the Act of 1900, which brought agricultural labourers into the benefits of the earlier Act, were repealed by the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 58), which very largely increased the scope and character of this particular legislation, but, like the earlier Acts, was very fruitful in litigation. The Act was amended and extended by the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923, which repealed the Workmen's Compensation (War Addition) Acts, 1917 and 1919, and provided (inter alia) for a permanent increase of compensation, and was finally repealed by the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 84).

The Act of 1925 by s. 3 (1) defines 'workman' as 'any person who has entered into or works under a contract of service or apprenticeship with an employer, whether by way of manual labour, clerical work or otherwise, and whether the contract is express or implied, is oral or in writing, and also includes a person engaged in plying for hire with any vehicle or vessel the use of which is obtained from the owner thereof under any contract of bailment (other than a hire purchase agreement) in consideration of the payment of a fixed sum or a share in the earnings or otherwise.'

And s. 35 includes masters, seamen and apprentices to the sea service and apprentices in the sea-fishing service.

Except by s. 3 (2), persons (a) not employed in manual labour whose remuneration exceeds 350*l.* a year; (b) employees in casual work which is not part of the employer's trade or business, and not engaged or paid by a club for games or recreation; (c) members of a police force; (d) outworkers; (e) a member of the employer's family living in his house; (f) in the naval, military, or air services, and certain fishermen are excluded (see s. 35 (2)).

In s. 5 (1) 'employer' is defined as including 'any body of persons corporate or unincorporate and the legal personal representative of a deceased employer, and where the services of a workman are temporarily lent or let on hire to another person by the person with whom the workman has entered into a contract of service or apprenticeship, the latter shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to continue to be the employer of the workman whilst he is working for that other person.'

Also (2) the owners of vehicles or vessels plying for hire, let or under bailment to persons so engaged.

(3) the managers of a games club.

As to accidents and industrial diseases within the ambit of the Act, see ACCIDENT to WORKMAN, and the Act of 1925, ss. 43 (1); Sched. III., s. 471, and subsequent orders by the Home Secretary under s. 43 (3); also the Workmen's Compensation (Silicosis and Asbestosis) Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 29), and Wragg v. Samuel Fox & Co., 1937, A. C. 442.

The Act is, apart from seamen, limited to employment within the ambit of the United Kingdom (Tomalin v. Pearson, 1909, 2 K. B. 61), the Channel Islands or the Isle of Man (s. 16 of 1925). The question as to whether a contract of service exists is one of fact in each case (Simmons v. Heath Laundry Co., 1910, 1 K. B. 543).

Compensation is payable in respect of personal injury by accident (see ACCIDENT) to the workman or his dependants (see DEPENDANT), and the amount is based upon his average weekly earnings (s. 9). The minimum compensation payable in case of death of a workman who leaves dependants on his earnings is from 200*l.* to 300*l.*, and the total amount of compensation payable, 600*l.* (s. 8).

The procedure is not by way of action, but is by reference to an arbitration, generally a county court judge, from whom an appeal lies direct to the Court of Appeal. See ss. 21 and 28 and Sched. I., ibid., and County Court Rules.

See the Act of 1925 and the Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1926. Sect. 37 gives power to make Orders in Council giving effect to any convention with a Foreign State providing for reciprocity in matters relating to workmen's compensation, and in particular the Anglo-French Convention of 1909 (see Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1925, Rules 68 et seq.). Consult Willis or Ruegg on Workmen's Compensation; Chartres' Judicial Interpretations; Workmen's Compensation Reports.

Workshop, for the purpose of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22), means hat works, rope works, bakehouses, lace warehouses, shipbuilding works, quarries, pit banks, dry-cleaning, carpet-beating, and bottle-washing works, and any premises named in Part II. of the 6th Schedule, not being a 'factory' where manual labour is used for gain, or for making, repairing, or adapting for sale any article, in premises to which the employer has a right of access, including laundries, as provided by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 39), s. 1; all consolidated and repealed by the Factories Act, 1937, and cf. FACTORY.

Worsecott 'is an old English word and signifieth libertum esse de oneribus armorum.'—Co. Litt. 71 a.

Worship, place of, defined in Stradling v. Higgins, 1932, 1 Ch. 143, for the purposes of the Places of Worship (Enfranchisement) Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 56), which enables trustees of a leasehold interest in places of public worship to enlarge the interest into the freehold in not more than two acres, subject to the provisions of the Act.

The Places of Worship Sites Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 50), as extended by the Amendment Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 21), enabled sites not exceeding one acre to be conveyed for purposes of worship. See also PUBLIC WORSHIP.

Worship, a title of respect applied to a magistrate.

Wort, new beer unfermented or in the act of fermentation; the sweet infusion of malt or grain. As to its exportation, see 29 & 30 Vict. c. 64.

Wort or Worth [fr. weorth, Sax.], a curtilage or country farm.

Worthing of Land, a certain quantity of land so called in the manor of Kingsland in Hereford; the tenants are called worthies.—Jac. Law Dict.

Wound, any lesion of the body, whether cut, bruise, contusion, fracture, dislocation, or burn. In surgery it is confined to a solution of continuity in any part of the body, suddenly caused by anything that cuts or tears, with a division of the skin.

Wounding. Unlawfully and maliciously wounding or causing grievous bodily harm with intent to do grievous bodily harm to any person by any means is, by s. 18 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, a felony, punishable up to penal servitude for life; and by s. 19 of the same Act unlawfully and maliciously wounding or inflicting any grievous bodily harm is a misdemeanour punishable by five years' penal servitude.

Wreccum maris significat illa bona quæ naufragio ad terram pelluntur.—(A wreck of the sea signifies those goods which are driven to shore from a shipwreck.)

Wreck, such goods, including the ship or cargo or any part (Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 518 to 522, and Hals. L. E., sub tit. 'Shipping'; Part XII., 'Wreck'), as, after a shipwreck, are afloat or cast upon the land by the sea. According to an old definition (Jacob's Law Dict., tit. 'Wreck') they were not wrecks so long as they remained at sea in the jurisdiction of the Admiralty. By s. 510 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, 'wreck' includes in that Act 'jetsam, flotsam, and derelict found in or on the shores of the sea or any tidal water.'

The term is used in several senses, e.g., a ship which is so damaged as to be unable to continue her voyage is a 'wreck' for the purposes of s. 158 of the M. S. Act, 1894; and Barras v. Aberdeen Steam Trawlers, 1933, A. C. 402, under the Merchant Shipping (International Labour Conventions) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 42); The Olympic, 1913, P. 92. The old distinction appears to be that if property could be identified by its owner it was not wreck, i.e., property which the Crown could claim as part of its prerogative.—Hals. L. E., loc. cit.

Sects. 511-528 of the M. S. Act, 1894, deal generally with the custody of wreck by district 'receivers' of wreck (as by the sheriffs of the counties under the ancient law), and the suppression of plunder by them, the claims of the owners within one year (s. 521) (formerly a year and a day), and the title of the Crown to unclaimed wreck except in cases where any other person has a right to wreck by royal grant (s. 522).

This revenue of wrecks was frequently granted to lords of manors as a royal franchise. It is a branch of the coroner's office to inquire concerning shipwrecks and certify whether there has been a wreck or not, and who is in possession of the goods.

The offence of stealing any part of vessels wrecked, stranded, or cast on shore, or any goods, etc., belonging to such vessels, is a felony (Larceny Act, 1916, s. 15). Persons in possession of shipwrecked goods who cannot satisfy a justice that they came by them lawfully may be imprisoned, or forfeit 20*l.* beyond the value (Larceny Act, 1861, s. 65). A similar punishment is attached to the offence of offering or exposing shipwrecked goods for sale which have been, or shall reasonably be suspected to have been, taken from the wreck, if the person offering or exposing them do not satisfy a justice that he came by them lawfully (ibid., s. 66). The offence of unlawfully and maliciously destroying any part of a wreck, or any goods, etc., belonging to it, is a felony (Malicious Damage Act, 1861, s. 49).

As to impeding a person saving his own or another's life from a wreck, see Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 17. As to assaulting a magistrate, officer, etc., engaged in preserving a wreck or goods cast on shore, see s. 37 of that Act.

The Removal of Wrecks Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 16), gave power to harbour and conservancy authorities to remove wrecks obstructing navigation; an amending Act of 1889 (52 Vict. c. 5) extended the protection from obstruction to lifeboats engaged in lifeboat service; and these enactments are now replaced by ss. 530-534 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.

Under s. 477 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, the Lord Chancellor has power to appoint not more than three wreck commissioners to hold formal investigations into shipping casualties under ss. 464 et seq. (Part VI.) of the Act. Preliminary inquiries may be held by coastguard or custom officers or persons appointed by the Board of Trade. A stipendiary magistrate, when a member of the local marine board, is empowered to preside at investigations and inquiries.

As to property in wreck generally, see 1 Bl. Com. 291; Williams on Rights of Common, p. 289; Co. Litt. 261 a, and Mr. Hargrave's note.

Wreck-free, exemption from the forfeiture of shipwrecked goods and vessels, which the Cinque Ports enjoy by a charter of Edward I.—Jac. Law Dict.

Writ [breve, Lat.], a judicial process, by which any one is summoned as an offender; a legal instrument to enforce obedience to the orders and sentences of the courts. For the particular writs, see their distinctive names, as assistance, capias, etc.

The Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, abolished all writs in real and mixed actions (except in dower unde nihil habet, quare impedit or ejection), expressly naming sixty abolished writs (e.g., the writ of right de rationabili parte, of quo jure, of assize of novel disseisin, of entry sur disseisin in the quibus, of waste, of partition, and of per quæ servitia). See also Co. Litt.; Hargr. and Butler's Notes to s. 101, and Index to Notes, ibid., 18th ed.

The most used modern writ is the Writ of Summons, by which (corresponding to the 'Plaint' in a County Court) an action in the High Court of Justice is commenced. See SUMMONS, and for other writs in actions see EXECUTION, ELEGIT, FIERI FACIAS, POSSESSION, and VENDITIONI EXPOSAS. For writs not in actions, see CERTIORARI, MANDAMUS, PROHIBITION, and QUO WARRANTO.

Writ of Trial. See 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 17, repealed by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 142, s. 6.

Writer of the Tallies, an officer of the Exchequer, who acted as clerk to the auditor of the receipt, who wrote upon the tallies the teller's bills. See TALLY.

Writers to the Signet, designated by the letters W.S., or, in the case of three of the older established firms in Edinburgh, the letters C.S. (which stand for the words 'Clerks to the Signet'), are the senior Society of Solicitors or Law Agents in Scotland. Formerly many privileges were extended to this Society, but most of these have disappeared. See SIGNET and Administration of Justice (Scotland) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 41), s. 8; see also Bell's Scots Law Dict., voce 'Clerk to the Signet.'

Writing, in any Act of Parliament, shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be construed as including printing, lithography, photography, and other modes of representing or reproducing words in a visible form.—Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 20.

Writings, Obligatory, bonds. See BOND.

Writs for the Election of Members of Parliament. The Speaker of the House of Commons is empowered to issue warrants, during any recess of the House, for making out new writs for the election of persons in the room of members accepting certain offices.

Wrong, the privation of right, an injury, a designed or known detriment. See TORT, and Addison or Clerk and Lindsell on Torts.

The maxim that 'No man can take advantage of his own wrong' means that a man cannot enforce against another a right arising from his own breach of contract or breach of duty (Re London Celluloid Co., (1888) 39 Ch. D. p. 206, per Bowen, L.J.).

An estate gained by wrong is always a fee simple. A squatter may, of course, be ejected before the Statute of Limitations has run in his favour, but as long as he remains he has seisin of the freehold to him and his heirs, 'because wrong is unlimited and ravens all that can be gotten and is not governed by terms of the estates, because it is not contained within rules': Hob. p. 323; Co. Litt. 181 a; Williams on Seisin, p. 7. But a squatter is bound by restrictive covenants affecting the land (Re Nisbet, 1906, 1 Ch. 386).

Wrongdoer. See CONTRIBUTION.

Wrongful Dismissal. A wrongful dismissal is an unjustifiable dismissal of a servant by the master from an engagement for services for a fixed time or, if upon notice, before expiration of the period of notice. The servant may elect to treat the contract as repudiated (General Bill Posting Co. v. Atkinson, 1909, A. C. 118; and see Measures, Ltd. v. Measures, 1910, 2 Ch. 248), in which case he can recover wages actually earned on a quantum meruit (see Cutter v. Powell, (1795) 6 Term Rep. 320, and Notes, Sm. L. C.), or if he treats the contract as continuing, he may sue for damages for loss of service and such wages as he has lost the opportunity of earning, taking into account the probability of finding another employment of the same kind and degree (see Bruce v. Calder, 1895, 2 Q. B. 253), but he cannot sue for a quantum meruit as well as on the contract. The custom that a domestic servant may be dismissed at any time by a month's notice or payment of a month's wages has been judicially proved (Mould v. Halliday, 1898, 1 Q. B. 125).

Punitive damages are not to be included and the plaintiff must take diligent steps to find other suitable employment (Beckham v. Drake, (1849) 2 H. L. C. 579).

Wrongous Imprisonment, false imprisonment.—Scots term.

Wydraught, a water-passage, gutter, or watering-place; often mentioned in old leases of houses, in the covenant to repair.—Jac. Law Dict.

Wynton, Statute of (13 Edw. 1, st. 2, A.D. 1285). Chapter 6, which prohibits the holding of fairs and markets in churchyards, is still in force. The remaining chapters were repealed as to England by the Criminal Law Act, 1827, and as to Ireland by the Statute Law Revision (Ireland) Act, 1872.

X.

Xenodoceum, or Xenodocheum, an inn, a hospital.—Cowel.

Xenodochy [fr. ξενοδοχία, Gk.], reception of strangers; hospitality.—Encyc. Londin.

Y.

Yacht, a vessel used primarily for pleasure purposes. Sect. 260 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, includes pleasure yachts in Part II. of the Act, except certain provisions set out in s. 262. British yachts must be registered under the Act (see BRITISH SHIP), unless they do not exceed 15 tons net register and are employed solely in navigation in home waters or a British possession in which the managing owner resides (see s. 3, ibid.). Pleasure yachts are also exempt from the Load Line and Loading Provisions (Part II., ss. 40–67) of the Merchant Shipping (Safety and Load Line Conventions) Act, 1932 (22 Geo. 5, c. 9). The Sea Regulations, 1910 (S. R. & O. 1910, p. 457), apply to sea-going yachts.

Yard [fr. geard, Sax.], an enclosed space of ground, generally attached to a dwelling-house, etc. Also a measure of three feet, or thirty-six inches, in length; see Weights and Measures Act, 1878, s. 10.

Yardland (virgata terræ, Lat.), a quantity of land differing in extent in different parts of the country, generally about twenty acres; see Co. Litt. 5 a, 69 a.

Year [fr. gear, Sax.], 365 days, twelve calendar months, fifty-two weeks and one day, or in Leap Year (q.v.) 366 days, i.e., fifty-two weeks and two days.

The first day of the year was legally altered for England from the 25th of March to 1st of January in and after 1752 by the Calendar (New Style) Act, 1750 (24 Geo. 2, c. 23) (Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Time'), but as appears from the preamble to that statute, the 1st of January had been the first day of the year in Scotland, in other nations, and by common usage throughout the whole kingdom. See CALENDAR. Generally, when a statute speaks of a year it must be considered as twelve calendar and not lunar months.—Bishop of Peterborough v. Catesby, (1608) Cro. Jac. 166.

For the termination of the statutory year for certain financial and other administrative purposes, e.g., income tax, land tax, etc., see Chron. Tab. of Statutes, tit. 'Year.' The unemployment insurance year ends on the Sunday preceding the 27th Monday of the calendar year (Unemp. Ins. Act, 1935 (25 Geo. 5, c. 8), s. 113).

Year and Day [annus et dies, Lat.], a time that determines a right or works a prescription, etc., in many cases; see Jac. Law Dict.; Co. Litt. 254 b. A person wounded must die within a year and a day in order to make the offender guilty of murder: 3 Inst. 53; 6 Rep. 107; and see WRECK.

Year-books, or Books of Years and Terms, reports, in a regular series, from the time of King Edward II. to Henry VIII., which were taken by the prothonotaries or chief scribes of the courts, at the expense of the Crown, and published annually; hence their denomination. The Year-books are valuable as documents of progressive law, although they have not been classified or digested in the manner of later reports. See REPORTS.

Year, Day, and Waste [annus, dies et vastum, Lat.], a part of the royal prerogative, whereby the Crown had for a year and a day the profits of lands and tenements of those attainted of petit treason or felony, whose ever was lord of the manor whereto the lands or tenements belonged; and the right to cause waste to be made on the tenements by destroying the houses, ploughing up the meadows and pastures, rooting up the woods, etc. (unless the lord of the fee agreed for the redemption of such waste), afterwards restoring them to the lord of the fee. Staund. Prærog. 44. This prerogative was abolished by 54 Geo. 3, c. 145.

Year to Year, Tenancy from. This estate arises either expressly, as when land is let from year to year, or by a general parol demise, without any determinate interest, but reserving the payment of an annual rent; or impliedly, as when property is occupied generally under a yearly rent, payable yearly, half-yearly, or quarterly; or when such tenant holds over, after the expiration of his term, without having entered into any new contract, and pays rent (before which he is a tenant on sufferance), and in such cases the tenant holds over on such terms of the old tenancy lease as are applicable to a tenancy from year to year and to the particular tenancy.

The qualities which distinguish a tenancy from year to year from proper terms for years, and from estates at will, are (1) that it exists by construction of law alone instead of an estate at will in every instance where a possession is taken with the consent of the legal owner and where an annual rent has been paid, but without there having been any conveyance or agreement conferring a legal interest; and (2) that, whether it arises from express agreement, or by implication of law, it may, unless surrendered or determined by a regular notice to quit, subsist for an indefinite period, if the estate of the lessor will allow of it, or for the whole term of his estate where it is of a limited duration, unaffected by the death either of the lessor or lessee, or by a conveyance of their estate by either of them; so that the assigns, or real or personal representatives, of the former, according to the quantity of his estate, and the assignees, or personal representatives, of the latter, still continue the tenancy upon the original terms, and subject to the same conditions which the law, or the express agreement of the parties, has attached to it.

But the tenancy is liable at any time to be determined by a notice to quit from either party, which, where there is no agreement, or where the agreement is silent on that point, must be at least half a year's (not merely six months'), or where the Agricultural Holdings Act applies, one year's notice to give up possession at the expiration of the year, computing from the time when the tenancy commenced. An oral notice is sufficient unless the agreement requires it to be in writing (per Lord Ellenborough, C.J., in Doe v. Crick, (1805) 5 Esp. N. P. C. 197); but for the sake of evidence it is always advisable to give a written notice. Consult Foa or Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant.

Years, Estate for. See TERMS FOR YEARS.

Yelverton's Act. An Act of the Irish Parliament (21 & 22 Geo. 3, c. 48), extending the principle of 'Poynings' Act' (which see) to private estate Acts and shipping Acts.

Yeme [fr. Yeme, Lat.], winter.

Yeoman, or Yoman, a man of a small estate in land; a farmer, a gentleman farmer; also, a 40s. freeholder not advanced to the rank of a gentleman; the highest order among the plebeians.—2 Inst. 668.

Yeomanry, the collected body of yeomen.

Yeomanry Cavalry, a denomination given to those troops of horse which were levied among the gentlemen and yeomen of the country, upon the same principle as the Volunteer companies. See the National Defence Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 31); and the Militia and Yeomanry Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7), s. 14. As to the former powers of the lords lieutenant of counties in reference to this force, see title LORD LIEUTENANT. The units composing the force were transferred to the Territorial Force by the Territorial Army and Militia Act, 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. 37). See TERRITORIAL ARMY.

Yeomen of the Guard, properly called yeomen of the guard of the royal household; a picked body of men, attached to the Lord Chamberlain's office, Buckingham Palace. As to their establishment, see 2 Hall. Const. Hist., c. 9.

Yeven, or Yeoven, given; dated.

Yielding and Paying, the first words of the reddendum clause in a lease. See REDDENDUM; Platt on Covenants.

Yokelet [fr. joccelet, Sax.], a little farm, requiring but a yoke of oxen to till it.

York, Duke of. See MILITARY ASYLUM OF CHELSEA.

York, Province of. Its special customs were abolished by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 94.

York, Statute of (12 Edw. 2, st. 1, A.D. 1318), repealed by the Statute Law Revision and Civil Procedure Act, 1881.

York-Antwerp Rules. Optional rules of practice on the subject of general average for the assistance of shipowners, merchants, underwriters and average-adjusters for insertion in bills of lading, charter-parties and policies of insurance. The rules were adopted as a result of a conference of the Association for Reform and Codification of the Law of Nations at Antwerp in 1877. The Average Adjusters' Rules adopted by the English Association of English Average Adjusters have been drawn for the same purpose.

Yorkshire Registry Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 54), consolidating and amending the Acts relating to the registration of deeds, wills, and other assurances (see the wide meaning of the term in s. 3 of the Act of 1884) in the North (8 Geo. 2, c. 6), East (6 Anne, c. 2), and West (3 & 3 Anne, c. 4, and 6 Anne, c. 20) Ridings of the County of York, for the purpose of giving them priority according to the date of registration irrespectively of notice alvunde (s. 14) (see NOTICE); and Battison v. Hobson, 1896, 2 Ch. 403; Gresham Assurance Society v. Crouther, 1915, 1 Ch. 214.

By the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 11:—

(1) It shall not be necessary to register a memorial of any instrument made after the commencement of this Act in any local deeds registry unless the instrument operates to transfer or create a legal estate or to create a charge thereon by way of legal mortgage; nor shall registration of a memorial of any instrument not required to be registered affect any priority.

Among registrable documents otherwise than by memorial are caveats which still require to be registered in the Yorkshire Registers (see Yorkshire Registries Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 26), s. 3). Tacking is not allowed under the Yorkshire Registries Acts, s. 94; Law of Property Act, 1925 (much to the same effect) (see TACKING and FURTHER ADVANCES), may not perhaps apply to the Yorkshire Registries, as s. 16 of the Yorkshire Registry Act, 1884, has not been repealed or amended. The registration after 1925 of a memorial, if registrable (see s. 11, supra), constitutes actual notice (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 197). Under s. 198 (ibid.) registration in the Yorkshire Register under the Land Charges Act, 1925 (see s. 10 (6) of that Act), also constitutes actual notice. Priorities appear to be regulated by the Yorkshire Registry Act, 1884. See L. P. Act, 1925, ss. 97 and 197, and Wolst. and Ch. Conv. Acts; notes to s. 197 (1). Under the Yorkshire Act, registration does not give priority in case of fraud.

Assurances of and charges on land partly in any of the three Ridings and partly elsewhere should, as to the lands in the Riding, be registered there. See also EASEMENT.

Young Person. In the Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 Geo. 5, c. 12), this expression (s. 107) 'means a person who has attained the age of fourteen years and is under seventeen years.'

A young person within the Merchant Shipping (International Labour Conventions) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 42), is a person who is under the age of eighteen years (s. 5). See CHILDREN.

Yule [fr. jule, Dan.; gehul, geola, geol, Sax.], the times of Christmas and Lammas.

Z.

Zanzibar. A British Protectorate administered under the Colonial Office.

Zemindar [fr. two words signifying earth, land, and holder or keeper], land-keeper. An officer who, under the Mohammedan government, was charged with the financial superintendence of the lands of a district, the protection of the cultivators, and the realization of the government's share of its produce, either in money or kind.—Indian.

Zemindary, the office and jurisdiction of a zemindar.—Ibid.

Zenana, that part of a house which is set apart for women.—Ibid.

Zetetic [fr. ζητέω, Gk.], proceeding by inquiry.

Zigari, or Zingari, gypsies (q.v.), held to be rogues and vagabonds in the Middle Ages; from Zigi, now Circassia.

Zillah, side-part, district, division. A local division of a country having reference to personal jurisdiction.—Indian.

Zillah Court, local or divisional court.—Ibid.

Zoll-verein, a union of German States for uniformity of customs. It began in 1819 by the union of Schwarzburg-Sondershausen, until the unification of the then German Empire which included Prussia, Saxony, Bavaria, Wurtemberg, Baden, Hesse-Cassel, Brunswick, and Mecklenburg-Strelitz, and all intermediate principalities. This union was superseded by the formation of a Federal Council which took the place of the Federal Council of the Zoll-verein.
